The session will review during its five-day deliberations the progress made in the implementation of the bilateral obligations under the protocols signed between the two countries since 1977 and also examine development projects now underway and future priorities and make appropriate decisions.

The session will also adopt guidelines on the obligations of the two countries in the implementation of the scientific, economic and technical cooperation between the two countries and also explore new avenues of collaboration.

The talks on the Ethiopian side are led by Comrade Tekola Dejene, Firt Deputy Secretary-General of the NRDC-CPSC and member of the Central Committee of COPWE, Comrade, P. Ya Koshelev, deputy chairman of the USSR State Committee for Foreign Economic Relations and leader of the Soviet delegation heads the Soviet side.

At the opening ceremony yesterday morning, Comrade Tekola made note of the significance of the intergovernmental Ethio-USSR Commission in strengthening the cooperation between the two countries. He expressed satisfaction at the work accomplished to date.

Comrade Tekola stated that the third session was expected to bring much closer the two countries and further strengthen the existing cooperation and friendship ties. He expressed strong conviction that the session would live up to expectations in examining the progress made in bilateral cooperation projects and strengthening them still further, identifying new areas of cooperation and organizing plans for their execution.

He assured the Soviet side that the Ethiopian side has made all the necessary effort and preparation towards this end.

Comrade P. Ya Koshelev said on his part that the agreements reached during previous sessions by the commission were decisive in strengthening bilateral cooperation and relations. The third session should further strengthen the bonds of friendship and cooperation and said the Soviet delegation was keen and serious to ensure success in this regard.

Discussions were later conducted on the adoption of the talks agenda. Accordingly, six study groups representing both sides have begun work.

After stressing the laudable measures taken in this regard, he declared that the struggle to build a Revolutionary Army equipped with the necessary mental and physical aptitude, versatility in modern warfare and mastery in ideological knowledge is a source of greater power and strength.

Socialist Defence Force

Comrade Fikre-Selassie said the commissioning of the cadets of the Revolutionary Ethiopian Navy and Air Force had a special significance to all those who stand and struggle for the unity of Ethiopia and for the triumph of the broad masses. He stressed that the Revolutionary Army of Revolutionary Ethiopia is a socialist defence force which is at the forefront in the translation into deeds of the new socialist economic system. It is a strong and determined force which was born in struggle and has reaffirmed its popular and revolutionary character by being tested in war and whose invincibility from the attacks of anti-popular enemies has been ascertained, he added.

This Revolutionary Army is guided by socialist heroism which is prepared to make sacrifices for the revolution and the Motherland in times of war and which has taken up as its daily duty production and construction in times of peace, Comrade Fikre-Selassie declared. He pointed out, the importance of the creation of a strong defence force which guarantees the success of the revolution and underlined the necessity of equipping the Revolutionary Army with knowledge in the present military technology to defend the Motherland and the popular revolution from imperialist aggression.

Comrade Fikre-Selassie then gave relevant guidelines to the cadets reminding them to enhance their participation in the economic reconstruction, widen their ideological horizon and share their knowledge and experiences with other members of the Revolutionary Army.

Earlier, Comrade Commodore Tesfaye Berhanu, Commander of the Revolutionary Ethiopia Naval Force and COPWE Central Committee Alternate member, outlined the contributions of the Ethiopian Navy in the defence of the country's territory and the measures taken to upgrade the standard of the Navy both in ideological knowledge and in modern warfare.

Struggle Against Reactionaries

Comrade Commodore Tesfaye emphasised, the struggle waged by the Ethiopian Navy against secessionists and other reactionary forces in the defence of the unity and territorial integrity of the Motherland as well as its accomplishments in the political and economic fields.

MENGISTU ADDRESSES HOLETA MILITARY TRAINING SCHOOL GRADUATES

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 1 Nov 81 pp 1,4,5

[Text] Addis Ababa (ENA)--Comrade Chairman Mengistu Haile-Mariam, said yesterday that Socialist Ethiopia will through the sacrifices of its determined and militant revolutionary fighters continue to score victories and will never succumb to attacks from any quarter.

Comrade Chairman Mengistu Haile-Mariam, Chairman of the PMAC and of COPWE and Commander-in-Chief of the Revolutionary Army, made the statement at the commissioning of the 43rd batch of cadets from the Holeta Higher Combined Military Training School.

Comrade Chairman Mengistu declared that the boundaries of the Motherland had been and continues to be defended by the heroes of the previous epoch as well as by those of the present revolutionary generation. He noted that this will continue to be so in future and stressed that much is expected from Revolutionary Ethiopians to withstand through struggle the dark cloud of war hovering over the region and to safeguard and protect the revolution.

Present at the ceremony where Comrade Chairman Mengistu handed over certificates and special prizes to the graduating cadets were PMAC Standing Committee members and COPWE Executive Committee members, Ministers, COPWE Central Committee members, Force Commanders, Military Attaches of friendly countries and other invited guests.

On arrival to preside over the graduation ceremony, Comrade Chairman Mengistu was welcomed at the Holeta Higher Combined Military Training School by Comrade Brig. Gen. Tesfaye Gebre-Kidan, PMAC Standing Committee member, Minister of National Defence and COPWE Executive Committee member, Comrade Col. Gebreyes Wolde-Hanna, Head of the Main Political Department of the Revolutionary Army of Revolutionary Ethiopia and COPWE Central Committee member, Comrade Brig. Gen. Haile-Giorgis Habte-Mariam, Chief of Staff of the Armed Forces and COPWE Central Committee member, and senior military officers.

Children presented bouquets of flowers to Comrade Chairman Mengistu, and a Guard of Honour presented arms. Comrade Chairman Mengistu inspected the Guard of Honour and a 21-gun salvo was fired. The graduating class later marched past the Revolutionary Leader to the tune of martial music.

Renewing Commitment

Congratulating the cadets, Comrade Chairman Mengistu said that this was a time to renew the commitment for the struggle to ensure prosperity, equality, justice and democracy to the Ethiopian people and to safeguard the unity and territorial integrity of the motherland.

Comrade Chairman Mengistu recalled with highest reverence the heroic struggle put up by the members of the Revolutionary Army who have left behind the most glorious chapter in the history of Ethiopian Revolution.

Speaking about the progress of the on-going class struggle, the Chairman expressed satisfaction that all the sacrifices paid by the Ethiopian people have brought about fundamental changes in the country. He underlined the victories scored in the political, economic and social aspects.

Unlike in the past, the Chairman went on, directives, rules and regulations and development projects at present are all made in the interest of the people whose well-being in all fields is of major consideration.

Comrade Chairman Mengistu noted, however, that the political victory gained by the Ethiopian people needs to be supplemented with economic progress which the Revolution seeks to bring about.

In this connection, he referred to the timeliness of a longterm plan to coordinate the nation's manpower, material and financial resources and to control their judicious application for the betterment of the life of the working people.

Plan for Socialist Construction

Comrade Chairman Mengistu stated that the ten-year development plan he had announced during the seventh anniversary celebration of the Ethiopian Revolution last September will be finalized shortly. He said the plan would provide the material, technical and cultural bases needed for socialist construction to solve the prevailing economic and social problems currently rampant in the country.

He added that the ten year plan will be presented to mass organizations for discussion to ensure its relevance to the needs of the working people or to find out whether it is compatible with the basic needs of the people.

Comrade Chairman Mengistu said the plan envisages the eradication of hunger, illiteracy, diseases and unemployment from the country within 10 years. He observed that despite the resounding victories scored in the class struggle during the past seven years, the struggle in the economic construction proved to be more difficult due to the fact that there was a flaw in the establishment of a reliable system of management accounting and control. He declared that this weak point must be corrected immediately.

He noted that the recent proclamation providing for the establishment of control committees of the working people in the fight against corruption and wastefulness offers the people an opportunity to participate in the protection of their national resources.

He reiterated that the control committees are additional means to ensure the supremacy of the working class and that revolutionaries must be prepared to implement the aims of the control committees.

He stressed that COPWE--the Commission for Organizing the Party of the Working People of Ethiopia--was established in order to pave the way for a Marxist party as well as for speeding up the on-going socialist construction. He said that in light of COPWE's achievements within a short period since its establishment, it has laid firm foundations for the fulfilment of its mission, that of establishing the party of the working people.

Comrade Mengistu stressed that the Revolutionary Army continues to make sacrifices in the defence of the unity and territorial integrity of the Motherland as peace both in the north and eastern fronts is not totally secure and as imperialism continues to wage its last and frantic battles to arrest the freedom struggle of the broad masses.

Strengthening Defence Potential

Comrade Chairman Mengistu outlined the measures that have to be taken on the part of Socialist Ethiopia to come out victorious in this struggle. He emphasised the strengthening of the country's defence force as highly essential for the attainment of a glorious and victorious history.

Comrade Chairman Mengistu declared that the building of a revolutionary defence force which guarantees the freedom and independence of the country was one of the main achievements of the past seven years of revolutionary struggle. He explained the challenge of creating a developed socialist defence force and stated that special attention should be paid to the Revolutionary Liberation Army so that the revolution would always defend itself from all kinds of attacks and dangers.

Comrade Chairman Mengistu then gave specific directives to the graduating cadets stressing their role in the defence of the Motherland, the fulfilment of COPWE's mission, the strengthening of the Revolution and in general ensuring the progress of the country.

In conclusion, he thanked all those who contributed to the training of the cadets and wished them success in their future endeavours.

Speaking earlier, Comrade Col Eshetu Makonnen, the commandant of the Holeta Higher Combined Military Training School, recalled that the school had made immense contributions for the defence of the national unity and honour of the country.

Comrade Col. Eshetu outlined the exemplary role played by the school in the struggle against fascist occupation in the 1930s as well as in the fight against aggressors and expansionists in subsequent periods.

The Commandant of the training school stressed that the victories scored over anti-popular enemies through the participation of the socialist heroes of Revolutionary Ethiopia were a testimony to the high standard of development achieved by the school since the Revolution.

The Commandant spoke with satisfaction and pride of the services rendered by the graduates at the different war fronts before they joined the training school and declared that the education they had gathered at the school and the revolutionary discipline they had developed would enable them to prove their merit in the revolutionary struggle ahead.

Comrade Col Eshetu further enumerated the part played by the graduating cadets in the construction endeavour while undergoing training in the school. He mentioned the services they rendered by working alongside peasants producers' cooperatives and the work they undertook in afforestation and in the creation of public facilities.

He reaffirmed the dedication of the graduating cadets to live up to the responsibilities entrusted to them and thanked all those who contributed to their training.

Comrade Chairman Mengistu was given briefings on the sacrifices paid by the Black Lion heroes during the time of the Italian occupation and later inspected the heroes' memoria.

YOUTH ORGANIZATION STRENGTHENS TIES WITH GDR ORGANIZATION

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 30 Oct 81 p 2

[Article by Mulugetta Beyene: "REYA, FDJ—Strengthening Ties"]

[Text] "The Commission for Organizing the Party of the Working People of Ethiopia (COPWE) fully realizing that the struggle of the Ethiopian youth is part and parcel of the struggle of the international progressive youth movement, and has shown and will further show its unreserved efforts in helping the Revolutionary Ethiopia Youth Association (REYA) form and cement organizational bonds of unity and fraternity with all progressive and peace-loving youth organizations the world over."

This statement was made by Comrade Wondimu Robi, COPWE Central Committee Alternate member and head of the COPWE Youth Organizational Affairs while addressing an international youth seminar jointly organised by the World Federation of Democratic Youth, WFDY and REYA here last year.

The WFDY/REYA Seminar was held to chart out plans of action for a united struggle against imperialism, feudalism and bureaucratic capitalism. Ever since its formation REYA has made every effort to foster unity with youth organizations in other countries. The establishment of COPWE as well as the national youth association has created conducive conditions for the Ethiopian youth to strengthen their ties with progressive and democratic youth organizations abroad. The WFDY/REYA seminar facilitated the ever growing ties between Ethiopian youth and youth organizations in various parts of the world.

It goes without saying that the youth who are the energetic section of the society play active role in the popular struggle against the forces of imperialism and reaction. Moreover, they play still immense role in the struggle to build a strong national economy. Here in Ethiopia, the part being played by the youth in the development effort is quite encouraging. Ever since the eruption of the popular revolution, Ethiopian youth have been engaged in development-oriented activities. The establishment of the youth association at national level has, all the more, contributed in the national construction effort. Through the guidelines provided by REYA, the youth have played, and are still playing, significant role in the campaign against illiteracy as well as in community sanitation and health programmes. The success of the literacy drive in the past could well be attributed to the active and impressive participation of the youth.

In line with the principles of proletarian internationalism, democratic and progressive youth organizations the world over have given due support to the popular struggle in Ethiopia. In this connection, the Lambert Brigade Free German Youth (FDJ) has vividly demonstrated its support to the Ethiopian Revolution by way of actively taking part in national construction effort in our country along with the Ethiopian youth. The group has been here twice to take part in the harvest season's work campaign.

A 20-member team of the Werner Lambert Brigade of the FDJ of the German Democratic Republic (GDR) that arrived here last week is now engaged in a work campaign at various state farms in Arsi and Bale administrative regions. The group will join the peasants in this year's harvest and will at the same time render technical services.

By joining hands with its counterpart in Revolutionary Ethiopia, the Free German Youth Organization has clearly demonstrated its unflinching support to the struggle of the Ethiopian masses. The ever growing ties between REYA and FDJ have helped their members exchange experiences and strengthen their common front in the struggle against imperialism and the forces of reaction.

During their stay, members of the Free German Youth organization will be able to closely observe the progress of the Ethiopian Revolution and the role being played by our youth in multi-faceted development ventures.

The Literacy Campaign, which is presently in full swing throughout the country has received worldwide acclaim. It has been successfully waged with the unreserved and determined participation of the Ethiopian youth. The active participation of the youth in the development ventures including the literacy programme and production-oriented activities is indeed the result of the intensive effort made by the national youth organization to mobilize its members in the great task of nation building.

The Revolutionary Ethiopia Youth Association (REYA) has a lot to learn from its counterparts in fraternal socialist countries. The Free German Youth (FDJ) gives emphasis, among other things, to the development of socialism by way of actively taking part in the political, economic and social arenas of struggle. According to Panorama DDR "the specific initiatives launched by the GDR's youth organization in the economic field include support for youth brigades and youth projects, the young innovators' movement as well as the FDJ materials saving campaign. Moreover, about 1.1 million members of FDJ were involved in over 90,000 youth projects in industrial complexes, enterprises, agricultural production cooperatives (LPG's) and institutions over the course of 1980."

The presence these days of the Lambert Youth Brigade in Ethiopia will be of great value for the Ethiopian youth since this is a manifestation of proletarian internationalism, and as it helps our youth gather experiences from the FDJ comrades. In another dimension, their presence eventually helps REYA further strengthen its relations with the Free German Youth Organization. The example set by the FDJ comrades is worth emulating. The national youth association should also send its youth brigade to fraternal countries so that they may do their share in line with the principles of proletarian internationalism.

MAPPING AGENCY REPORT DISCUSSES CARTOGRAPHIC ACTIVITIES

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 29 Oct 81 pp 2,4

[Text] Until the outbreak of the Ethiopian popular revolution in February 1974, progress in the fields of Surveying and Mapping was hampered by the now defunct feudo-bourgeois system as it normally attached little or no importance to the investigation and exploration of the natural resources of the country. Under the circumstances the Ethiopian Mapping Agency (EMA) was unable to obtain any kind of policy support to strengthen its trained manpower and equipment and provide adequate cartographic services for the development of the natural resources of the country. The few major survey and mapping activities were therefore all carried out through foreign technical assistance programmes. The role of the Ethiopian Mapping Agency then was mainly confined to surveying the lands of the feudal lords and the members of the aristocracy. Soon after the Revolution, the Ethiopian Mapping Agency was reorganized by the Revolutionary Government in such a way that the benefits of cartographic services should be put to accelerate the overall socioeconomic development efforts of the country.

The victorious emergence of the Ethiopian Revolution from the confrontations by reactionary forces both from inside and outside the country, has enabled the government to consolidate the gains of the revolution by embarking upon an Economic Development Campaign aimed at improving the living standard of the people. This campaign started on a firm footing with the establishment of the National Revolutionary Development Campaign and Central Planning Supreme Council (NRDC & CPSC). In this context mapping was given the necessary emphasis as one of the basic activities essential for ensuring the achievement of planned socioeconomic development objectives. Consequently the Agency has further been reorganized under the NRDC & CPSC with full powers and responsibilities in matters pertaining to survey, mapping, aerial photography and related geographic activities.

According to the present organization the Agency is responsible for the following main tasks: Establishment, extension, and intensification of the National Geodetic Control Network and precise levelling: production of topographic maps of standard series as well as large scale plans for project design and engineering construction; preparation of thematic maps and Atlases and carrying out related Geographic Research; provision of survey, mapping, and aerial photographic services for public and private sectors; and coordination and regulation of survey, mapping and aerial photographic activities which are undertaken in the country.

Geodetic Surveys

The land mass of Ethiopia covers an area of over 1.2 million square kilometres intersected by the Rift Valley in the central north-southerly zone and characterized by high rugged mountains and gorges in the west and arid lowland savannahs in the east. This situations make control survey work difficult and expensive. The geodetic survey network of the country, therefore, is not yet in an advanced stage.

During the period 1972-1977 a network of geodetic control points was established in areas selected for 1:50,000 scale topographic mapping. These are first, second and third order control points spread over an area of 150,000 square kilometres and interconnected with the Blue Nile Basin Network the basic control survey in Ethiopia--which was extended from the 30th Meridian of Arc in the Sudan. The basic control stations are normally 30 to 50 km apart. The control network extension is intensified to the order of 10 to 15 km between stations so that they are amenable to 1:50,000 scale mapping.

Extension and intensification of ground control points are being carried out by the Agency in other areas for large scale mapping. Computer generated control points have also been very useful in the compilation of derived maps required for economic feasibility studies. In addition to topographical mapping the national survey control network data are also widely used in determining accurate geographical locations and elevations for irrigation, hydroelectric and other engineering surveys. Nevertheless, since some of these survey stations are destroyed by the local people, it has been a considerable task for the Agency to reestablish them. Now the Agency is trying to introduce measure of preserving survey stations by making arrangements with peasant associations.

With the exception of a few organizations like the Ethiopian Roads Authority and the Water Resources Department, most of the Ministries and Agencies in Ethiopia give the survey component of their development projects to EMA usually on a contract basis. The activities carried out under this context include cadastral surveying of settlement areas, state farms, livestock and range land development sites, irrigation and other engineering surveys. It has been the experience of the Agency that the request for such tasks is rapidly growing especially now that the importance of survey data is thoroughly recognized by most development organizations.

Ethiopia is almost completely covered by 1:250,000 scale series of topographic maps. The demand for this map is quite substantial, there is, therefore, a continual revision and printing programme. Although these maps require a lot of revision and updating work especially with respect to place names it has not been possible to do this in full swing because of other priority workload. Originally these maps were compiled in six colours and with layer tints, but they are now being printed in four colours only for speeding up production and reducing costs.

The 1:50,000 maps cover an area of high agricultural, geothermal, hydroelectrical, forest, mineral and water resources potential. The demand for these maps by a variety of government agencies and other international organizations concerned with development programmes in Ethiopia is very high.

A number of small scale maps ranging from 1:50,000 to 1:2,000,000 scale are available at the Agency. Attempts are being made to keep these maps up-to-date. One such attempt is the printing in colours of the 1:2,000,000 map which was completed in 1978. Although the Agency realizes the need for map revision programmes, again this could not be fully implemented because of other priorities.

The request for large scale mapping (scales 1:2,000--1:5,000) by development organizations for irrigation, hydroelectric power site, agricultural and other similar projects is also increasing. During this reporting period EMA completed a number of small mapping projects requiring the planning and execution of all production phases including strip triangulation using the Hewlett Packard 9821 a desk top computer. Furthermore, large scale maps for 50 towns covering a total area of 160,000 hectars have been compiled for town planning purposes by municipalities. All the ground control points required for each photogrammetic model and the aerial photography were provided by the ministry of Urban Development and Housing. The reason for the intensive ground survey work is because the control points are in any case necessary for subsequent cadastral surveying. The workload under this category was so high that it could not have been handled by the available photogrammetic equipment without working in two shifts.

Special Maps

A large number of multi-colour geological and hydro-geological maps were printed for the Ministry of Mines. The base used for this purpose was the 1:250,000 scale topographical map and all the relevant information was supplied by the Ministry. Several other special maps of a similar nature and charts were printed on request by a variety of users.

Ethiopia is completely covered by 1:50,000 scale wide angle aerial photographs flown in conjunction with the 1:250,000 scale mapping project. These photographs are fairly old taken between the period 1963-1967. However, they are still extensively used for mapping: resource studies and other photo interpretation purposes. In 1971-72 a new wide angle photography at the scale of 1:50,000 was specified for the EMA-DOS 1:50,000 joint mapping project. The reason for deciding to fly new photography was because in the photographs some natural and man-made features would not have relevance and new features which might have occurred in the course of time would not appear.

A larger scale photography of 1:20,000 covering most of the central parts of the country was flown for the Ethiopian Roads Authority in 1957. These photographs, in addition to the route corridor surveys, the primary purpose for which they were intended are also being used for other large scale mapping photo-interpretation and a number of other purposes.

Because in Ethiopia the facilities for taking small scale aerial photography do not exist, all of the above photographs were flown by foreign contracting firms. The topography of the country varies between 0-4553 metres and to get a small scale aerial photography of the order 1:50,000, a high performance aircraft with a ceiling of about 12,000 metres will be required. For sometime, therefore, such photographs will have to be supplied by foreign companies.

The Ethiopian Airforce has been very helpful in providing large scale photographs (1:5,000-1:15,000). However, despite the high level of co-operation shown by the Airforce the demand for aerial photographs could not be fully met. Consequently, in order to cope with the situation the government is planning to establish a local aerial survey service. To this effect arrangements are being made for the purchase of a survey camera and training of the air survey crew. The task of EMA in this context will then be to co-ordinate all the national requirements for aerial photographs and to accomplish the film processing and documentation of the photographs.

Thematic Mapping

Although topographic mapping is the priority area, the need for general thematic maps and subsequent preparation of a National Atlas cannot be overlooked because here again the demand for such maps by a variety of development planners and educators is very high. Thematic maps which are used for natural resources inventory and investigation are being prepared and compiled as components of the National Atlas of Ethiopia, which has just been completed. In conjunction with the National Atlas, it is also intended to compile Atlases of Administrative Regions of the country at different levels depending on the availability of information. Previously, pilot maps of the Arsi Administrative Region were produced and the result of this exercise has been encouraging.

The staff of the Survey Division consists of two professional and 12 semi-professional surveys and 58 survey technicians who received practical training in survey techniques during their long service in the Agency. It is clear that the Division does not yet have all the necessary staff. The main reason for the critical shortage of trained manpower in this field is because none of the higher educational institutions in the country give courses in surveying. In 1974 a joint programme for the training of surveyors at a semi-professional level was initiated by the Ethiopian Mapping Agency and the Addis Ababa University. Unfortunately this programme was discontinued in 1978 after the first batch of 13 surveyors graduated mainly because there were not enough survey teachers. The Agency is now seriously considering the training at university level of some surveyors through fellowships, and to this effect preparations are already underway.

Survey Equipment

Almost the whole range of survey equipment necessary for field operation are available in the Agency. These include sixteen T2 theodolites, four T3 theodolites, six MRA3 tellurometres, four N12 first order levels, three GK23 levels and a number of other survey accessories and a reasonable set of support facilities.

The Mapping Division of EMA is composed of the Air Photo Laboratory, Photogrammetory, Cartography and the Reproduction Sections. Altogether there are 94 employees in this Division. Most of the technicians have undergone in-service training on production work conducted by carrying out all the practical work in their respective sections. Further training opportunities are given to competent employees to study abroad through scholarship grants obtained from friendly countries to qualify as technicians.

Whereas the standard of training of these technicians could be rated as pretty adequate, it is clear that a more serious effort should be made to train more technicians to improve the present insufficient number. Otherwise it is hardly possible to give all the required cartographic services with the existing number of trained technicians.

The Mapping Division compared with the Survey Division is in similar position as far as trained staff at professional level is concerned. With a view to alleviating this constraint the EMA have approached the UNDP for assistance in the training of three surveyors, one photogrammetrist, one cartographer all at university level and two equipment service technicians and one data processing expert. It is hoped that EMA's request would be met favourably. If so it would be a major step taken towards strengthening the Agency particularly in those areas of project planning and management.

Ethiopia is completely covered by a 1:250,000 scale topograhic maps. Because most of the control stations for these maps were obtained by air borne methods there are not enough stations established on the ground. It is therefore clear that a great deal of geodetic survey work is outstanding.

The other areas where sufficient progress is noted is the research work on the geography of the country, the preparation of photo mosaics, the land use mapping, the cadastral and engineering surveying carried out upon request by a number of the country's development organizations.

It has been emphasized that shortage of trained manpower is the major constraint confronting the Agency, steps are therefore being taken by the Agency in the training at all levels of its staff so that it could carry out independently the operation, planning and management of larger mapping projects.

The Ethiopian Mapping Agency believes that the Survey and Mapping activities carried out and the services rendered so far are quite satisfactory. Nevertheless the Agency also realizes that a much further effort is necessary in order to cope up with the increasing demands for survey and mapping services which are particularly generated with the launching of the National Revolutionary Economic Development Campaign.

SEMINAR REVIEWING PRODUCTION OF OIL SEEDS, PULSES

[Text] A two-day seminar for assessing the achievements of the 1973 Ethiopian calendar year and analysing future undertakings opened at the assembly hall of the Ethiopian Oil Seeds and Pulses Export Corporation yesterday. The seminar which is being attended by thirty department heads drawn from the head office and the regional branch offices, was declared open by Comrade Shiferaw Bekele, General Manager of the Corporation.

During the two-days long session, the seminar participants will deliberate upon such subjects as plans and achievements, finance, administration, documentation and reporting, oil seeds and pulses purchasing and export capabilities.

The seminar was necessitated because of the fact that oil seeds and pulses come next to coffee and skins and hides in securing foreign currency earnings for the country and hence require production both in bulk and quality. The seminar, therefore, is believed to come up with ways and means that would facilitate more production of oil seeds and pulses both for meeting the local demand and foreign market. It was learned that the seminar will play a major role in seeking solutions to certain problems encountered during the Ethiopian calendar year of 1973 while at the same time working out ways of strengthening undertakings that brought good results last year.

Among the oil seeds for export are sesame, groundnuts and soyabeans while pulses include beans, lentils and harricot beans. Because of the high local demand for lentils, it has not been possible, so far, to export much.

Tremendous Potential

Ethiopian peasants cultivate peas and beans on the same plot of land with the notion that peas, being legumes, would fertilize the land. In reality, however, the size of the beans has become as small as that of the peas. In order to alleviate this situation and produce quality beans and peas, the Corporation is engaged in the task of instructing peasants to cultivate them separately, the General Manager disclosed. Despite the fact that there is a tremendous potential for the marketing of oil seeds and pulses, the essential thing is for peasants to bring their produce to the market on time. To this end, the General Manager went on, the cooperation of the National Revolutionary Development Campaign (NRDC) and regional administrators is of paramount importance.

Comrade Shiferaw further disclosed that the Corporation has stations in Dessie, Dire Dawa, Nazareth and Addis Ababa for cleaning and packing oil seeds and pulses. Other than these, there are branches in Gondar, Dejen, Debre Berhan, Humera, Shire and Metema. The construction of stores accommodating from six thousand to seven thousand tons of oil seeds and pulses is nearing completion in Dessie, Dire Dawa, Nazareth and Addis Ababa, he concluded.

ROLE OF OIL SEEDS IN EARNING OF FOREIGN EXCHANGE NOTED

Addis Ababa THE ETHIOPIAN HERALD in English 30 Oct 81 pp 1, 5

[Text] Addis Ababa (ENA)--Oil seeds and oil products which have considerable demand in the international market, were identified in a report submitted to a seminar held at the Ethiopian Chamber of Commerce Wednesday as promising earnings of foreign exchange.

The day-long seminar was convened to assess foreign trade and the role of oil seeds and oil products as export commodities. A report read to the gathering pointed out that although these commodities have great demand in the international market, the production at home was not adequate so as to hit the plan target.

It was projected that 50,000 tons of pulses would be exported during the current fiscal year for 35.5 million Birr in foreign currency. So far, 46,028 tons of the products were exported earning 36.2 million Birr. The Ethiopian Export Corporation of Oil, Grain and Pulses had earned 18.9 million Birr by exporting 27,298 tons of pulses.

According to the report the Corporation had met its quota by 172 per cent in as far as income is concerned. Performance this year shows 160 and 94 per cents more in quantity and income respectively as compared to the previous quota.

In this connection, it was urged in the report that production cadres should heighten the awareness of the peasantry on the need for improved and more farm production and the application of better agricultural methods.

Describing the oil seeds market, the report disclosed that there is a plan to export 25,000 tons of oil seeds this year and that 25.3 million Birr was secured up to now from the export of 14,497 tons of the commodity which by far exceed last year's export income.

The report further pointed out that 94 per cent of the hard currency from oil seeds was obtained from the export of sesame and declared that the demand for oil seeds is rising in the world market.

It was reported that the Ethiopian Oil Seeds and Pulses Export Corporation has hit its target by producing its quota of 11,980 tons. Meanwhile over 8.1 million Birr was obtained so far from the export of 23,236 tons of byproducts from the processing of oil seeds. The report also urged peasants to focus their attention on boosting the production of oil seeds.

COMMENTS ON LIMANN'S POLITICAL DISMISSALS, STATEMENTS

Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 13 Oct 81 p 3

[Article by Elizabeth Ohene]

[Excerpts]

WHAT a week! Just the kind of thing the doctor ordered for newsmen all over the world and for Ghanaian journalists, it was just the kind of week in which they must have wished that they had never heard of newsprint problems nor obsolete machinery.

Easily the most earth shattering occurence was the assassination of Egyptian President Anwar Sadat as he reviewed a military parade of his own troops. For a man who literally went into the lion's den and came out unscathed — which is what his historic trip to Jerusalem was — it was most ironic that he should be gunned down inside the 'safety' of his own home, virtually.

Over in Ghana, thank God, we have been spared the agony of assassinations but if it hadn't been for the events in Cairo, the events in Accra would have attracted headlines world wide.

Dr Ekow Daniels, the eminent lawyer, one time dean of the Faculty of Law, University of Ghana and reputed to be an astute politician obviously lost his bearings somewhere along the line and if one were to quote the words of the Evening News of the Nkrumah regime, one would have to say that Dr Daniels has fallen from grace to grass and from grass to mud!

There he was being praised all round Accra for having the guts to tell President Limann that he could take his job thank you and the next thing anybody knew, he had given Dr Limann the opportunity to fire him. It appears his entire credibility and political future all went down the drain at the same time.

One cannot help but wonder where the famed political astuteness of Dr Daniels went to; I could have forgiven him for everything else he did or said except for that non-press conference he held to announce that he hadn't sent any letter of resignation to the President. "I remain a committed member of the People's National Party" Dr Daniels said and would not take any questions.

Who had ever questioned his membership or commitment to the ruling party, the only point in question was whether he was or had ever been a committed member of the Limann Cabinet. That was the question and he provided no answers.

As things turned out, just as he must have considered his movement to the Education Ministry as leaving him no alternative but to resign, his statement left the President also no alternative but to sack him.

This has been one of the few times in the presidential career of Dr Limann when he had put his finger on the nerve centre of things. He scored full marks for his handling of the entire messy affair, for eminent lawyer or not, the traits that Dr Daniels exhibited in the reshuffle tango showed him as somebody that anybody can do without in his cabinet.

It is difficult to tell whether it was this incident that sparked it off or the constant criticisms of non-action on his part, but President Limann suddenly launched off a spate of retirements/sackings. He might have scored marks for the Ekow Daniels affair but having kept quiet about why he has retired the Inspector General of Police, whatever credits he had gathered have been wiped off by the Kyei affair.

Since no reasons were assigned for the retirement of the 41-year-old IGP nobody can blame us all for concluding that it was the IGP's speech about the Police not being lawmakers that led to his sack.

In that case the question one ought to ask is since when has speaking the truth constituted an offence under the Third Republican Constitution? What alarms me in the entire incident is the fact that those who are cynical about constitutional rule must surely be laughing all the way to their revolutionary platforms.

One had naively thought that those constitutional provisions protecting the holding of certain positions were indeed safeguards: how was one to know that a determined politician in power will always find a way. I did not imagine that the Police Council or the Armed Forces Council or whatever Council would be as fast in their recommendations as it takes John Hammond to read the 1 o'clock news.

Then the boss of State Gold Mining Corporation too gets retired and again no reasons are given, leaving room for a lot of speculation. Is it too much to expect that when public officials are sacked the reasons are given to us the public? We know that our leaders know what is good for us but since we put them in these positions, we have a right to know why these actions are taken.

Supposing that the boss of the gold mines or the IGP had abused their positions, we have a right to be told, at least, for the simple reason that when they are walking past our homes or they come to join queues with us, the conversation won't drop and children won't point at them!

While people were being fired and the President was urging that new blood be infused into the cocoa industry, Mr Mumuni Bawumia gets, of all things, a renewal of the President's confidence in his administration as boss of the Cocoa Marketing Board.

Obviously when the President was talking about new blood in the industry, he meant the farmers, the people who make the money and not the CMB, the people who spend the cocoa money!

Or could it be that Dr Gyamfi, the only one of the interim triumvirate not to have been reappointed, it was that he had the bad blood and was infecting the industry? In that case we should be seeing great things soon in the cocoa industry. How that can be, I don't know for in the two years Bawumia's administration, it has been the same age old things in Cocoa House. The big news that ever came from there was about those who worked in Cocoa House and not about the farmers.

He has not, shown in the past two years any signs that he had the answers to the problems that have plagued the industry and his reappointment or is it confirmation must have been on the strength of plans he has made known to the President and not on the strength of anything he has done so far.

EDITORIAL DISAGREES WITH GOVERNMENT'S COMPLACENCY

Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 19 Oct 81 p 2

[Editorial: "Thinking Food Indeed"]

[Excerpts]

WE are not very sure that most people will accept to be seeing through the eyes of Vice-President de Graft Johnson in admitting that the short-term (2-year) Agricultural Crash Programme launched by the Limann Administration when it came into office "has achieved significant results".

We would wish that this was possible. For most of us, however, the situation is still grave indeed as food shortage persists and food prices keep rising at incredible rates. As far as the consumer is concerned, the only indicator of success in a programme like this is the availability of food on the market which, at least, shows an improvement over the previous situation if not an over-abundant supply which eventually reduces prices.

Although we are right in the middle of the harvesting season, the food situation cannot, by any stretch of the imagination, be described as being the same as it was a year ago. Prospects, for the future may be good for "a good yield" sometime. But right now the situation is still acute and a lot more needs to be done to improve the situation. The best so far has not been good enough to change the situation.

We must admit that the government deserves commendation for the zeal with which it attempted to tackle the problem and the subsequent importation of agricultural inputs and equipment notably fertilizers, tractors, insecticides, harvesters and cutlasses. We cannot, however admit or agree that there has been "a judicious use" of these scarce resources.

If there are any signs of abundance of food in the growing areas, the objective of agriculture is not only to grow but to grow and distribute which means that food must reach the consuming areas. This however is not the case certainly not with the condition of roads that we have in this country.

We think it is fair to admit, on a "World Food Day" that Ghana has not been able to produce enough of its own food requirement let alone assist poorer nations and that more efforts need to be committed into making increased food production a reality.

We wish to draw attention to the fact that the "positive" response to the call to go back to the land, which ostensibly has led people "to think food" is largely an intra-sector shift of scarce resources and a threat to the foreign exchange earning potential of this country. Scarce cocoa farmers have shifted into food farming for reasons of obvious price disincentives and those who are thinking food are also contemplating cutting down cocoa trees to grow food.

SUCCESS OF SOCIALISM VIEWED AS FAR-OFF

Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 22 Oct 81 p 3

[Article by Alhassan Abdulai]

[Text] The first Progressive Forum which was held on October 3 at the Labone Secondary School in Accra can be said to be a success. Almost all the known progressive groupings attended.

Delegations of the African Youth Command, the Kwame Nkrumah Revolutionary Guard, the Revolutionary League, the New Democratic Movement etc, exhibited (in songs and outfits) the glimpse of the revolutionary elements of the First Republic.

They sang songs in praise of Osagyefo [word illegible] Kwame Nkrumah and ended it all with the newly adopted song of the progressives: "We shall overcome."

When Mr Osei Poku, editor of the PEOPLES EVENING NEWS and one of the conveners of the Forum mounted the rostrum, he explained that the purpose for the gathering was to bring together all the progressive groupings to discuss how best they could save Ghana.

He said: "There is no doubt that many attempts have been made in the past to bring to a united fold, all positive thinking Ghanaians as well as other progressive organisations as we have them in this auditorium today, but the desired aim has not been achieved yet. It is a fact that all those moves were made with genuine intentions, but they did not achieve the desired goal merely because each group was suspicious of other group's intentions."

Alhaji Abdul Mumuni Issifu, Secretary-General of the Trades Union Congress, who also spoke at the Forum, re-echoed Osei Poku's anxiety and advised all progressive Forces to sink their differences, to come together to salvage the economy. However, the Secretary-general exhorted the progressives to desist from amassing wealth at the expense of the masses.

Speaking on the theme: "What benefits could workers derive from a socialist planned economy and that of a capitalist free market economy," Alhaji Issifu said: "If we, the advocates of socialism, genuinely pursue the socialist course and do not pervert the system, and resort to the acquisition of personal wealth and pleasure at the expense of the masses, then the workers and farmers and indeed all the working people of the country would be proud owners of the means of production, distribution and exchange and thereby ensure for themselves constant rising of living standards, harmoniously developed culture and science, respect for labour, love for peace, mutual respect and concern for the common good and natural interest the determination of which the workers must fully and genuinely participate."

From the speeches delivered by various personalities including Comrade Johnny Hanson, Comrade Kojo Tsikata, retired captain of the Ghana Army and a host of others, it was evident that socialism has caught on well with the gathering and they would have wished to form a formidable force to get the Limann Administration to adopt Nkrumahism to reverse the economic trends in the country today.

But it is the view of the writer that before the socialists can realise their dream, they will require more than just coming together to convince the present administration to adopt socialism and or amend the Constitution to suit their purposes.

This is because, even if they nominate an ardent socialist to become president in the 1983 elections, the "socialist president" would have to put up with capitalist economic activities for a long time to come.

Ever since the reversal of the "country's forward march into socialism" in 1966, a lot of things have happened that would make rapid reintroduction of socialism into the nation very difficult.

Most of the state firms which were sold to private firms are still in private hands. Even though, there are a few ardent socialists in the country, the country now breeds a teeming number of capitalist oriented-children.

These are children who are trained mostly in expensive private preparatory schools and taught to live expensive lives.

Even the so-called socialist trained boys find it difficult to remain pinned to socialism due to the economic situation that has almost dragged almost everybody into "business."

As a result of this state of affairs, the progressive forces should consider the socialisation of the country within the context of the present circumstances.

However, if the progressive forces wish to succeed in their endeavour to get the country to adopt socialism, they should agree on the brand of socialism to adopt and to introduce this to the society gradually without resorting to coercive means. Otherwise, any attempt to force socialism down the throat of Ghanaians will not succeed.

THE Union Bank of Switzerland (UBS) has agreed to give Ghana a loan of 25 million dollars to support the country in its balance of payments problems.

The UBS, a correspondent bank of the Bank of Ghana, is still holding further discussions with the Governor of the Bank of Ghana, Mr Alex Ashiagbor, in Switzerland, to work out the modalities.

This was announced by President Hilla Limann when he met newsmen on his arrival at the Kotoka International Airport from a tour of India and Switzerland.

The President said he and his entourage met Swiss bankers and businessmen and discussed assistance to the country in various economic fields.

Dr Limann told the newsmen that he also negotiated for the supply of large quantities of drugs for the country's hospitals.

The President said while in India, a number of agreements were concluded in the fields of agriculture, rural industries and mining.

He indicated that India had agreed to assist the country in these fields by way of technical know-how and equipment.

India, he said, also expressed willingness to participate in the Bui Dam Project in the Brong-Ahafo Region which his government had undertaken to reactivate to provide electricity for the northern sector of the country.

Dr Limann told the newsmen that Indians would also train Ghanaians in diamond polishing.

The President said he and his entourage were happy to visit the Tata Assembly Plant in India and discussed at length the possibility of setting up local factories to produce spare parts for the buses.

BRITAIN GRANTS WATER-TREATMENT, OTHER ASSISTANCE

Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 21 Oct 81 pp 1, 5

[Article by Isaac Asante]

[Text] The British Government has approved three million pounds sterling for the provision of equipment to improve the water treatment system at Owabi and Barekese, in the Ashanti Region.

This was disclosed by Mr James Mellon, British High Commissioner in Ghana, during a courtesy call on the Ashanti Regional Minister, Mr K. Antwi-Nimoh at the Regional Administration in Kumasi yesterday.

Mr Mellon said apart from the three million pounds sterling his government had also provided materials for the construction of a school block for the people of Wonoo, a village in the Ashatn Region.

Furthermore the British Government had provided 200,000 pounds sterling worth of equipment as a grant to the medical school of the University of Science and Technology (UST) in Kumasi.

Mr Mellon stated that he was in Kumasi to donate equipment from the British Government to the Department of Dispensing Technicians of the Kumasi Polytechnic and the Audio Visual Department of the Advanced Technical Teachers' Training College also in Kumasi.

"These," Mr Mellon pointed out, "indicate the interest my government has in the general welfare of the country."

In his reply, Mr Antwi-Nimoh expressed the Ghana Government's gratitude to Mr Mellon and the British Government for the assistance so far received.

The Regional Minister, however, appealed to the British Government to provide the Ashanti Regional Administration with road building equipment either as a long term loan or as a grant to enable his administration to rehabilitate most of the roads in the region.

He mentioned road rehabilitation and agriculture as his administration's priorities and appealed for the necessary assistance. Mr Antwi-Nimoh also appealed through the High Commissioner to the British Government to invest in the country's cocoa industry. Present were Mr C.Y. Boateng, Deputy Ashanti Regional Minister and Mr I.B. Ashun, Regional Administrative Officer.

COOPERATION URGED ON ARMY-CMB COCOA EVACUATION

[Editorial: "The C.M.B. Cocoa Evacuation Exercise"]

[Text] "COCOA is the life blood of this country" is now a hackneyed statement which is slowly losing its meaning but the fact still remains that that commodity still provides a substantial portion of our foreign exchange earnings every year.

The problems which beset the cocoa industry are as complex as they come and, over the years, observers of the industry could not help but conclude that given the expertise at our disposal and the enormous amount of money that an organisation like the Cocoa Marketing Board (CMB) charged with the administration of the industry oversees, there is absolutely no reason why the goose that lays the golden egg should be seen to be, as it were, wickedly being strangled to death.

The 'Graphic'; is particularly worried about the perennial problem of cocoa being locked up in the hinterland where this vital cash crop is grown. Our anxiety over this state of affairs is aggravated by the realization that smuggling of crop across the borders is facilitated when the product is left out there for too long, not forgetting the possible deterioration which may set in and affect its quality.

Why the CMB cannot haul the cocoa to the coast for onward shipment or proper storage has been discussed so many times to merit repetition here but concerned citizens are bound to get worried over the apparent disagreement between the CMB and the Ghana Armed Forces over the evacuation exercise and the subsequent decision of the latter to withdraw.

According to a G.B.C. report over the week-end, as at October 8, about 70,000 tons of cocoa had been evacuated by the Ghana Armed Forces which leaves about 82,500 tons to be lifted. This is quite serious considering the fact that it was precisely the inability of the existing CMB machinery to evacuate the cocoa which led to the Armed Forces stepping in to alleviate the situation.

It is our view that the enormity of the country's transportation mess, especially in the haulage sector due to the scarcity of inputs and deterioration in the physical infrastructure leading to almost a labyrinthine search for cocoa locked up in the growing areas, suggests that the organisations which have the facilities to help in this exercise be allowed to do so without unnecessary impediments put in their way.

Accusations and counter-accusations, such as we have witnessed between the CMB and the Ghana Armed Forces, do nobody any good because as far as the Ghanaian public is concerned, the only objective of the whole exercise is to bring the cocoa out of the bush. Anything short of that would be considered a national disaster.

If the CMB had been able to discharge its duty effectively in this direction, the Army would not have been brought in in the first place. The two institutions should come together to work out ways and means of getting this one important job done once and for all.

Later, a machinery can be set up to help accelerate the evacuation of cocoa whenever there are indications that a bottle-neck has appeared in the haulage system. In this regard 'co-operation' should be the only operative word.

PARTY CONGRESS OPENS IN BISSAU

Radicalization Reported

AB111758 Paris AFP in French 1457 GMT 11 Nov 81

[Text] Bissau, 11 Nov (AFP)--The tendency at the Congress of the African Independence Party of Guinea-Bissau and Cape Verde [PAIGC] which is being held in Bissau, is toward radicalization.

Several delegates ahve called for the strengthening of Guinea-Bissau's relations with socialist countries and their vanguard parties as well as with progressive organizations of capitalist parties.

These delegates blamed the former leadership of the PAIGC, which was in office before the overthrow of former President Luiz Cabral on 14 November 1980, for not sufficiently thanking the socialist countries for the aid they gave to the PAIGC during its liberation war, Mr Mario Cabral, minister of education and spokesman of the congress, who was reporting on the general debate held behind closed doors, told reporters.

Some delegates also demanded that the aspirations of national concord should be clearly spelled out. This national concord was proclaimed by the revolutionary council which has been performing the duties of the head of state and the national assembly since 14 November 1980.

When that principle of national concord was announced, several representatives of organizations of exiles such as the front for the struggle for Guinea-Bissau independence, fling, expressed a desire to return home to get involved in the management of the country's affairs. Those organizations, rejecting any form of union between Guinea-Bissau and Cape Verde, had opposed the PAIGC which wanted to construct progressive, organic unity. The representatives of the organizations were also the champions of economic liberalism.

When the relations between both countries deteriorated after 14 November 1980, and an African Independent Party for Cape Verde was established in PRAIA, the fling and other related movements sent delegates to Bissau. Several top-level officials of these organizations have returned to Bissau. These facts stirred up reactions at the PAIGC congress.

A delegate said that any citizen of Guinea-Bissau can individually return home to contribute his efforts to his country. But it must be clear that the PAIGC must remain the only force holding political control in the country. Another delegate to the congress [word indistinct] by Mario Cabral, was even more precise: We uphold national concord at the state and not at the party level, he said.

[Text] Bissau, 11 Nov (AFP)--Maj Pedro Ramos, delegate of the people's revolutionary armed forces [FARP], came to assure the African Independence Party of Guinea-Bissau and Cape Verde [PAIGC] of the FARP's allegiance at the party's congress which began in Bissau last Sunday.

This is the first PAIGC congress since the 14 November 1980 coup d'etat which overthrew President Luis Cabral, and also since Cape Verde decided to form its own party, the African Independence Party of Cape Verde [PAICV]. Brigadier General Vieira stated that the political training of the FARP will be increased, while the basic committees of the PAIGC in the armed forces have been broadened. For the first time this year, a national conference of the FARP took place and their delegates represent 17.2 percent of the members of the PAIGC congress.

[Text] Bissau, 13 Nov (AFP)--The congress of the African Independence Party of Guinea-Bissau and Cape Verde, PAIGC, which cintinues its deliberations in Camera in Bissau, has decided not to create the post of deputy security general, it is indicated by Mario Cabral, the minister of education and spokesman of the congress.

An order of precedence will exist within the major organs that the congress has to create and elect, which will be called the Central Committee and the Political Bureau. Moreover, none of the members of these organs will have any clear-cut pre-eminence over the others, with the exception of the secretary general.

Observers believe that the secretary general will be Gen Joao Bernardo Vieira, a personality from the war of independence and president of the revolutionary council which toppled President Luiz Cabral in November of last year.

If the post of deputy secretary general had been retained, it would have gone to victor Saude Maria, vice president of the revolutionary council and minister of foreign affairs, observers stress. Mario Cabral has announced that the PAIGC congress has decided to formally exclude Mr Pereira and Mr Cabral from the party's ranks. Evidently these exclusions have only a symbolic character since they only confirm a fact. But then, by shutting out the former leaders before nominating new ones, the Bissau congressmen want to imply that in their own view the former legitimate PAIGC still continues to exist not in Praia, but rather in Bissau.

PAST FAILURE SHOWS LESSON TO BE LEARNED IN CHAD

AB130648 Abidjan Franternite Hebdo in French 13 Nov 81

[Editorial: "A Challenge"]

[Text] One is at a loss as to the reasons why Libya asked its troops to leave Ndjamena in less than 3 days and Chadian territory in less than a week. Was Colonel al-Qadhdhafi irritated by the fact that President Goukouni had asserted in Paris a few days earlier that he had asked the Libyans to leave his country immediately?

But is it not a sign of disrespect for a head of state for us to suppose for one instant that he would act in precipitation following a change in humor?

This being said, the facts are there. The Libyans, who entered Chad at the request of President Goukouni, chased out Hissein Habre and ended the civil war, that is the suffering of thousands of Chadians, many of whom had had to go into exile to flee the fighting thus losing everything and being separated from their homes.

But it is undeniable that the presence of the Libyans quickly became overbearing for the Chadians, and the majority wished for their departure. This establishment of facts does not in any way imply a judgment on this presence neither does it imply a judgment of the possible political afterthoughts of the Libyan and Chadian leaders.

It simply shows that men everywhere are jealous of their independence, and of their personalities so that one cannot impose on them someone they have not chosen and adopted willingly. The Libyans, therefore, left at a time when the Franco-African summit in Paris was discussing the sending to Chad of an inter-African peace-keeping force and even before this force had been set up France, a friendly power, had promised to finance it.

The Libyan initiative is a challenge, whether deliberate or not, which is being thrown to the African heads of state. These heads must meet it in the best way possible.

At the height of the Chadian civil war a similar force was set up and it was to have comprised Benin, Guinea and Congo, but there was so much beating about the bush that it never materialized. President Goukouni therefore had to approach his neighbor, also an OAU member country, who intervened successfully.

Some will think that this first experience does not in principle augur well for the second, but others, like us, think that the African heads of state can learn their lesson from this first failure and prevent it from repeating itself.

"I am African and I am familiar with everything that is African," says President Felix Houphouet-Boigny. This is the time for all African leaders to recall this beautiful thought. Our independence is one and indivisible, as is Africa. We cannot claim to be independent in our own states and leave a brother country to decay and not consider its problems as our own by leaving it at the mercy of any country powerful enough to evercome it.

The ideals of African unity recommend another way of behavior, that of responsibility and solidarity. We are conforming to this behavior by creating this inter-African peace-keeping force for Chad. That country has suffered long enough so it merits such aid no matter how expensive it is to provide it.

HYDROELECTRIC RESOURCES DEVELOPED DESPITE OIL PROSPECTS

Paris EUROPE OUTREMER in French No 617 Jun 81 pp 26-27

[Excerpts] By a decree of 8 July 1981, the Ivory Coast is going to acquire in the next few years a sixth hydroelectric dam, that of Soubre, following Ayame I and II, Kossu, Taabo, and Buyo. The development of the country requires this new work, which is integrated into a comprehensive plan drawn up by Ivory Coast Electric Power (EECI) and which aims at guaranteeing by the year 2000 power production "necessary both for the vast industrialization of the country and for the usual indispensable domestic and public uses," thanks to a series of hydroelectric installations.

Soubre: Half of the Ivorian Potential

This new dam is located 80 kilometers downstream from the Buyo hydroelectric installation, 120 kilometers north of the port of San Pedro, and 90 kilometers east of the Ivorian-Liberian frontier. It will be built on the Sassandra, which is the third largest river of the Ivory Coast in terms of its drainage area (74,000 square kilometers), but the largest in terms of its power potential, 6,575 billion kilowatt-hours, or 53 percent of the national potential. The present project represents the maximum which it is possible to derive from the site chosen, that of the Nawa falls, namely an installed capacity of 360,000 kilowatts, corresponding to an annual potential production of 1,623 million kilowatt-hours.

The total cost of the operation is on the order of $600 million (about 168 billion CFA francs) and will include, in addition to the dam, power lines and the reconstruction of the roads.

The work will begin in the last few months of 1982, or 1 year after the next signing of the financing agreement. The power units could begin operating in 1986 at the latest.

Such an achievement, the largest ever undertaken in the Ivory Coast in the field of development of hydroelectric power, cannot be done without totally transforming the face of the region. It was therefore necessary to inform "household dwellers" and to hear their concerns and suggestions in a way to calm them as required. Messrs Konan Lambert, director-general of the EECI, and Charles Donwahi, deputy from Soubre, accompanied by technicians, administrators, and local officials, performed this important and delicate mission in early August in the little town of Soubre.

"The date of 30 July 1981," said Mr Donwahi, "will be engraved in letters of gold in the memory of the people of Soubre. The selection of Soubre as the location of a public work of exceptional importance in the development of our country and the total cost of the work on this project, which represents the greatest investment ever made in our country on this type of project, inspires an infinite gratitude to the Father of the Nation...."

Modern Villages

As the second speaker, Mr Lambert Konan, after presenting the technical aspects of the future dam, described the socio-economic impact on the region.

"The impact of the development of the hydroelectric power of Soubre on the localities concerned will be as great as the size of the construction which will be accomplished there," said the director-general of the EECI. The 170 square kilometers of the surface of the artificial lake which will be created will cause the flooding of the same extent of lands and forests, and perhaps of mineral riches. Of course, the villages, crops, and roads located on these lands will likewise be flooded and will therefore have to be reestablished.

It remains nevertheless true that the flooding will be an opportunity for the population to move to a new and modern habitation. It is particularly important to stress here the unpublished fact that the new villages will be built at the same time as the hydroelectric installation itself. There is consequently no risk of temporary villages, and still less of bare platforms after the work as was unfortunately the case elsewhere.

Ivory Coast Electric Power, contractor for both the installation properly speaking and the corollary works, including the rehousing of the population, actually intends to build villages where the displaced populations will really feel at home, and which will have no reason to envy other modern Ivory Coast villages, the supply of electricity and potable water being provided in the program. The access roads to these villages will, of course, be rebuilt at the same time as the villages themselves. The same is true for the establishment of new plantations. All these achievements will be possible thanks to the interlocking efforts of all the ministries concerned, whose activities will be coordinated by the EECI.

The development of the hydroelectric power of Soubre will therefore blow a new breeze in the region. There is no doubt but that the jobs created by the project will leave competent workers in place. The hydroelectric development will also leave near Soubre a project headquarters town equipped with a complete infrastructure, including recreation areas and also a completely equipped hospital, accessible to the local people.

The Soubre region will therefore not only be opened up, but endowed with new and modern means for its economic and social development."

MOI URGES END TO POLITICAL GROUPINGS

Nairobi DAILY NATION in English 31 Oct 81 pp 1, 20

[Text]

PRESIDENT Moi yesterday called for an end to all political groupings. "Loyalty to me should be direct and not through groupings," he said.

Officially opening the Kitale ASK Show, President Moi said he had forgiven everybody when he took over the country's leadership and was not going to contradict himself by allowing political groupings who were out to cause chaos.

"Let us forget the past and preach unity, love and peace," said the President who urged leaders to avoid squabbles.

Turning to tribalists, President Moi said they would be expelled from the Kenya African National Union. Kanu would not tolerate leaders who practised nepotism, he said.

He said all Kenyans should be treated alike and not on the basis of where they came from or whose relatives they were.

President Moi, opening the Kitale ASK Show, told wananchi to report to him anyone who asked them their tribal background. He said tribalism was the main enemy of development and urged all Kenyans, regardless of their social position, to discard the habit.

He said Kenyans were enlightened and asked the leaders not to mislead them. He said wananchi's knowledge of affairs was better than that of the Special Branch.

It was only through unity that Kenya can develop into a respected nation and added that he detested deeds that were harmful to the welfare of wananchi.

Stressing on the need for discipline among leaders, President Moi said wananchi cannot be expected to emulate bad examples from leaders. "It is the duty of leaders to set good examples in the eyes of wananchi," said the President who also advised civil servants to be disciplined. He praised the Armed Forces for their loyalty and discipline and urged wananchi to follow their example.

Speaking about agriculture, President Moi said he was going to announce 1982 crop prices before the end of this year. "This will enable farmers to know how much they will earn from their crops," he added. The President urged farmers to make the maximum use of arable land to increase food production. He told farmers to go into the production of traditional food crops like cassava, millet, sweet potatoes and finger millet.

He said this year Kenya had grown sufficient food and thanked all farmers for the effort they had put into the exercise. Recent food shortages had been a hard lesson for Kenya, he added.

The President told large-scale farmers who had their own stores to keep their maize there while the Government was involved in collecting maize from the small-scale farmers. He reiterated his earlier statement that the Government was going to take over the running of all cattle dips to ensure that they were always effective.

The Ministry of Livestock Development would soon start to work with Kenya Co-operative Creameries to collect milk from farmers before it goes bad, he said.

President Moi said the Ministry of Transport and Communications had been directed to repair all access roads so that the transportation of agricultural produce was not delayed. On soil conservation, President Moi said it was the duty of all Kenyans to participate in the exercise, since soil was the backbone of agriculture.

He said while farmers continued to strive to produce more food for the country, the Government would continue to supplement their efforts by importing fertilisers and other farming requirements.

On cattle rustling in Trans. Nzoia, President Moi blamed the situation on residents of the area who collaborated with rustlers. He urged wananchi to report anybody suspected of collaborating with rustlers which, he said, come mostly from Uganda. He said he was going to talk with the Uganda Government to try and control the situation on their side.

President Moi said cattle were an important asset of the country and should be protected at all costs. He said because of the rains and good animal husbandry, there was plenty of milk in the country at present.

ISAAC SALAT QUITS HIS KANU POST

[Text] An Assistant Minister in the Office of the President, Mr Isaac Salat has resigned from the post of Kanu secretary, Kericho branch.

Announcing his resignation at his Bomet constituency during a Harambee meeting at Siwot Primary School, Mr Salat said he was stepping down for Basic Education Minister Jonathan Ng'eno, who has been his assistant.

Mr Salat, who had earlier criticised power-hungry leaders in the district, said he took the decision to enhance unity in the area.

He called on the district Kanu chairman, Coun. Stanley Turgut, also to step down for Dr Ng'eno who he said was a senior politician by virtue of his Cabinet post.

Mr Salat recalled that since the recent local authority elections there had emerged personal difference and groupings among politicians in the district.

He said utterances by some leaders at public meetings in the district were not in line with President Moi's Nyayo philosophy of peace, love and unity.

He appealed to the leaders to refrain from such activities, which he said could mar the image of the ruling party in the district.

Mr Salat castigated leaders who undermined others, claiming they were closer to the President and better Nyayo followers.

Kipsigis County Council chairman Minister's resignation should be regarded as a mature political decision.

The meeting, which realised over 55,000/- in aid of Kamoigan women's group, was conducted by Coun. Ingeleche, who donated 2,800/-. Mr Salat gave 24,800/- from himself and his friends, while Coun. Rono contributed 200/-.

Mr Salat has been an active Kanu member, both at the local and national levels. He has worked closely with President Moi even before he became a Member of Parliament.

Dr Ng'eno was born at Kapkateri, Kericho District, in 1929. After completing his early education in Kenya, he went to the United States for his university education.

After obtaining his MA and Ph.D. degrees from Granville and Southern Illinois universities, Dr Ng'eno taught at Tuget, Tacoma, Washington, before returning to Kenya. He won the Buret seat from Dr Taaitta Toweett in the 1979 general elections.

MUTAI RELATIVE BANNED FROM ELECTION

[Excerpt]

KANU yesterday banned an uncle of Miss Cheiagat Mutai from contesting the Eldoret North parliamentary by-election.

The Uasin Gishu District branch of the Kenya African National Union (Kanu) did not clear the candidature of former area MP William Morogo arap Saina on the grounds that he was suspended as chairman of the Turbo-West Kanu sub-branch last February.

The seat was held by Miss Mutai until October 23, when National Assembly Speaker Fred Mati declared it vacant because Miss Mutai had failed to attend eight consecutive sittings of the House.

A district Kanu branch executive committee meeting yesterday cleared six other candidates for presenting their nominations papers to the District Commissioner on November 7. The meeting was held under the chairmanship of Coun. Lebo Sigilai. He said the cleared candidates were: Mr. Julius K. Chombe, Mr. Nickanor Kimurgor Sirma, Mr. John Chumo arap Ng'onda, Mr. Maxwell Taliti Munyesi, Mr. Timothy Lamba Toka and Mr. Reuben Kiplangat Chesire.

Mr. Sigilai said the district Kanu executive committee had upheld the suspension of Mr. Saina because of what it termed Mr. Saina's misconduct.

Mr. Sigilai told Mr. Saina that, according to the Kanu constitution, rule 8, paragraph (e), section 6, the suspension was still effective since Mr. Saina had failed to appeal to the ruling party within six months of the suspension.

Mr. Saina, who appeared startled by the move, admitted receiving a letter in February from the district Kanu executive committee regarding the suspension.

But he argued that the committee had no power to take the action unless it was approved by the national Kanu Governing Council.

The meeting warned that politicians from outside the district would not be tolerated during the election to campaign for any of the candidates, adding that the branch fully supported President Moi's speech at the Kitale Show last week in which he discouraged political groupings.

The branch appealed to wananchi to support a local candidate who would be readily available to them. It assured the candidates that the district Kanu officials and youth-wingers would not take sides during the campaign.

JAPAN WILL PROVIDE RICE GRANT

Nairobi DAILY NATION in English 31 Oct 81 p 4

[Text]

KENYA is to receive 4,000 tons of rice from Japan. An agreement to this effect was yesterday signed by Vice-President Mwai Kibaki and Japanese Ambassador Teruo Kosugi.

Under the agreement, Kenya will get a Sh. 26-million grant from Japan to buy rice in that country.

The rice will be sold on the Kenyan market and the sale proceeds will be used for agricultural development, Mr. Kibaki said.

He said the Government's objective was to attain food self-sufficiency as soon as possible.

He thanked the Japanese Government for the assistance, adding that another agreement had recently been signed under which Japan was to assist Kenya in the construction of rural access roads.

Mr. Kibaki invited Mr. Kosugi to visit some of the projects aided by Japan in the rural areas.

Mr. Kosugi said Japan had earlier sold Kenya 3,000 tons of rice, adding that total Japanese aid to Kenya to date amounted to more than Sh. 1,200 million.

●Mr. Mwai Kibaki yesterday appealed to commercial banks to assist the Government wipe out illiteracy.

Mr. Kibaki said many Kenyans in rural areas could not operate current accounts because they were illiterate.

The Vice-President was speaking at a luncheon hosted by the Kenya Commercial Bank in Nairobi.

Mr. Kibaki had earlier launched a new computerised waste and clearing system at the bank's headquarters.

He said the bank's expansion to rural areas would give the bank more business and help farmers save money.

Other commercial banks should emulate the Kenya Commercial Bank in considering the people's interests.

Speaking at the luncheon, KCB Chairman Philip Ndegwa said the bank was setting the pace in the use of modern banking technology in Kenya.

The bank had in the last two years improved its effectiveness. These measures, he said, included dividing the bank's operation into five areas.

He said the bank had decided to open four new branches but had carefully assessed the contribution the move would make towards development.

Mr. Ndegwa said the KCB had undertaken to negotiate for more credit abroad to support local businessmen. Domestic savings was not enough to meet the country's needs, he added.

The bank chairman said he was convinced Kenya's development efforts would not be inhibited by lack of domestic savings and foreign exchange earnings.

The bank had organised a scheme in conjunction with the International Finance Corporation (IFC) and the Organisation of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) to assist small-scale farmers, he said. The scheme involved about 10 million dollars.

"The bank is committed to personnel development. Not only are officers trained locally but are sent for technical and banking training overseas, he said.

Among those who attended the luncheon were the Permanent Secretary in the Vice-President's Office and Ministry of Finance, Mr. Harry Mule Mr. Paul Boit, Prof. Saitot and Mr. Peter Habenga Okondo who are some of the directors of the bank.

TEA CLONE--A tea bush clone expected to have the highest yield per hectare in the world has been discovered in the Kabianga area, Belgut Division, Kericho. A clone is a group of plants produced from one original seedling. The new clone could yield over 3,500 kg of made tea per hectare annually. The discovery was disclosed by the deputy superintendent of the Kericho-based African Highland Produce (AHP) Tea Company, Mr William Kettienya when addressing councillors from Kirinyaga County Council. The civic officials visited Kabianga tea farm during an educational tour of Kericho District. Mr Kettienya said Kabianga had the most favourable conditions for tea growing in the world. Last year, the Kabianga Tea Farm produced 70,000 kg. of tea, he said. The 500-acre farm would all be under tea in 1983 and the farm would be a major source of revenue for the Kipsigis County Council. The delegation included Kirinyaga county council chairman Ernest Garchewa, vice-chairman Stanley Karimi and county clerk James Njogu. Accompanying the delegation were Kericho DC Harry Wamubei, Kipsigis County Council chairman, Meshack Rono and his vice-chairman, Paul Ngetich. At a luncheon, the two chairmen commended the Local Government Ministry for encouraging exchange visits among local authorities. At the Sotic KCC factory, manager Charles Muhoro told the councillors the plant would be expanded. [Text] [Nairobi DAILY NATION in English 31 Oct 81 p 4]

NO MUTAI IN DAR--An official at State House, Dar es Salaam, yesterday denied knowledge of former Eldoret North MP Chelagat Mutai's presence in Tanzania. But the Tanzania Government was tight-lipped over the issue. No official statement was forthcoming from any of the Government Ministers the Nation tried to contact over the telephone. The Kenya Government also issued no further statement apart from the one made in Parliament on Thursday by a Minister of State in the Office of the President, Mr G.G. Kariuki. Mr Kariuki, answering a question from Nakuru North MP Koigi wa Wamwere, had told the House that Miss Mutai was in Tanzania. He said the Government was awaiting details about the manner of escape adopted by Miss Mutai. No further comment was forthcoming from Kenya Government sources. But another official in Dar es Salaam told the Nation correspondent there the Government was not "aware of Miss Mutai's presence here, nor has it been officially informed of her escape to Tanzania." "If she is here," added the official, "she will definitely be repatriated to Kenya." The official, however, added that the Government would issue a statement "if and when we come across anything." Other sources in Dar es Salaam said there was a standing agreement between Kenya and Tanzania that neither country would harbour a suspect from the other. CHINESE JOURNALISTS' TOUR--A three-man mission from the All China Journalists Association, which was in Tanzania for a week-long consultation tour is visiting Nairobi this week on the second leg of a six nation tour of Africa. From Kenya the Chinese journalists will go to Zaire, Mali and Senegal to explore areas of co-operation with African journalists' organisations. The journalists, led by the editor-in-chief of the Canton based Nafang-Ribao newspaper, Mr Ding Xiling, declared their country's opposition to the dominance of the Western news agencies which they blame for distorting Third World problems. During their Tanzanian tour, the Chinese agreed to consolidate existing relations and also to exchange journalists between Tanzania and China. [Text] [Nairobi DAILY NATION in English 2 Nov 81 p 8]

KANU PRESS OFFICE--The secretary-general of the ruling Kenya African National Union, Mr Robert Matano, yesterday said the party would appoint a Press and public relations officer at headquarters in Nairobi. In a signed statement issued in Mombasa, he said one of the officers' main tasks would be to establish regular contacts with the local Press in order to provide the local newspapers with information on and about the party. "If in future we see that information from Kanu headquarters is not published in the local newspapers we might have to consider further actions," he said. He said: We were perhaps too reluctant to use local newspapers for disseminating party politics." Mr Matano who is also the Cooperative Development Minister, was reacting to the recent debate in Parliament on the possibility of launching a Kanu newspaper. He said money for such a newspaper would be better used to revitalise the party. "In the process of revitalising Kanu we may establish a quarterly or a monthly Kanu newsletter in order to disseminate party policy more effectively especially in the rural areas," he said. He also said "we are thinking of a series of special Kanu brochures to give guidelines for discussion of special problems to branches and sub-branches on the grassroots level." He said it was necessary that they built up an effective party civil service and party management on all levels. Mr Matano said the idea of launching a party newspaper came about from the feeling that party's statements and policy were not dealt with properly in the existing newspapers. He said there were feelings also that the existing newspapers were openly or secretly opposing the party's policies. "They purposely try to create an unfavourable image of the party in the general public," he said. [Text] [Nairobi DAILY NATION in English 31 Oct 81 p 5]

FORMER MINISTER, DEPUTIES TO REPORT FOR REASSIGNMENT

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 3 Nov 81 pp 1, 6

[Text]

Former Finance Minister Major George Dunye and Former Deputy Ministers Captain Samuel Dokie and Captain Augustus Kieh are to report to the Defense Ministry today for possible re-assignment.

Major Dunye was dismissed last Thursday by Head of State, C-I-C Samuel Kanyon Doe, because of his complicity in a $235,848 cheque scandal, while Captain Dokie and Kieh were sacked the same day in a reshuffle at Local Government Ministry.

According to Defense Ministry sources, the three ex-ministers reported for re-assignment last Friday, but were told to come back Monday.

Counts by the Defense sources said this brings to five the number of dismissed ministers that have reported for re-assignment since July when civilian Cabinet Ministers were inducted into the army and given ranks.

The two ex-ministers who reported earlier were former Local Government Minister Major Oscar Quiah, implicated in a coup attempt last August and later acquitted of charges, and Former Justice Minister Major Chea Cheapoo, dismissed for behaviorial pattern inconsistent with the aims of the revolution.

None of those asked to report for re-assignment have so far been re-assigned.

NATIONAL ARCHIVES CENTER TO BE CONSTRUCTED

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 3 Nov 81 p 1

[Article by Sam Johnson]

[Text]

The construction of a National Archives Center and the extension of the Redemption Avenue have been earmarked by the National Redemption Day Commission as its projects for the observance of next year's Redemption Day.

Taking the decision at a regular meeting Monday, the Commission agreed that the construction of a National Archives Center was imperative for the preservation of historical documents.

But of concern to the Commission was where to get the funding for the construction of the Archives Center.

Commission General Secretary Hene Johnson, who presided in the absence of the National Chairman and the 1st and 2nd Co-chairmen, said the Commission had been informed by the Budget Bureau that there was no appropriation in the national budget for programs by the Commission. The possibility of soliciting funds was then suggested.

With regards to the Redemption Avenue which is to be extended along the South Beach to the Coconut Plantation, Randall Street, it was pointed out that appropriation was in the Public Works Ministry budget for the project.

GBARNGA CITY IN COMPLETE DARKNESS FOR FOUR MONTHS

Monrovia DAILY OBSERVER in English 3 Nov 81 pp 1, 12

[Article by R. Ballah Zayzay]

[Text] Cuttington--The City of Gbarnga has been in complete darkness for the past four months. The electricity problem started since June of the current year, and up till now, conditions still remain the same.

Bong County is very much fortunate in the Republic of Liberia for the mere fact that it has one of the country's two higher institutions of learning--Cuttington University College, one of the country's best hospitals--Phebe Hospital, the Central Agricultural Experimentation Station in Suacoco, the Bong County Agricultural Development Project (BCADP), and many other developments that can cater to the needs of the entire citizens of Bong County.

However, the problem of electricity has been the setback of most operations in the county, and will continue to be if feasibility studies are not made to improve the electricity situation in the country.

The electricity problem has caused many businesses with the city limit to close down, and hence government can no longer generate revenue from these businesses.

On the other hand, the generator presently in the Power House is too small to supply electricity to the growing city of Gbarnga.

The constant breakdown of the generator served as an impending factor to the Liberian economy in this sector of the country.

Four months ago, electricity had not been supplied to the many customers, and hence electricity bills cannot be paid to the Regional Electricity Corporation Office in Gbarnga.

Sacrifice

From reliable sources, the LEC workers in Gbarnga have had the strong conviction that the breakdown of the generator has been caused by a supernatural force (Ginna) around the power house which is very close to the soldier barracks.

With this pre-notion, the workers got together on Saturday, October 24 for a sacrifice. The sacrifice was made with a white sheep and many other sacrificial components.

The question here is whether the electricity problem has been caused by a supernatural force or it is lack of manpower in maintaining the generator.

Electricity is of essential necessity to Bong County because it serves as a gateway for Lofa, Nimba, Grand Gedeh, Sinoe and Maryland counties.

These counties are bordered by neighbouring counties like Sierra Leone, Guinea and the Ivory Coast.

And before reaching the capital of Liberia (Monrovia), Bong County is the central check-point. In order to have an efficient security task force at this check-point, a 24-hour electricity system must be considered in safeguarding immigration problems of the nation.

PRC, CABINET HARVEST PORTION OF RICE FARM

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 26 Oct 81 p 1

[Excerpt]

A portion of the 75-acre rice farm planted by students of the Booker Washington Institute (BWI) in Kakata, Gibi Territory, was Friday harvested by members of the PRC and Cabinet led by Head of State C-I-C Samuel K. Doe.

Other government officials who participated in the harvesting included top military brass and Heads of autonomous agencies of government and public corporations.

C-I-C Doe said the involvement of government officials in the exercise was to put government's call for the massive food production into possitive action.

In a statement shortly after the initial harvesting exercise of the rice farm, Gibi Territory Supt. 1st/Sgt. Amos Bohn, said he would invite Head of State to inspect farms being made by citizens of the territory.

He suggested to the Head of State that the purchasing of agricultural tools be placed under the control of local officials who "know what tools are good for their farming purpose."

Head of State Doe and party were later taken on a guided tour of various workshops and facilities of BWI by its Principal, Mr. Daniel N. Jappah.

GOVERNMENT TO TAKE OVER OMEGA NAVIGATIONAL STATION

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 2 Nov 81 p 2

[Text]

The Government of Liberia is to assume full responsibility for the operation and management of the Omega Navigational station located in Paynesville in January next year.

According to a Commerce Ministry release, the station has functionally come under the operational control of the Government of Liberia when the United States Coast Guard recently transferred funds for the first quarter of the fiscal year of operations to the station. The United States Coast Guard is now serving in an advisory capacity and audit functions only.

In preparation for the final transition next January and to ensure that Liberian management and technical staff have acquired the necessary technical and administrative expertise for the management and operation of the station, fifteen months were alloted to gain working experience under the actual conditions that would exist after the station is handed over to the Government.

One year of training under the supervision of the U.S. Coast Guard has enabled the the Liberian personnel to operate the Omega Navigation Station and provide navigational signals to aircraft and ships at sea for a better than ninety-nine percent of the scheduled operation time.

According to a source close to the station, the final handing over is seen as being more of a ceremony than functional inasmuch as the Liberian personnel have worked so hard at acquiring the sophistication to operate one of the eight highly technical navigational stations worldwide.

The Omega Navigation station at Paynesville is the only such station in Africa.

ITALY TO PROVIDE LOAN FOR MONROVIA STREET REPAVING

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 2 Nov 81 pp 1, 7

[Article by Samuel Johnson]

[Text] Italy will provide about $10 million for the reconstruction and re-surfacing of Monrovia streets.

According to Public Works Minister Major Erwin Brooks, the loan which is scheduled for implementation mid-December, will cater to the construction and re-surfacing of streets in Monrovia, the main streets in Paynesville, Logantown, New Kru Town and West Point.

He said the Barnersville and New Georgia roads will be included if the resources being made available, coupled with local resources, are adequate.

The Public Works Minister who was speaking in an interview Tuesday said pending the availability of the Italian funds, his Ministry will carry out the repairing and re-surfacing of streets from appropriations in the recurrent budget for this year.

The re-surfacing of the streets of Lynch and Newport are to be given priority.

But Minister Brooks pointed out that this will not commence until weather condition becomes favorable.

Major Brooks also said his Ministry has been given a mandate by government to explore all possible avenues, locally and externally, for the paving of the Ganta-Tappita, Tappita-Zwedru, Zwedru-Greenville and Zwedru-Harper highways.

He said the Public Works Ministry has already applied to contractors to give cost quotation on the highway section between Ganta and Tappita. Feasibility studies and detailed designing, according to him, have already been done on this section.

The Ministry is also in the process of executing a pre-feasibility study on the section between Tappita and Zwedru, he stated.

"If all goes well in getting the money we are negotiating, we hope that within the next five years we will have completed the paving of the roads between Ganta-Tappita-Zwedru-Greenville, and Zwedru-Harper," Major Brooks said.

In regards to the Gbarnga-Voinjama-Kolahun highways, the Public Works Minister said consultants have been applied for detailed designing. But he indicated that his Ministry wish complete the eastern highways before focusing attention on the western highways.

Minister Brooks who attended last month's annual meeting of the World Bank, said he was afforded the opportunity to acquaint World Bank officials with the problems his Ministry is faced with.

He said the World Bank was also approached for its funding of the completion of the highway link between Kakata and Totota. The World Bank reportedly said it was unable to provide the funds directly, but did approach other financing agencies to co-finance the project, according to Minister Brooks. Negotiations, he said, is now going on.

He further revealed that his Ministry $80 million proposal for the 5th Highway Maintenance Program (81-86) was presented to the World Bank for study.

'L'UNITA' INTERVIEWS PRESIDENT MACHEL

FM101327 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 29 Oct 81 p 19

[Interview with Mozambique President Samora Machel in Milan by Guido Bimbi, undated: "Dear Europe, You Are no Longer the Center of the World"]

[Text] Samora Machel was delighted: his official visit to Italy--the Mozambique president's first to a NATO and EEC country--produced "very good results." "Italy's commitment," he said, "is great. It is our best partner among the EEC countries." But the main aim of his visit, he confessed, was more ambitious than this. It was to "commit our two governments to shouldering responsibility for the relations of friendship and solidarity that formed in the past between our two peoples, that is, to impart an institutional character to these relations. This was the main aim of the visit, and I believe that it has certainly been achieved, in view of the quality of my meetings with Prime Minister Spadolini and with minister and party leaders."

Warm Welcome

This aspect of the visit to Italy--what we might call the political-cum-emotional aspect--was further enriched by the "warm welcome" received from the state authorities and first and foremost from [President] Pertini. "An African living in the Quirinale Palace!" Samora Machel exclaimed, recalling the centuries of humiliation suffered by his people, and discussing the man who made a strong impression on him with his past deeds and his frankness. "It was the first time I had spoken so directly with a head of state." He added: "One can understand why Pertini is a partisan. Pertini knows what foreign occupation, imprisonment, torture and war mean."

It was with these remarks that my second, rambling interview with the Mozambique president began. We met previously in Maputo, soon after independence, and at this meeting in Milan, at the end of his visit to Italy, I found the same ebullient, humorous and enthusiastic man as before. Samora is a difficult interlocutor. As he talked he fidgeted with his chair and with the table in front of him, pestering his interviewer and refusing to observe any kind of question-and-answer pattern. The last word of the previous sentence always prompted in him some new idea, which he did not even try to restrain. And so from Pertini he jumped to war and from war to Europe. "Only those who have suffered war," he announced solemnly, "can really know the value of peace." Shaking his head, he added: "The Americans do not know what a bombardment is like. We who have suffered this tragedy and who are now experiencing the tragedy of widowhood and orphanage and of destroyed homes and plants can well understand the desire for peace being demonstrated by the European peoples. We can understand their anxieties over the arms race. And there is real cause for concern when a negative meaning is attached even to the term 'pacifist.' We can understand your anxieties over the production of new deadly weapons such as the neutron bomb, designed specifically to be used in this Europe that has been the theater or so many wars and so many tragedies.

Then, with the same frankness as Pertini, Samora Machel disclosed his perplexities. Indeed, his satisfaction with the results combined--in a complex mixture of feelings --with the feared confirmation that, despite everything, Eruope still regards the world as if Europe were its center, ignoring the specific and original aspects of the major liberation movement of former colonial peoples. It perceives only some of its implications of global significance, often distorting the complexity of the real situations to fit them into the old and rigid patterns of bipolarism.

In the many verdicts, questions and opinions heard by Samora Machel during the past few days in our country he has perceived a lack of real interest in the problems of Mozambique and of the other Third World peoples, a lack of interest in the actual reasons for the political choices and cultural and ideological solutions with which his interlocutors appear so concerned. Above all he perceived widespread suspicion regarding the nature of Mozambique's nonalignment, because it receives aid from and maintains close relations with the Soviet Union, but little regard for the reasons--however simple--for this aid and this solidarity, namely the South African threat. Samora Machel was surprised. He was sarcastic--even harshly so--in his comments on all this, but also basically bitter. "Our independence is doubted," he said. What he clearly implied was: After all, I, a communist, president of a country that has opted for socialism, have come here to a NATO country to propose and to facilitate a friendship between our governments as great as the friendship that has existed between our peoples since the time of the liberation war.

At this point our rambling conversation jumped to another topic--a lengthy digression before our interrupted discussion was resumed. The reference to South Africa brought us onto the subject of the crisis in Southern Africa. He is worried about the divergences that have emerged between the United States and Europe on the Namibia question. "The stiffening by the United States," he said, "and Europe's new and willing attitude must not lead to a break in the institutional mechanisms hitherto used, such as the "contact group." We hope that this will not happen and ask the Europeans and Italy too--which, though not a member, does wield great influence--to speak out more to ensure that what has been achieved hitherto is not lost and that UN resolution 435 can be implemented as soon as possible." The implicit appreciation of the stances adopted by the European countries on this point was accompanied by a criticism--and a harsh one--of the stance that they have adopted on sanctions against South Africa, however. "It is simply a mystification to abstain from voting on or to vote against the sanctions, with the argument that they would harm the countries of the region," he exclaimed. "We have never said anything that would justify such an argument. We believe that Europe and the West should discuss this problem and take specific decisions on some kind of pressure to force South Africa to accept resolution 435. Then we could discuss it together and if necessary coordinate forms of compensation."

After this lengthy digression we returned to the point at which we interrupted our discussion. "The Europeans," Samora Machel argued, "speak on the basis of their own viewpoint and presume that it is valid for and comprehensible to everyone. On the other hand, if we speak on the basis of an African viewpoint, then the misunderstandings and incomprehensions begin." In other words, Eurocentrism is a continuation of colonialism by other means.

The Mozambique president discussed this complex political problem at length, sarcastically, sometimes angrily, always emotionally. "In order to regard us as democrats you Europeans go so far as to presume that we invent a national bourgeoisie, which is something that you took good care to avoid doing during five centuries of colonial domination. In short, arguing according to Eurocentric schemes, you even presume that we change society solely to adhere to your models. But the fact from which we must proceed is that no national bourgeoisie exists, and socioeconomic building must take this specific point into account."

"Our Kind of Marxism"

Once embarked on these topics, Samora Machel is unstoppable. Only one of his aides manages to stop him by pointing to his watch. Indeed, the Mozambique president is leaving our country after 6 busy days of meetings and talks. But before taking his leave he was keen to end our conversation by reminding me of the "origins of Marxism and of the Mozambique liberation front" and indirectly defending--to anyone who has doubts about it--the independence that Mozambique gained at the cost of so much suffering. "We are labeled tools of the Soviet Union because we are Marxists. We are accused of having imported a foreign ideology into Africa. But is social democracy--which wants to proliferate in Africa--a production of African political thinking? Is capitalism African? Our kind of Marxism is the original product of our people's struggle. Anybody who has not experienced a people's war perhaps cannot know what a wealth of thinking it can produce, how much imagination it can release. We struggle against foreign domination, colonial exploitation, inequality, racism and humiliation. Is all this an importation of foreign ideology? It was by coming to terms with these problems and our country's real conditions that our national liberation struggle became a revolution. We became Marxists through struggle, not by means of books: they came later. We now express all this by saying that our ideology is a synthesis of the practice of struggle for the liberation of our homeland and the principles of Marxism. This is why our party is a vigorous and dynamic one."

BEIRA PORT BUOYS DESTROYED BY SABOTAGE

Sabotage Described

EA132055 Maputo Domestic Service in Portuguese 1900 GMT 13 Nov 81

[Text] Eight buoys used to guide traffic in the access channel to Beira port were destroyed early this morning by sabotage. The destruction of these buoys will temporarily make it difficult to use the second largest port in the country, thus threatening links with Zimbabwe, Malawi, Zambia and Zaire, all countries that use Beira port for the import and export of their goods. Repairs to the buoys are already taking place. Contacts made with the MOZAMBIQUE NEWSAGENCY in Beira said that the characteristics of the operation (?points to) the participation of a highly-trained military command. On 29 October 1981, a similar operation destroyed the road and rail bridges over Pungue River, an action carried out by the so-called National Resistance Movement, a creation of the South African security services. South African specialists were employed in this operation.

The act of sabotage against Beira port, together with the earlier operation, is aimed at isolating Beira port and the rest of the country, and at blocking the main link of Zimbabwean exports and imports.

Corn is now being transported along the Beira-Umtali railroad and the port of Sofala's capital. This corn was bought from Zimbabwe by the FAO to assist African countries affected by drought.

In global terms, South African strategy aims at ending the Southern African development coordination committee transportation cooperation project.

MUZOREWA'S GHOST HAUNTS NAMIBIA SETTLEMENT

Johannesburg THE STAR in English 22 Oct 81 p 27

[Article by Gerald L'Ange: "Ghost of a 'Stooge' Haunting Namibia"]

[Text]

Bishop Muzorewa's political ghost is haunting SWA/Namibia as the possibility of an internationally-supervised settlement election looms larger.

Shock waves from the bishop's destruction by Robert Mugabe's party in the 1980 Zimbabwe independence elections are still reverberating in the corridors of power in SWA/Namibia. And the ghost of his disastrous premiership sits at the elbow of every political leader facing the prospect of fighting an election against Swapo.

It sits closest to the leaders of the DTA, which virtually governs SWA/Namibia and is the most viable opponent to Swapo.

Muzorewa was defeated largely because black voters regarded him as a stooge for the dominant whites. Though his case does not precisely fit the situation of the DTA, it comes close enough to worry its leaders.

Current conventional wisdom holds that Swapo is likely to win any election — though some knowledgeable observers think this is not at all certain. Nevertheless there is believed to be a conviction in high DTA quarters that it is essential for it to get rid of its South African stooge image if it is to hope to counter Swapo's "freedom fighter" charisma among black voters.

Getting out of Pretoria's shadow will almost certainly involve more radical action by the DTA than anything it has so far done.

The DTA might consider it necessary, for instance, to attack the perpetuation of racial separation that is enshrined in the ethnically-divided system of government.

Although it dominates the interim government, the Council of Ministers, the DTA's powers to eliminate the remaining vestiges of racial discrimination are limited. It cannot prescribe to the National Party-dominated white legislative council in the second tier of the three-tier governmental system.

In the interim government the DTA is prevented by lack of funds from going ahead with all of the housing, schooling, health, job-creating and other development programmes it wants to promote to get the support of black voters who might otherwise vote for Swapo.

The DTA, in short, faces the prospect of going hamstrung into an election against Swapo. It does not have the power to make changes it considers necessary but may be blamed for not making them.

But even radical moves by the DTA to better its image might not be enough to counter Swapo. Some politicians see a need to bring the numerous, competing political groups of all ethnic labels together in a united front to oppose Swapo at the polls.

A united front is considered desirable in some quarters not only to halt Swapo but also to reverse the polarisation (of blacks to the left and whites to the right of the political spectrum) that is evident in the territory.

Some sources hold that Prime Minister P W Botha of South Africa is a strong believer in the need for a united front and has made this plain to the internal parties.

The DTA, a grouping of eleven parties, has already set a precedent for coalition. But the chances of getting all of the volatile, parochial and ethnically oriented internal parties together under a single election banner may not be much better than of getting an internationally accepted settlement itself.

Even the whites are fundamentally divided. While the DTA is trying to knock down the remaining racial barriers the National Party remains firmly committed to ethnic division at government level.

The possibility of a widening of the white split cannot be ruled out, especially if the DTA whites decide that widening it is the price that must be paid to defeat Swapo in an election.

While it dominates white politics, the National Party lacks the strength to win overall political power in the territory and therefore plays what is essentially a spoiling role in the settlement efforts. Its main purpose is to protect the interests of the whites, most of whom support the party.

But even the National Party, sources say, would probably accept a Swapo government in SWA/Namibia provided it came to power through a manifestly free and fair election and provided the whites' principal interests were protected through constitutional or other acceptable guarantees.

South Africa has plenty of incentive to push for an early settlement. While the war on the border provides a valuable training ground for her armed forces the human and material cost is considerable.

South African taxpayers' money is being poured by the million into SWA/Namibia's official coffers to help make up its budget shortfalls (only about R514-million of the current budget of R888-million will come from its own revenue). And South Africa is paying a high political cost for its continued refusal to quit the territory.

It is questionable whether these costs are outweighed by any strategic or other benefits South Africa gets from keeping its armed forces and its administrator-general in the territory.

Key figures in election politics would include, clockwise from bottom left, Mr Dirk Mudge, chairman of the Council of Ministers and of the DTA; Mr Peter Kalangula, president of the DTA and chairman of the Owambo executive committee; Mr Sam Nujoma, leader of Swapo; Chief Kuaima Riruako, vice-chairman of the DTA and paramount chief of the Hereros, and Mr Kosie Pretorius, chairman of the white executive committee and of the SWA National Party.

GAROEB OUTLINES POSSIBLE FUTURE SWAPO POLICY

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 10 Nov 81 p 4

[Text]

SWAPO will be committed to racial reconciliation, the rule of law, political stability and a pragmatic economic policy which rules out indiscriminate nationalisation if it comes to power in an independent Namibia, according to a top SWAPO official.

Outlining SWAPO's vision for an independent Namibia in an interview, Mr Moses Garoeb, the movement's secretary-general, also said a SWAPO government:

- Would be prepared to work with the leader of the Democratic Turnhalle Alliance, Mr Dirk Mudge, but would not allow the existence of "racist parties" like the National Party.
- Would not allow military bases in Namibia for the African National Congress.
- Would seek correct and cordial relations with South Africa.
- Would see the maintenance of peace and stability after independence as a major priority.

Mr Garoeb, who said he had held a number of meetings with the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, added that SWAPO would draw on Zimbabwe's post-independence experience.

Racial reconciliation at independence was "logical", said Mr Garoeb.

"We will be committed to the rule of law. That means every Namibian, whatever his race, colour or creed, will be treated equally under the law. Reconciliation will be essential because we will have fought a war.

"And a SWAPO government would commit itself to a conscious policy of deracialisation — to a non-racial society that is aimed at uplifting all its citizens."

If a SWAPO government came to power in unsupervised elections, a major concern would be "a peaceful transition", he said. "That is our very serious commitment. It is not a propaganda stance."

Although SWAPO was committed to "socialism as the method of reconstruction of a free and independent Namibia", the organisation knew it would not achieve it overnight.

"We know we will have to be extremely pragmatic in our approach.

"For instance, it would be very naive for anyone to expect us to march in and nationalise Rio Tinto Zinc (which has the major share in Namibia's Rossing uranium mine) and other big multi-nationals overnight.

"The claim that we would do so is an exercise aimed at giving SWAPO a bad name."

But Namibian mineral and other contracts previously agreed between the South African government and multi-national corporations would have to be renegotiated.

"We are definitely not going to allow a situation by which there is unchecked exploitation of our resources, where there is no reinvestment in Namibia."

Mineral and other resources would be regarded as national assets and the conditions under which they were exploited would depend on an independent Namibia's national interest.

"We must stress that we want the economic transition to be peaceful and to provide continuity. This is very, very important to us. Like Mr Mugabe in Zimbabwe, we want a radical economic transformation without disrupting production," he said.

"A SWAPO government will want to ensure there is no violence after independence. We foresee a period of gradual catching up by the blacks in line with what we want—an egalitarian society.

"In the first few years of independence, our people may not necessarily get the fruits of independence, but years later we may begin to realise our objective. Everything will depend on concrete conditions when a SWAPO government takes over."

The liberation SWAPO envisaged should not be confused with black revenge.

"Liberation is an act of responsibility," said Mr Garoeb.

SWAPO "would have no difficulty in working together with someone like Mudge provided he stays within the framework of the law. He is a citizen of Namibia. He can keep his farm and can make his contribution to the running of the country.

"What's the use of victimising Mudge? History will have already judged him. We won't need to waste our energies on him."

SWAPO would not impose a one-party state if it came to power. A decision on whether or not to have a one-party state would be determined by the people.

But Mr Garoeb was adamant that no party whose policies were based on the promotion of racial divisions or racialism "like the National Party" would be allowed in a SWAPO-ruled Namibia.

"We are not going to invade them. And the struggle for South Africa by the African National Congress is inside the country. We will not give the ANC bases in Namibia."

Trade and other relations with South Africa would depend on whether it was in a SWAPO-ruled Namibia's interest to have them, and they would have to be conducted on the basis of "respect for each other's sovereignty".

A SWAPO-ruled Namibia would, however, try to reduce its economic dependence on South Africa through membership of the nine-nation Southern Africa Development Co-ordination Conference.

Its foreign policy would be non-aligned, he said.

LEGISLATION IS PLANNED TO SCRAP TERRORISM ACT

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 12 Nov 81 p 7

[Text]

WINDHOEK. — Draft legislation was being planned to abolish the South African Terrorism Act, including its death penalty currently applicable in South West Africa, official sources said in Windhoek yesterday.

Among the other far-reaching measures envisaged were the deletion of Section Six of the Act, prescribing detention for indefinite periods without trial and the scrapping of a minimum sentence of five years conviction.

The new legislation, should it become law, would not lay down a prescribed minimum sentence.

A maximum sentence of 20 years imprisonment was being planned, while capital punishment would be left out.

Official spokesmen emphasised that the legislation was in its initial stages. It was not known when it would be introduced in the SWA National Assembly.

Draft legislation would have to be submitted to the caucus of the Democratic Turnhalle Alliance which has the majority in the legislature.

The DTA caucus would have to decide whether it wanted to go ahead with the new legislation and when it would introduce a Bill containing the new measures in the National Assembly.

Political observers in Windhoek said the new anti-terrorism measures were aimed at lessening the adverse criticism of the way the South African Terrorism Act was applied in SWA.

Legal circles pointed out that existing security proclamations of the Administrator-General carried stipulations for detention without trial of people suspected of terrorist activities.

Proclamation AG9 provided for detention of up to 30 days while proclamation AG26 provided for detention for indefinite periods.

Other legislation in the pipeline includes consolidation of the Income Tax Companies' Tax Law.

Income tax in SWA is currently levied in terms of ordinances of second-tier authorities.

Separate taxation of married women was to be expected among the provisions of proposed income tax legislation. — Sapa.

DTA WILL BREAK WITH SA IF NEED BE, SAYS BEN AFRICA

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 26 Oct 81 p 3

[Text]

THE DTA will break with SA over the Western initiative if the SA Government forces the DTA into an untenable situation.

This stern warning was made in Rehoboth on Saturday by DTA Deputy President Dr Ben Africa.

He was addressing a well-attended meeting in the Baster town.

Dr Africa made it clear in no uncertain terms that the DTA was not prepared to participate in a UN-supervised election which was not free and fair and that it would not respond to pressure from SA to do so either.

"We are not SA stooges," he charged.

Dr Africa's speech comes amid speculation that all is not well in relations between the DTA and the AG Mr Danie Hough and the SA Government.

"We were disappointed after our talks with the PM Mr Piet Botha and his colleagues this week because they were not able to give us the information we requested on the latest initiative."

COMPLICATED

Dr Africa conceded however that the plan seemed complicated and that the US had to sell it to other parties.

"To date we haven't been told what is to happen", he said.

"The US Deputy Secretary for State Mr Richard Clarke said when he was in Windhoek earlier this year that he would see to it that we were kept fully in the picture. We are still waiting."

Dr Africa warned however that the DTA would refuse to reveal its bottom line to the Crocker delegation this week.

"What is the US's bottom line," he asked.

"What will the US do if Swapo refuses to participate in the election?

"Nor will we be pressurised by SA. We are not their stooges. If confrontation comes, we have our own support."

HOUR OF RECKONING

Nonetheless, said Dr Africa: "Nobody really knows what will happen next year, but the hour of reckoning could be in sight. The time may have arrived to meet Swapo on equal ground. I have a feeling that within the months ahead we will be moving into an election that will have to be won. If it is not won, I can't tell you how serious the repercussions will be."

Dr Africa also hit out at former Cabinet Minister and NCP leader Dr Connie Mulder who will address a White meeting in Windhoek this week, saying that the timing was most inopportune.

"We can do without Dr Mulder's presence at this delicate stage," he said.

MUDGE CALLS WHITE AUTHORITY 'A MONSTER'

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 26 Oct 81 p 4

[Text]

THE NATIONAL Party is exploiting the present constitution in SWA (AG 3) and the White representative authority has become a monster.

So said Council of Ministers' Chairman Mr Dirk Mudge in a hardhitting speech in Rehoboth on Saturday.

"The DTA had never intended that this should happen and it will endeavour to do everything possible to correct the situation," he said.

"There is a great danger that because of such exploitation, the system will be rejected. And if that were to happen, the guilt would have to be placed squarely on the shoulders of the NP, my people's party."

The same sentiments were expressed by DTA Deputy President Dr Ben Africa who shared the same platform as Mr Mudge.

"There is nothing wrong with the principles of the present system, but it is being openly exploited and manipulated by the NP," Dr Africa charged.

"We wanted a country with a strong central government and representative authorities with limited powers, and the last thing we wanted was for them to fight each other. The system works in both the US and Germany and there is no reason why it shouldn't work here."

Dr Africa hinted that the DTA's relations with the AG Mr Danie Hough and the SA Government were not all that healthy on this score.

MISUSED

Both Mr Mudge and Dr Africa alleged that the NP had misused its powers on health and education in particular.

Said Mr Mudge: "We can't have 11 teachers training colleges in Windhoek which are 75 percent empty. We can't have 11 conservatoires to meet the whims of every ethnic group. Music is international. Music is not English, Afrikaans, German, Damara or Nama. We can't sell this sort of thing to the people.

"It is out intention that the system be a fair one and that it have credibility. It is not an apartheid system. It gives recognition to differences like flowers in a garden."

Said Dr Africa: "Eighty percent of the Windhoek Teachers Training College is not used. The last thing this country can afford is having a lecturer earning R22 000 a year and having only five students in his class."

Mr Mudge said that the DTA was alarmed that it was being blamed for things for which it was not responsible and for this reason it was determined to put things right.

He confirmed that a committee had been appointed at the highest level in the DTA to investigate these problems urgently and that it would be reporting in the near future. This was reported in The Advertiser last week.

DEMOCRATIC

"We are a democratic party and we are not afraid to look at ourselves just as one looks at a mirror," he said.

Mr Mudge refuted however that there was any question of a split in the DTA over the question of the emphasis that is being placed on ethnicity. He referred specifically to a report in The Advertiser and remarks that have been attributed to the Editor, Mr Leon Kok.

Neither The Adveritser nor Leon Kok reported or suggested that a split was in the offing, but made it clear that differences had emerged. The Advertiser stands by its original report which was reported in good faith from usually reliable sources. Mr Mudge made fun in his speech about those sources.

Without confirming or denying the report, Mr Mudge said that differences arise constantly within the alliance, but it does not necessarily lead to screaming or drama.

"Differences have emerged between us often in the past six years and they were far worse in the beginning than they are now," he said.

"I ask this: what other political party in this country with 11 ethnic groups and so much diversity can claim to have remained intact for so long."

Pointing to Mr Max Haraseb who was also on the stage, Mr Mudge remarked: "If there was a split everytime that Mr Haraseb and I fought, the DTA would have split 20 times by now."

The Advertiser report suggested that the DTA might look to some form of geographical basis in its future policy development, but Mr Mudge hinted that this would not be the case.

COMPLICATE

He did not rule it out per se, but he for example hit out at NP leader Mr Kosie Pretorius' concept of a confederation, saying that the introduction of geographical authorities in the country would further complicate the system.

Mr Mudge suggested that it might require four levels of government instead of three and that there would be problems in reconciling the diversity of approaches.

"Will the provincial governments be responsible for say education in all the provinces," he asked.

NP LEADER QUESTIONS CONTROL OF OWN FUTURE

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 26 Oct 81 p 2

[Text]

INTERNATIONAL vested interests in SWA independence raised a question mark over the right of the Territory's people to map out their own destiny, a deputy leader of the SWA National Party, Mr Jannie de Wet, said at Outjo in the north-west of the Territory.

"In these days of negotiation politics with South Africa, the United Nations and the Western powers, it is proclaimed almost daily that SWA and its people must decide for themselves," Mr De Wet said in a speech made available to Sapa.

"But can this still be stated with justification?"

Mr De Wet was speaking on the eve of the handing over of a set of Western proposals to the Territory's internal parties.

The proposals containing guidelines for a post-independence constitution will be delivered in Windhoek today to political leaders in the Territory by the Canadian Ambassador to South Africa, Mr Robert Middleton, and a representative of the US Embassy in Pretoria.

A similar set of documents would be handed over simultaneously to the SA Government in Cape Town for studying in preparation of the arrival on Wednesday of a 15-man Western Contact Group delegation, headed by the US Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs, Dr Chester Crocker.

In his speech, Mr De Wet said the Third World supported by Soviet Russia, had an interest in SWA independence to promote expansionistic objectives.

"The West, in turn, wants independence for SWA, because it is under pressure from Third World states."

CHOICE

Political parties in SWA had to form a united front against Swapo and put before the Western negotators the choice of whether they wanted a prosperous new independent state in Africa, or whether they wanted to hand over the Territory to communist rule.

A marxist government in SWA would result in the country joining the growing queue of poverty-stricken and starving sovereign states, many of whom were in Africa.

UNAVOIDABLE

Mr De Wet said elections under international supervision seemed unavoidable if SWA was to win internationally-recognised independence.

But the SWA NP could not accede unconditionally to one man one vote pre-independence elections.

Prerequisites for such polls were that the UN would have to demonstrate unequivocaly its impartiality as an arbitrator, and a ceasefire would have to be called, lasting for several months "so that circumstances can return to normal."

Apart from constitutional and political guarantees for independence, the SWA NP would also seek economic and administrative guarantees.

"We cannot summarily be cut off from SA on whom we depend for our infrastructure and direct as well as indirect financial aid."

GUARANTEES

Property rights should be guaranteed by an international trust fund set up under the trusteeship of SA and the US.

Proceeds should be used to reimburse property owners who lost their land to nationalisation or who found it possible to continue living in SWA after independence.

Mr De Wet said guaranteed land ownership, through recourse to courts of law, as was guaranteed to Zimbabweans, would be worthless if the courts were loaded in favour of nationalisation programmes. — Sapa

JAAP MARAIS VOWS TO FIGHT 435

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 28 Oct 81 pp 1-4

[Text]

STRONG CALLS for armed resistance against the implementation of UN Resolution 435 in SWA and a decisive military and economic offensive against the African Frontline states were made to the Whites in both SA and SWA at a mass rally in Windhoek last night.

Over 1 000 conservative Whites attended last night's protest mass meeting in SWA's capital organised by the HNP and addressed by Party leader Mr Jaap Marais and leader of the SA National Conservative Party, Dr Connie Mulder.

This was the first time that the Dr Mulder and Mr Marais shared the same political platform.

Resistance against UN Resolution 435 served as a strong rallying point last night which was pledged by both leaders to become the spearhead of a future assault on the National Party's rule in SA.

"We want the voice of the Whites to be heard through a referendum, Mr Marais urged his audience.

"You must tell the world in the strongest possible language that no UN soldier will put his foot in SWA."

Mr Marais urged conservative Whites not to obey the provisions stipulating the handing over of firearms by commando units once the UN plan for SWA independence came into operation.

NO SELF-RESPECT

"No self-respecting White man will hand his weapons in at a UN depot."

Mr Marais said he was not promoting civil disobedience. It has no standing in SWA whatsoever."

Mr Marais said Western proposals for constitutional safeguards were designed to act as a lightning conductor "to distract the attention from the abhorrence of Resolution 435."

The Western initiative was not aimed at securing human rights or continued democracy, but "to break the White man's political power."

MADNESS

It was madness to draw up a constitution in order to end a war.

Mr Marais said the bush war in northern SWA should be ended "on the battlefield where Swapo started it."

Operations by Swapo armed fighters and other insurgency organisations were only made possible by neighbouring states who harboured those forces.

Yet, the SA Government continued to supply those states with food, fuel and transport.

"The South African Government does not want to acknowledge once and for all that these states are our enemies," Mr Marais said.

"This war can be ended by a government who has the will to defend the country against terrorism."

SA should close its borders to states hosting insurgents and refuse to allow a "mealie pip" or a drop of fuel to enter those countries "unless they rid themselves of terrorists."

"If they persist in harbouring those terrorists, then we as a self-respecting nation will have no option but to send in our armed forces to wipe out those terrorists."

Mr Marais said the officer commanding the SWA Territory Force, Major General Charles Lloyd, had stated on occasion that the military could easily overwhelm (oorrompel) Swapo, but the General would prefer a political solution.

"South Africa wants an anti-Soviet Black Government," Mr Marais said.

WRITTEN OFF

The Republic's Foreign Minister, Mr Pik Botha, had "already written off Mr Dirk Mudge, DTA.

Mr Marais said the withdrawal of South African forces from SWA as required by Resolution 435, would signal the Republic's abandoning of its authority over SWA.

"A nation that has nothing to die for has nothing to live for," he said.

"If you allow this situation to continue much longer, the day will soon break when the White man has nothing to live for."

While SA had the military and economic means to inflict lasting deafeat on all her African enemies without alienating international support for SA, the SA Government was deliberately playing up to the forces of international Communism and domestic big capital.

Mr Marais named the various corporate capital interests represented on SA Prime Minister P W Botha's Military Armaments Advisory Council, alleging that they all had direct interests in the calculated prolongation of the war stemming from military contracts for supplies and services.

LEADING NAMES

The representatives all stood for PFP principles of liberalisation, Mr Marais said and he named Mr Gavin Relly, Vice-Chairman of Anglo American, as the leading figure, Mr Mike Rosholt of Barlow Rand, Basil Hersov of Anglovaal, Wim de Villiers of General Mining, Frans Cronje of SA Breweries, Chris Saunders of Tongaats and Huletts Sugar, Ian McKenzie of Standard Bank, and Richard Luries Chairman of the Johannesburg Stock Exchange.

He also named Jan van der Horst of Old Mutual and Mr Fred du Plessis of Sanlam.

These people have as their prime interest the profits of their companies and in their capacity as advisers linked to the SA Government. Their policial outlook would always be directed towards those goals, said Mr Marais.

DRAG IT OUT

"It is in their interest to drag the war out," he said.

Mr Marais welcomed the latest indications by the leader of the National Party in SWA, Mr Kosie Pretorius, that his party rejected Resolution 435 and said there was scope of considerable cooperation between the NP in SWA and the HNP and National Conservative Party in a joint resistance against the implementation of Resolution 435.

"We cannot change our social order in order to pacify our enemies," Mr Marais said.

HNP LEADER CONDEMNS RESOLUTION 435

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 28 Oct 81 p 3

CONSERVATIVE

Whites in SWA would regard UN troops arriving in the Territory to monitor independence elections as an army of occupation and an enemy to be resisted, Advocate Sarel Becker, leader of the HNP in SWA told a mass rally in Windhoek last night.

Mr Becker rejected the latest constitutional proposals brought by the Contact Group as a whole because they made no provisioin for assurances given by the SA Government to the Territory's Whites in 1977.

The SWA HNP addressed the protest mass meeting together with Dr Connie Mulder of the National Conservative Party in SA, and Mr Jaap Marais, leader of the HNP in SA.

"We do not recognise the authority of the UN over SWA," Mr Becker said.

The protest meeting was organised to protest agaisnt the implementation of UN Security Resolution 435, towards which the latest US – led settlement moves are aimed.

ON THE FLOOR

Mr Becker threw the document containing the latest constitutional proposals onto the floor to the cheers of over 1 000 conservative Whites, saying that universal suffrage could not be implemented in SWA because of the diversity of population groups and their different stages of development.

"In 1977 the Whites were talked into accepting independence and received the assurance that they would be given certain guarantees," he said.

"But there is nothing in the Western document that gives recognition to ethnicity, minority rights or a veto."

Whites had made a contract with their leaders based on the promise of these guarantees, but this contract had been broken by the SA Government which was encouraging the Western powers to force Whites to accept independence, according to Mr Becker.

Mr Becker was referring to the 1977 referendum which was held in SWA when most of SWA's Whites voted in favour of independence but with certain reservations which have not been catered for in the latest proposals.

SWA could not be independent on any terrain, from SA, Mr Becker argued, quoting General Jan Smuts who had said that SWA would whither if it was disconnected from SA.

It had always been said that the people of the Territory would decide their own future, but now the Western powers were drafting a constitution for an independent Namibia, he said.

To shouts of "we'll shoot them" from the floor, Mr Becker said. "If UN forces arrive in SWA we will view them as enemy troops and an occupation force."

One of the main features of the meeting last night was when HNP leader in SWA Mr Sarel Becker expressed contempt for the latest Western proposals and publicly threw the document over his shoulder. Mr Becker furthermore expressed astonishment that the internal parties had been told that the document was "highly confidential" and yet it appeared in every newspaper in Windhoek.

LIBERALS QUALIFY PLEASURE WITH PROPOSALS

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 30 Oct 81 p 2

[Text]

LIBERAL PARTY leader Mr Andrew Kloppers told a press conference in Windhoek yesterday that his party was generally happy with the Western proposals but it did raise certain reservations in its meeting with the Western five groups.

The reservations were these:

- It may be impossible to have "fair representation" in the constituent assembly because in SWA there was the astronomical number of 46 political parties.
- It may be impossible for a two thirds majority to be attained in the constituent assembly and this would precipitate an unwieldly stalemate;
- Swapo will never feel bound to the constitutional principles and will not see its way clear to honouring them;
- And the delegation was unable to explain what is meant by a "unitary" state.

Turning to the implementation of the UN plan, Mr Kloppers said that he pointed out to the delegation that his party could not accept that the UN would be an impartial supervisor of the election and by its very record had disqualified itself.

The delegation apparently told the Liberal Party that it would discuss this aspect in the next phase of the negoations.

Mr Kloppers said his party wanted to know who would govern SWA during the settlement process, and the delegation told him that it would be the AG Mr Danie Hough in cooperation with the UN Secretary General's special adviser, Mr Martti Ahtisaari.

COMMITTEE MEMBERS EXPLAIN NEW TAX LAWS

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 30 Oct 81 pp 24-25

[Interview with Leon Lombard and Larry Kritzinger, date and place not given]

[Text]

MUCH HAS been said about the proposed new Income Tax law for SWA but little in-depth clarification has been given on the subject.

That problem is largely overcome in this interview with Messrs Leon Lombard and Larry Kritzinger who are members of the Standing Committee for Taxation Policy.

Businessmen should find it most enlighting.

This is how the interview went:

Q: The Administrator-General recently announced further income tax concessions and incentives. Could you tell our readers a little bit more about the thinking of the Government in regard to tax matters?

A: The Government has on a number of occasions clearly stated their attitude. In his Budget speech in June 1981 the Chairman of the Council of Ministers, Mr D F Mudge, gave a very clear indication of the approach of the Government to the economy of SWA. He said: "I would also like to take advantage of this opportunity to state clearly that this Government has committed itself to a system of free enterprise, private ownership, a free choice of careers, and remuneration according to merit, and that the Government will not be induced by temporary problems into taking measures of a socialistic nature.

Naturally, as in the past, we will as far as possible, give assistance wherever people are in need as a result of circumstances beyond their control. However, the Government sees as its main function the creation of the right climate in which a free economic system can thrive, instead of accepting direct responsibility for the creation of employment opportunities and growth.

Also in the spirit of this approach I announced considerable reductions in the income tax scales of individuals during the last session of this Assembly. This was done partly to assist the individual in his fight against rising prices, and partly to decrease the portion of the individual's income which is appropriated by the private sector, in order to give the private sector more manoeuverability.

I intend at a later session to introduce comprehensive tax legislation which should be to the advantage of individuals as well as companies, but which will be particularly aimed at the general stimulation of commerce in this Territory."

The Standing Committee for Taxation Policy recommended, and these recommendatoins have been accepted by the Council of Ministers, that the objectives which should be achieved are as follows:

a) the stimulation of economic growth

b) the establishment of new undertakings

c) the creation of employment opportunities

d) the encouragement of private home ownership

e) the promotion of education and training, and

f) attracting skilled manpower to South West Africa/-Namibia and retaining those already here.

The income tax relating to individuals has been substantially altered in that the present maximum marginal rate of tax is only 39% compared with the 50 percent previously in force and which rate is still applicable in SA.

In addition a system which is the envy of most developed countries has been introduced whereby the incomes of married couples are taxed separately although they will still submit a combined return and receive one assessment.

It is clear that this is a tax system designed to act as an incentive to improve economic performance and to encourage the optimal use of all available sources of experienced and skilled labour.

Q: Can you tell us a little more of what the Administrator-General indicated?

A: In the first case the AG mentioned an additional abatement of R1 000 in respect of housing. This is applicable to any taxpayer who, during the year of assessment, was the owner of a house or a residential apartment in terms of the Sectional Titles Act, 1971, in the area under control of a Local Authority in the Territory and has occupied it himself.

This abatement is designed to stimulate home ownership and is obviously not applicable to persons occupying company owned houses or apartments.

It means that married couples with children occupying their own home or apartment will only start paying tax once their combined taxable income exceeds R7 600.

The second matter that the Administrator General touched on was the allowances in respect of business assets. As an incentive to stimulate investment, expenditure incurred during the year of assessment in respect of machinery, implements, utensils and articles used by the taxpayer for the purposes of his trade, will be allowed in full as a deduction from gross income.

Expenditure on sedan cars, which fall into the category of "perks", would be specifically excluded. However, ships, aircraft, motor lorries, taxis and hire cars would fall within the scope of the deduction.

It is also provided that the income tax value of any of the aforegoing items at the date of coming into force of the provision, will be allowed as if it were incurred in the year of assessment ending after that date.

The depreciation of motorcars excluded from the allowance above will be allowed in the manner as to herebefore.

This incentive is expected to be a major stimulant for the establishment of new enterprises, as well as the upgrading of the equipment and plant of existing enterprises. The present South African system of initial allowances, investment allowances and other allowances which favour investment in certain types of industries above those of other commercial undertakings or in specific geographical areas will fall away. In future the free enterprise system will determine without tax preference which areas of business are the most beneficial.

The Administrator-General also mentioned allowances in respect of buildings. These apply in respect of buildings used by the taxpayer for the purpose of his trade. The tax authorities will allow a deduction of 20% of the cost of erection of a building in the year in which it is brought into use and 4 percent of the cost thereafter. Buildings existing at the date of the coming into force of this provision only qualify for the 4 percent allowance for the unexpired balance of twenty years since erection.

In the past only buildings used for purposes of manufacture and hotels qualified for any allowances. Under the new system, factory buildings, office buildings and residential buildings will all qualify as long as they are used by the taxpayer for the purposes of his trade.

This allowance in respect of buildings must again be seen as a very definite stimulant for the private sector to relieve the so-called office shortage, as well as the acute housing shortage in the territory. The 20 percent initial allowance will free the investor of tax for a considerable period and the 4 percent allowance will assist to reduce the level of tax for some considerable time thereafter.

Q: The question has been asked as to when these provisions will come into force. Are you in a position to provide this information?

A: The intention is that the provisions will be applicable to the taxation of individuals for the year of assessment ending February 28, 1982. In the case of companies, the provisions will take effect for any year of assessment ending after February 28, 1982. Eg, if a company's year of assessment ends on February 28, 1982, none of the allowances will be applicable, but if its year of assessment ends on March 1, 1982 and any date thereafter, it will be entitled to the allowances.

Q: Are there any other matters which the AG did not touch on which you can make public at this stage?

A: Yes, there are a number of other matters which are proposed in the new tax law.

Firstly, in order to streamline the tax collection system, it will not be necessary for persons earning income from dividends and interest not exceeding R200 and salaries which in total do not exceed R8 000, to render an income tax return.

Another change is that the deduction in respect of dividends has been fixed at 33 1/3 percent in respect of all amounts and that the sliding scale previously in forces has been abolished.

Q: In his speech in Tsumeb recently, the Chairman of the Chamber of Mines, Mr Craig Gibson, pleaded for tax assistance in relation to money spent by mining companiers particularly on education and training. Does the new law provide for any relief in this regard?

A: Although the State is very much aware of the importance and benefits of education and training, yet, following the spirit of private enterprise ideals as stated previously, the new tax law does not wish to prescribe to anyone in the private sector whether they should divert their resources to the education and training of individuals, or to mechanisation.

It is believed that private enterprise will decide on what their priorities are and where they ultimate interest lies. If they believe that an investment in education and training will be to the benefit of their company, or to the country as a whole, which will directly or indirectly affect them, they will be free to do so. It is felt however that the monitoring of training and education allowances will place an additional burden on already overtaxed State Departments to ensure that advantage is not taken of such allowances. The law, however, allows deductions for amounts donated to the Central Revenue Fund for the advancement of education and training.

It is felt that in the proposals for the new Income Tax law great strides have been made to provide the appropriate economic climate for the private sector to fulfil all its aims and ideals. There are no constraints as to the areas in which it can develop and there are no incentives favouring one type of endeavour over the other. We firmly believe that the environment created is as close as possible to the perfect climate.

KLOPPERS BACKS AWAY FROM KERINA COALITION

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 2 Nov 81 p 4

[Text]

MR ANDREW Kloppers, leader of the Liberal Party will not be joining the newly-formed Namibia Democratic Coalition, it emerged at a press conference called by the NDC in Windhoek recently.

One of the key persons in the Coalition which was launched in Athens earlier this year and formally established in Windhoek this month, Mr Andrew Kloppers' relations with the four-party Coalition has apparently soured, according to remarks made during last week's press conference.

There is presently also speculation that Kaptein Hans Diergaardt, leader of the Baster Bevryders Party and head of the Rehoboth Government, will not be joining the Coalition which he helped to bring about in the initial phases.

According to Kaptein Diergaardt, however, the linking of his Party with the Coalition will be decided shortly, depending on the resolution on a number of constitutional problems.

A spokesman for the Coalition said at the press conference that the NDC's final constitution was in the process of being completed.

Mr Getzen Kerina, also known as Professor Murumba Kerina, was installed as the first President of the Coalition at this month's founding congress of the NDC.

Mr Michael Narib of the Namibia Young Pioneers, previously affiliated to the DTA, for a brief while, was elected Vice-President.

EXECUTIVE MEMBERS

Other executives of the Coalition include Mr R G Uazunkuanye of Nudo Progressive as second Vice-President and Mr Johannes Karuaihe, leader of the Herero Opposition Nudo Progressive as National Chairman of the Coalition. The Secretary General is Mr L Kairabeb, Mr S D Isaacks of the Namibia Progressive Party is Secretary for Publicity and Information, Mr N Karuaihe, Secretary for Finance and Mr G Lehoho, Secretary for Clerical Affairs.

Secretary for Foreign Affairs is Mr P Tjiueza, Vice-Secretary Mr E Tjerije, Secretary for Youth J McNab and Secretary for Labour Mr E Kaveterua.

In addition there is an organisational secretariat consisting of 11 persons, and three international representatives, at the UN, Washington and in Australia.

INSTRUCTIONS FROM SWA

It was explained at the press conference that directives and instructions within the Coalition would emanate from inside SWA to the external wing.

The Coalition did issue membership cards but its controlling executive was composed of elected representatives of the various political parties which made up the Coalition.

The Coalition was not specifically intended to be an opposition to the DTA, although it accepted the UN Resolution 435 as it stood.

Any modifications to the plan would be considered on merit, it was explained.

FORGE AHEAD

Replying to questions on the financial affairs of the Coalition, it was said that the Coalition would forge ahead with its political programme regardless.

"The Coalition does not have any money problems," explained Mr Johannes Karuaihe.

The Coalition will be included in the present round of consultations between the Contact Group and the internal parties.

Asked why the Coalition met so often in Greece, Mr Karuaihe explained that Namibians living in Europe preferred the warm weather there to meet in a congenial atmosphere to discuss the country's problems.

BARNES CLAIMS NO DISCRIMINATION AGAINST COLOREDS

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 3 Nov 81 p 4

[Text]

MR BARNEY Barnes, Chairman of the Coloured Executive Committee, denied this week that there was any discrimination against Coloured officials in the Administration for Coloureds.

Addressing a press conference, Mr Barnes said that the White officials at present still employed in the Administration would retain their positions and would be promoted to higher positions if and when there were sufficient qualified Coloureds to fill their posts.

"I would like to see the Coloured Administration manned with the best officials availabale. Only the best are employed at present and the only yardstick is qualification — not the colour of the skin," Mr Barnes said.

Referring to a statement made by the Secretary General of the National Independence Party, Mrs Othillie Abrahams to the effect that military service in the Territory should be scrapped, Mr Barnes said that Mrs Abrahams was "playing with fire" by inciting the Coloured people to oppose military service. He said that the Coloured people had expressed their willingness to contribute to the defence of SWA by encouraging their sons to join the SWA Territory Force.

"The Coloureds," Mr Barnes said "are not divided on this issue. Mrs Abrahams has only influenced some close friends around her and not the Coloured people as a whole."

LABOR PARTY WILL FOCUS ON COLOREDS' ROLE

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 3 Nov 81 p 4

[Text]

A CONSTITUTIONAL educational process, political awareness and greater unity among the Coloureds within the framework of the DTA will be aspects highlighted in the near future when the first congress of the Coloured Labour Party is held from November 5 to 7.

Mr Barney Barnes, the leader of the Labour Party announced this week that for the first time since it's inception, the party was going to have a congress specifically aimed at discussing the role of the Coloured in a future SWA.

He said that the Coloured people in the rural areas in particular would be involved in this educational process and other matters that would be discussed were greater unity amongst the Coloured people and generating a new political awareness against the Coloureds as an ethnic group.

He said that progress had already been made in establishing branches or cells in Khomasdal and within a day or two it was expected that there would be six in existence.

In addition, he said there were already three additional branches of the Labour Party established in the rural areas.

These cells, he said, had been established on request from the inhabitants of Aroab, Bethanien and Stampriet after they had been informed of the Labour Party's activities.

REVIVAL OF UNITY

Mr Barnes referred to a "spirit of unity" a sort of survival of unity that had become evident in the Coloureds of the Territory and said that the Labour Party and DTA was sure of 80 percent support from the Coloured people.

"But with further offensives, we plan to have the 100 percent backing of the Coloureds."

He added that for the first time a whole congress would be open to the press.

"We have involved various experts to discuss communism and democracy and Mr Klaus Wolff of the Institute of Social Studies will be delivering an address on these tow subjects."

Another of the guest speakers at the congress will be the Editor of Die Republikein, Dr Jan Spies.

KALANGULA SUMMARILY REJECTS AG 8

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 29 Oct 81 pp 1-2

[Text]

THE INTERIM constitution in SWA, AG 8, was summarily rejected yesterday by the President of the DTA, Mr Peter Kalangula.

This emerged in an interview with the SA Press Association and follows reports in The Advertiser during the past few days that all is not well within DTA ranks over the question of ethnicity.

The Advertiser reported last week that severe differences had emerged in the top echelons of the DTA over the emphasis that should be placed on ethnicity in an independent Namibia.

It is understood that on the one side are those who would like to retain AG 8 in much of its present form while there are others who would like to reconcile ethnic government with geographical bases where possible.

At Rehoboth during the weekend DTA Chairman Mr Mudge rejected that the issue threatened a split within DTA ranks, but he confirmed that differences do emerge within the alliance's ranks from time to time.

Mr Mudge did not however say whether the aforementioned issue was a serious issue of contention, but he rejected the geographical arguments.

By way of asking questions, Mr Mudge wanted to know if the establishment of geographical bases meant that SWA would in future have to have four levels of government.

Then out of the blue yesterday, Mr Kalangula, when asked to comment on the Western five constitutional document, said that he preferred it to AG 8. The Western five document makes no reference to ethnicity but does suggest the establishment of geographical authorities at the second level of government.

STRAIGHT FORWARD

"I find no fault with this document. I feel it is quite straight forward," Mr Kalangula said in an interview with Sapa in Windhoek."

He was speaking hours before the scheduled arrival of a delegation of the Western Contact Group for consultations with political leaders in Windhoek.

Asked about the absence of ethnic safeguards in the Western plan, Mr Kalangula said the constitutoinal guidelines were "in the interests of the Namibian people as a whole."

"I prefer this to (Proclamation) AG 8."

Proclamation AG 8 serves as an interim constitution for SWA. The legislation provides for the constitution of a first-tier central government and second-tier ethnic authorities with jurisdiction over health and education among their functions of administration.

IN FAVOUR OF CHANGE

Mr Kalangula emphasised that he was presenting his personal views and added he was in favour of change in SWA.

"I cannot say how other DTA members will respond" in discussions with representatives of the Western Contact Group.

"Things are not as I want to see them in an independent Namibia."

Of ethnic authorities, Mr Kalangula said that when the Western initiative approached the implementation date of UN Security Council Resolution 435 "some things will have to go.

"Among them are aspects of AG 8 in view of Resolution 435."

UN Resolution 435 provides for the abolition of all remaining discriminatory measures before the various political parties begin their election campaigns in the run-up to independence.

"But I would like to see things go, even if Resolution 435 is not implemented" Mr Kalangula said.

Mr Kalangula said a major issue that remained to be resolved in the next phase of the western peace initiative was the composition of the UN peace-keeping force to oversee elections.

Unless members of the UN forces were selected with care, there would be no way of knowing whether the UN task force contained Swapo members.

"The composition of Untag is a very important issue," he said. — WA & Sapa

NEWSPAPER WITHDRAWS TRUST IN WESTERN DELEGATION

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 2 Nov 81 pp 1-2

[Editorial]

[Text] We don't trust the Western delegation that visited Windhoek late last week further than we can see it, if Friday's press conference is anything to go by.

This newspaper had given the delegation a fairly good write-up until then, but we certainly have our doubts now.

The two spokesmen were US Assistant Secretary for Africa, Dr Chester Crocker, and British Government representative, Sir Leonard Allison.

They were cynical, sarcastic, uncooperative and negative.

Few, if any, questions were properly answered.

Dr Crocker declined to elucidate on the significance of the latest Western proposals in the latest Western strategy and Sir Leonard declined to explain Nigeria's role in the initiative.

All that Sir Leonard had to say was: "You obviously don't do your homework!"

Looking at the situation anew, we can't help feeling that the presentation of the proposals is a major attempt to deflect the SA Government and the internal parties attention from the real stumbling blocks, namely the lack of UN impartiality and dubious circumstances in which a UN-supervised election may be implemented.

And as far as Nigeria is concerned, it is not a Frontline state, it has no direct interest in the Namibian issue (except to capitalise on it by being anti-SA and anti the internal parties), it has shown no desire to be co-operative (always threatening sanctions) and the Western five are afraid of it because of its economic muscle.

The aforementioned notwithstanding, Dr Crocker has shown considerable good to date and he needs to be encouraged to pursue the path he has set out on. But equally, one needs to be extremely careful that he is not an instrument of deception and that he does not succeed in buying our souls.

As for Sir Leonard, the Afrikaner saying applies: You can never trust an Englishman in the dark.

Sir Leonard will have to go a long way before we believe the contrary.

PURPOSE OF DTA-SA MEETING NOT CLEAR

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 4 Nov 81 pp 1-2

[Editorial]

[Text]

FOREIGN Minister Mr Pik Botha made three significant points at his press conference at SWA House yesterday afternoon:

- That there was no tension between the SA Government and the DTA;
- That AG 8 (the country's interim constitution) was not fully discussed at yesterday's meeting between the SA Government delegation and the DTA delegation;
- And that the media should stop speculating about the aforementioned points.

These points come to us as a considerable surprise and suggest that Mr Botha is ignorant and naive about what is being said in DTA circles or that the DTA is talking through its hat or that it has caught a dose of cold feet.

DTA leaders have said time and again during the past few weeks that they oppose AG 8 vehemently and that if it is not changed soon, the AG Mr Danie Hough will hand SWA to Swapo on a golden platter in a UN-supervised election.

There have also been charges by members of the Ministers Council that Mr Johan Fick's appointment as Director of Interstate Relations and Information was foisted on the interim DTA Administration. The strong objections were reported in this newspaper yesterday.

If these issues don't pose a confrontation path, then goodness alone knows what do.

On the other hand, what do we find yesterday?

A meeting took place between the SA and DTA delegations respectively, but the DTA delegation did not include DTA President Peter Kalangula and Council of Ministers' Chairman Mr Dirk Mudge and AG 8 was hardly touched on in the discussions.

Now, for heaven's sake, what's that all about?

And how can we not stop speculating, even though the overall picture looks confused?

We can only deduce that the DTA heavyweights (Dr Ben Africa excluded) got cold feet, or that there was a deliberate snub of the SA Government delegation (which Mr Botha denies) or that the DTA doesn't have a case at all.

Whatever it is, we wish we knew.

It is perhaps worth noting that the last time a DTA delegation met a SA Cabinet delegation, the DTA delegation included the full Ministers' Council plus Messrs Kalangula, Barnie Barnes and Johan de Waal.

It could of course be argued that the sole purpose of yesterday's discussions was to talk about the Western constitutional proposals, and no more.

Fair enough. But it is nevertheless strange that the DTA still didn't use the opportunity to get stuck into the SA Government about AG 8.

Indeed, we don't have SA Cabinet delegations visiting SWA everyday!

There may however be a slight twist to it all, and it is perhaps unfair for the DTA to accuse Mr Hough of being stubborn about the need to change AG 8, in spite of the consequences that may emerge.

AG 8 is the manifestation of an agreement between the DTA and Aktur and was originally engineered by former AG Dr Gerrit Viljoen. It was furthermore drawn up in consultation with both parties and both parties endorsed it. To expect Mr Hough to turn his back on one or the other party at this stage is perhaps a bit much.

This could well be the reason that the DTA delegation did not feel qualified to slam the SA Government.

And as for Mr Johan Fick, nobody knows what was said.

LUEDERITZ FIRM PROCESSES, MARKETS SEAWEED

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 28 Oct 81 p 5

[Text]

A SWA COMPANY that established itself at Lüderitz earlier this year to collect seaweed is now supplying export markets and has expanded its activities into other fields.

Mr K W G Rotmann, Managing Director of Taurus Chemicals Namibia said at the official opening of a sister company, Taurus Maintenance Products Namibia in Windhoek last night that the Lüderitz-based company now had a staff of 72 people.

"We have plans to expand," he said, "but we are experiencing some difficulty in getting people to Lüderitz. The local people already have jobs."

The seaweed, which is used largely in the food textile industries, is exported in part directly from Lüderitz to overseas markets and to Transkei where it is processed and re-exported.

The processed extracts or red seaweed are used in the manufacture of gelatine, sweets, preserved meats, marmalade and brown kelp extracts are used in ice cream, beer, textiles and dyes.

"We are taking only the seaweed that washes to the beaches so as not to disturb the ecology of the sea," said Mr Rotmann, who went to school at Lüderitz.

The new Windhoek-based company, Taurus Maintenance Products, distributes industrial cleaning products that are manufactured at Lüderitz from raw materials imported from South Africa and overseas.

"We are very pleased that out attempt to establish both a manufacturing and distributing industry locally has been successful — as is being proved even at this early stage," he said.

The sales manager of the company in Windhoek, Mr Günther Kuhn, said that in addition to its own products, the company also acts as an agent for other manufacturers of industrial cleaning materials.

PRESIDENT SAYS POPULATION'S FOOD NEEDS WILL BE MET

Niamey LE SAHEL in French 23 Oct 81 pp 1, 3, 4

[Interview with Colonel Seyni Kountche, chief of state of Niger, by LE SAHEL: "Niger Will Meet the Food Needs of the Population," on 22 Oct 81]

> [Text] Colonel Seyni Kountche, the chief of state, gave the results of the harvest during a press conference yesterday. It emerges from the remarks of the president of the CMS [Supreme Military Council] that, despite the cold sweats and worries caused by capricious rainfall, the results of the harvest were at an acceptable level. The chief of state, who assessed the food needs, stated that Niger will be able to meet its obligation to feed its inhabitants better and to preserve the health of its cattle.

[Question] Mr. President, you have just completed a study tour through the various departments of our country. Can you give us the details of the situation of Niger with regard to agriculture, forestry, and cattle-raising?

[Answer] Let us speak first of the amount of rainfall over the territory as a whole. The rains were sometimes early and sometimes late, and followed by two interruptions, two of which were significant, the beginning of the first 2 weeks of August and during the month of September. Over the territory as a whole, these rains yielded a low volume of water compared with 1980. Here and there a rainfall deficit ranging from 10 to 50 percent has been registered.

The department most affected by the deficit was that of Diffa. The favorable factors which compensated for this deficit were that the rains, with the exception of the department of Diffa, were well distributed in space and time. The final fortunate factor compared with last year was that the rains were prolonged to the beginning of October.

The low volume and the interruption caused attacks here and there on the seedlings. These attacks coincided with periods of interruption, and one can say that, thanks to the activity of the field cadres and the population, these attacks were overcome to a certain extent despite their intensity.

Let us turn now to production. The total production of millet and sorghum we estimate at 1,635,468 tons, whereas this production was 1,749,150 tons during 1980. So we showed a drop of around 6 percent.

One must separate what one calls the disposable production from this gross production. Disposable production of millet and sorghum, excluding the replenishment of the peasants' granaries and losses which occurred during the harvest, is estimated at 1,390,180 tons, whereas in 1980 this same disposable production was estimated at 1,488,580 tons.

In addition, taking into account our demographic growth, which is about 2.7 percent year in, year out, we have to produce a supplement of at least 37,000 tons. Starting then with a Nigerien population estimated at 5,824,560 inhabitants, cattle-raisers, and farmers, and on the basis of 250 kilograms per year and per agricultural inhabitant, and on the basis of 200 kilograms from our cattle-raising compatriots, we need 1,405,560 tons of millet and sorghum. Niger will have a deficit of about 15,500 tons from the harvest just completed.

This concerns the production of millet and sorghum. If one considered that the Nigeriens nourished themselves only with millet and sorghum, we would really have a deficit of 15,500 tons. But the Nigeriens do not eat just millet and sorghum. There is also rice. We estimate our rice production, counting both the production from the modernized operations and traditional crops, to be 38,315 tons, while this production was estimated at 32,000 tons last year. But of this 38,000 tons, we can count on a disposable production of only 20,000 tons. But rice consumption is rising in Niger, and during 1982 we will have to import at least 60,000 tons of rice to satisfy the needs of the population. In any case, Niger remains an importer of rice. Since our production of wheat is nil, we estimate our consumption needs for 1982 of wheat flour at 20,000 tons, which we must necessarily import.

When I spoke a little while ago of a deficit, the harvests were not equal across the board in all the regions of Niger. And almost 1,563 villages were affected by the deficit, comprising a population of 814,378 inhabitants. This deficit varies between 10 and 50 percent, but some details must be added with regard to this population of 814,378. This population includes all of our compatriots who do not work in agriculture. You have one-third the population of the department of Diffa, all the population of Agandez, and one-third the population of the department of Tahoua, to which must be added between 5 and 10 percent of Niamey's population, which explains the fact that, in our search for food self-sufficiency, we are behind by about 6 percent. And, if Niger should really be self-sufficient, this assumes that we can every year come up with the 37,000 to 40,000 tons necessary to satisfy our demographic increase and, in addition, satisfy the total needs of the cattle-raisers, who are not farmers.

But one can reflect on an increase in our production of beans. While bean production was only about 260,000 tons in 1980, we estimate it to be 267,000 tons in 1982. The same is true for an increase in the production of peanuts. But we are contemplating a stabilized production of cotton, although we have a textile industry here and there. Our good peasants have preferred--and this encourages us--to emphasize food crops rather than industrial crops.

That is the agricultural situation. As for the situation in cattle-raising, the nature of the precipitation is linked to the development of our cover of vegetation. To satisfy the needs of our animals, we describe our pastures as a whole as passable, with, nevertheless, some points of stress and severity in the department of Diffa. This means that, if we are to protect our animals from painful situations, which are most severe during the preharvest food shortage, we are obliged to import or to place at the disposal of the cattle-raisers about 5,000 tons of cottonseed and wheat bran. What, then, is retained from agricultural and cattle harvest?

The season gave us the cold sweats in the beginning, in the middle, and toward the end. And, despite a start which was timid and worrisome, the harvest in cattle and agriculture is being completed on an acceptable level. This is the result of the effective perseverance of our good peasants, who did not let themselves become discouraged. But it is also the fruit of the efforts of the field cadres who, with the means at their disposal, overcame the enemies of the crops. But, it is nevertheless appropriate to note to some people that we have just celebrated World Food Day. This should inspire in us a determination to preserve and protect what we have produced. In the case of millet, sorghum, and beans, this means avoiding wastage; and, in the case of pastures, it means covering fires in the bush.

In all these cases, whether it concerns a deficit of 15,000 tons or 5,000 tons of cattle feed, with or without the participation of the international community, Niger will be able to meet its obligations to feed its inhabitants better and preserve the health of its cattle.

[Question] Mr. President, during this tour, you informed the cadres of the closing of the OPVN [Nigerien Foodstuffs Office] for 6 months, that is, from November to May. What are the reasons which led you to make this decision and could you give us some details about it?

[Answer] The Nigerien Foodstuffs Office was created for very specific purposes. First of all, to combat speculation; secondly, to intervene on behalf of the laboring people when and where necessary. We have noticed during the past 2 years--and it is our own fault--that the OPVN has acted like a business establishment, like any seller of cereals, and we have in mind the difficult moments which we had to go through in June and July, a period which reached its maximum in August, when we saw the price of millet reach a price never before equalled. If, among the reasons for the sharp rise in the price of cereals--millet, sorghum, and rice--we find a link to the rise in an internationally known currency, one must also say that it was because we had not maintained the intervention strategy of the OPVN.

Because of this, the OPVN must return to its primary task of 2 years ago, namely: the OPVN should, before intervening on behalf of the population, have sufficient stocks in its warehouses, and this period of intervention will be in May. Secondly, this is the period during which the sellers of cereals engage in speculation. It is, therefore, the period when we want the OPVN to intervene to break this speculation and impose a price which is quite satisfactory to comsumers, agents of the state, or private persons as a whole. During the difficult times which begin in August and May and which end, year in, year out, around the middle of August, we want the OPVN to possess enough grain in its warehouses to be able to set a more realistic price--which was not the case last year--in order to be able to intervene.

Some measures will be taken henceforth. For example, 60,000 tons of rice are necessary to satisfy the food needs of the population during 1982. Thanks to our cooperation with Saudi Arabia, we have already signed an agreement placing at the disposal of Niger $15 million to be able to import 30,000 tons. The operation is already under way. Nor did we wait to inject almost a billion into the peasantry and some at the present moment to take steps with regard to certain orders. This means that, on the average, we have about 30,000 tons of worghum or millet at the present time in the warehouses of the OPVN.

[Question] Mr. President, during this same tour you said that "we must review our philosophy of cattle-raising or we will risk losing a good part of our cattle." In what direction should this new philosophy be oriented?

[Answer] It has been proven that the Sahel region is the victim of drought every 4 or 5 years. There is a decrease in rainfall, which causes a poor development of the vegetation cover. Thank God, due to the efforts of the state, supported by international cooperation, the Nigerien cattle herd has been completely reestablished. Let us also not forget our population increase. We long ago exceeded the northern limits of crops.

Part of the space which had been reserved for pasture is, therefore, already reserved for agriculture. There is an effective reduction of the area reserved or destined for pasture. Against this shrinkage of area there is an increase in the number of cattle. If there is a drought or lack of rainfall, as in the case of the department of Diffa, compared with the others, we will suffer a useless loss of cattle. Furthermore, from the moment when a country possesses a national asset, this asset should be of benefit to all through the social measures taken by the government. Hence, the suppression of the capitation tax, which caused problems for the population. There is also the problem of inflation. Chicken, for example, cannot be bought at the price of 6 or 7 years ago, so that the people, whether farmers or especially cattle-raisers, do not need to sell their animals to satisfy their minor necessities.

The developed countries have infrastructures which, in the event of preharvest food shortage, enable them to avoid the useless loss of cattle. This is why, during this tour, I said that we should think of a philosophy, namely, going beyond the multiplication centers which we have created, but the cattle-raisers would also have to start saving. It would not be necessary for the animals to become a form of saving, but the animals can become a form of saving in another way. Paradoxically, there are problems in supplying meat to the city of Niamey as in the large towns of Niger. And, during this time, no one wants to get rid of his sheep, his goat, his kid, or even his ox.

This is why we launched this idea, which should be the subject of mature study and reflection on our part--namely with regard to the measures which the state should take. We should also encourage the owners of animals, even in the case of lack of pasture, not to lose them uselessly.

After the audience, Col Tavares de Souza told newsmen that he conferred with the head of state on the preparation of the next meeting of heads of state and government of the ANAD, which will take place at the same time with the CEAO conference on 14 and 15 December 1981 in Dakar, Senegal. Talking on that meeting, Mr Tavares de Souza said documents have already been submitted to ANAD ministers for them to discuss. Subsequently, the documents will be examined by the ANAD summit. Col Tavares de Souza said he presented the documents to the head of state, President Seyni Kountche, for him to make suggestions. Apparently, after the upcoming summit, the pact will become effective, he said. Colonel de Souza and the head of state also discussed the possible problems which the implementation of the pact could imply for Niger. INTERVIEW WITH DIOUF ON TIES WITH GAMBIA, ANGOLA

PM091003 Paris AFRIQUE-ASIE in French 28 Sep-11 Oct 81 pp 8-11

[Interview with Senegal's President Abdou Diouf by Ginette Cot: "Abdou Diouf's Senegal"--date and place not given]

[Excerpt] [Question] There are still a number of outstanding questions relating to events in the Gambia. For instance, there is the question of the extent to which the declaration by the perpetrators of the Bamjul coup of their adhesion to Marxism determined your decision to make a military intervention in the Gambia.

Abdou Diouf: The answer is self-evident. I would not have allowed several Marxist parties to exist legally within my country if I was an avowed enemy of Marxism per se. Senegal's military intervention in the Gambia was decided at the request of the legal Banjul government and was in keeping with the defense agreements signed between the two countries....

[Question] Despite the specific nature of the Gambian problem but in view of some precedents (including the dispatch of a Senegalese contingent to Zaire during the Shaba war), are you not afraid, after the Banjul intervention, that some people, especially in some neighboring countries, might suspect Senegal of having expansionist or interventionist tendencies?

Abdou Diouf: We can give formal assurances on this subject. Senegal has enough problems without in addition intervening in other states' affairs. And above all we have principles on this subject on which we will not compromise. It was in response to the international community's appeal that we sent troops to Lebanon within the framework of the UN interim force in Lebanon. And it was because we deemed that foreign intervention was taking place in the affairs of a friendly country that we sent a military contingent to Shaba....

But I can take this opportunity, through your magazine, to fully reassure all my neighbors about Senegal's intentions toward them.

[Question] A plan has been announced to form a confederation between the Gambia and Senegal. Can you tell us how this plan will be implemented in practical terms at this stage?

Abdou Diouf: We have reached agreement with President Jawara on the need to set up a confederation between the two countries in the present situation--and this is the least that can be done. The plan is being studied by ministerial experts from the two capials. It will then be studied by the heads of state and submitted to public opinion either via the National Assembly or directly by means of a referendum. It is still too early to give any further details.

[Question] At the same time as innovations have been recorded on the domestic plane, there seem to have been signs of a change in the sphere of Senegalese foreign policy. Signs of a rapproachement with Algeria have been observed. Can you tell us what are the main guidelines of Senegalese diplomacy today? Can you also tell us, in particular, what position you take on developments in the West Sahara problem?

Abdou Diouf: From the start we have declared our intention to strengthen our traditional friendships and expand our circle of friends. We do not have any dispute with any country. We intend to develop a policy of close cooperation with Algeria. We agree on all the major questions. There is only one difference of opinion between the two capitals (Algiers and Dakar): It concerns the West Saharan problem, which we leave out of our bilateral meetings.

In general Senegal is pursuing an open and truly nonaligned policy--a policy which strives to contribute to safeguarding peace and security in Africa. We are active in all causes which work and militate to restore peace rapidly to Northwest Africa and we welcomed the Moroccan king's speech at the OAU summit in Nairobi with relief. We are encouraged by the results of the OAU ad hoc committee and we want a rapid implementation of the measures decided on in order to restore peace to that region.

"As you were able to observe, we strongly condemned the recent armed attacks launched by South Africa against Angola, whose existence as a state we recognize. We cannot be indifferent to anything which affects an African country.

[Question] Can Senegal be expected to take a step further and recognize the Luanda government?

Abdou Diouf: This is a matter of principle for us. As long as Cuban troops are in Angola we will feel that there is still a doubt about the Luanda government's real control over Angolan territory. In our opinion, things would have been clearer if it had been possible to find a basis for agreement with the other political forces. Otherwise it is possible to have the impression that it is the Cuban presence which is maintaining the Luanda government by keeping out of the other forces. It is true that there is a chronological problem with regard to the facts. During the Nairobi summit I had talks with an Angolan leader, Interior Minister Alexandre Rodrigues. He told me that it was the South African and Zairian troops which started the war in 1975 when the popular movement for the liberation of Angola was already in Luanda. Of course, the others, like the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola [UNITA] say the opposite....

[Question] But UNITA is supported by South Africa. And South Africa is attacking Angola. How could the Cuban troops withdraw in those conditions? Is it not a real vicious circle?

Abdou Diouf: That's true. I think we must look to the future. The Angolan problem is closely connected with the Namibian problem. All forces must be mobilized to impose a solution to the Namibian question. We are sure that once that has been done things will be clearer and the question of the Luanda government's legitimacy will lose much of its importance.

[Question] After the change of regime in France, what is the state of relations between the two countries?

Abdou Diouf: We place great hope in President Francois Mitterrand and his team. And we are sure that relations between the two countries, which are already excellent, will be developed much more. There is no doubt that cooperation will be developed, extended and expanded in all spheres....

TALKS WITH GULF LEADERS--President Abdou Douf had talks in Kuwait on October 18 with the Emir, Sheikh Jaber Al-Ahmed Al-Sabah. The talks concerned relations between Arab and African countries as well as bilateral cooperation. President Diouf was on a three-day visit. He last visited Kuwait and other Gulf states in 1979, when he was Prime Minister. Kuwait has granted loans of about $100 m. to the OMVS (the Senegal River development project) work on which is finally due to begin this month (WEST AFRICA, October 12). The biggest contributor to the project is Saudi Arabia (150m.) After Kuwait, President Diouf went to Bahrain, where he expressed "great regret" over the latest clashes between Moroccan and Polisario forces in the Western Sahara. He offered his good offices to help end the war there and said he hoped the recent fighting would not impede the peace process started at the OAU summit. President Diouf said that he had had talks with Gulf leaders on "destabilisation moves" in Africa. "Of course," the President added without elaborating, "you cannot discuss this matter without also mentioning Libya." He recalled Senegal's offer of participation in a proposed Pan-African force to replace Libyan forces in Chad. [Text] [London WEST AFRICA in English No 3352, 26 Oct 81 p 2544]

PDS COMPLAINTS, DEFECTION--In Dakar, the recently arrested members of the Parti Democratique Senegalais (PDS) have been prevented from seeing their lawyers, according to a PDS statement. The statement said that the accused were being held with common criminals and being treated worse than them. The accuseds' lawyers were being sent back from the jail to the Ministry of Justice and from there to the magistrate concerned, who could not be found. The statement accused the Justice Minister, M. Alioune Badara M'Bengue, of prejudicing their case by revealing evidence against them. Notable among those allegations was that M. Doudou Camara had admitted to being trained in Libya in intelligence, military security and sabotage (WEST AFRICA, October 19). At the opening of the second session of the National Assembly on October 12 (which will last until mid-December), Dr Amadou Cisse Dia, the President of the National Assembly, informed deputies of the suspension of parliamentary immunity and arrest of M. Camara. Two national leaders of the party and eight other members, including M. Camara (according to AFP) and eight men in total (according to government sources) are now being held, accused of attempts against the security of the State. As well as these problems another deputy, M. Youssou Diene, has defected from the PDS to the ruling Socialist Party, which leaves the PDS with only 13 deputies at the National Assembly. M. Diene said that he had left the PDS because of the "attempt against the security of the State" by members of the PDS. [Text] [London WEST AFRICA in English No 3352, 26 Oct 81 p 2544]

MDP DISAPPROVAL OF CONFEDERATION--The Democratic and Popular Movement (MDP), which is led by former Prime Minister M. Mamadou Dia, has announced its disapproval of the proposed Senegambia confederation, plans for which are now well under way. The MDP communique said that it disapproved of the confederation because it was "imposed by force of arms" and had led to the loss of many lives. COOPERATION AGREEMENTS--Senegal has signed two cooperation agreements, one with Japan and the other with West Germany. This afternoon, Ousmane Seck, our minister of economy and finance signed financial cooperation agreements with the ambassador of Japan and the Federal Republic of Germany respectively. Japan is granting Senegal 377 million yen or nearly 450 million CFA francs for the purchase of rice from Japan and payment of part of the costs for transporting the rice from Japan to Dakar. The Federal Republic of Germany is placing at the disposal of Senegal, for the period 1981-82, the sum of DM41 million to meet the government's urgent current needs in equipment. The Federal Republic of Germany has further undertaken to finance a vast program during 1981-82 to the tune of 18 billion CFA francs. [AB111927 Dakar Domestic Service in French 2000 GMT 10 Nov 81]

CONSEQUENCES OF STRIKE EXAMINED

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3351, 19 Oct 81 p 2481

[Text]

The Minister of Social Welfare and Rural Development, Mr. Thaimu Bangura and the Minister of Information and Broadcasting, Mr. J. E. Laverse, are reported to have witnessed the release of the 179 detainees who were freed in three batches. The first set to be released consisted mostly of the trade union leaders who were given back their freedom on Friday, October 2, at exactly 1 pm. The second set was released on the same Friday afternoon, and the rest on Saturday morning, writes a correspondent.

A State House release said that before the detainees were released, the following message was read to them: "It is our duty to inform you that Cabinet has decided to release you from detention as from today 2/3 October, 1981. You are reminded that the State of Emergency is still in force, and government will not hesitate to take swift action if the need arises again. It is hoped, therefore, that you will be as law-abiding as possible after your release, and that you will comport yourselves, in all respects, as responsible citizens."

The release of the detainees is viewed in political circles as a direct result of the pressures from international trade union organisations including the personal intervention of an ILO official, Mr. Komba Kono, a Sierra Leonean who paid a visit to President Stevens at State House a few days before the release of the detainees. Mr. Kono, who has been with the ILO for 20 years, is reported to have had talks with President Stevens on the industrial unrest, the detention of the labour leaders, workers' education and general industrial relations in the country. Mr. Kono is said to be a personal friend of President Stevens with whom he worked very closely in trade union circles in Sierra Leone during President Stevens' days in trade unionism. Against the background of the events of the last month, the whole episode is viewed here as a victory for the labour leaders and for the workers in Sierra Leone.

The strike did not last very long, nor did it bring the country to a standstill, but it did succeed in bringing it home very forcibly to government that underneath the passive attitude of Sierra Leoneans, there was general discontent; that the cost of day-to-day living was above the reach of the average worker, and government's overall policy had to be reviewed and its priorities looked into.

What the labour agitation and strike also achieved, if nothing else, is a general reduction in the prices of basic commodities. For example, St. Louis sugar, which was selling for Le 1.60 a packet before the strike is now Le 1 a packet. A bag of onions which for a long time was sold between Le 18 and Le 24 when it was plentiful in the market is now Le 12, and a bag of potatoes which was between Le 24 and Le 30 is now Le 14. The prices of rice, meat, tomato paste, milk, baby food, pharmaceutical products and a host of other commodities have also been considerably reduced, most of them to the pre-hosting of the OAU prices.

The strike will also achieve an earlier general election as has been announced by President Stevens, who has indicated that there will be a general election before the end of the year. And if the President's pronouncements, that the elections will be free and fair, are anything to go by, the nation may have an opportunity to elect men and women of honour and integrity who may be able to arrest the present deteriorating trends, bring sanity to the economy and put the country back on an even keel.

Indeed, the future of Sierra Leone lies in the way this general election will be conducted and the calibre of those who will form the next government.

EXPERTS WARN NATIONALISTS OF LOSS OF PRETORIA

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 13 Nov 81 p 3

[Article by Keith Abendroth]

[Text]

NEXT year's Pretoria municipal elections could see the virtually all-Nationalist — although theoretically non-political — city council unseated.

A former councillor, who is wel-known for his intimate knowledge of municipal affairs, Mr Etienne Louw said: "The Nationalists could be right down the drain if they don't come out openly and contest the election on a party political basis."

He claimed that the latest move by the Rightwing Councillor A P Denyschen to call a referendum on the city's "White" parks was a "calculated ploy to embarrass the Nationalists".

"It is yet another example of the white-anting the authority and the hold of the Nats on Pretoria. What it means is that the Rightwingers have finally thrown down the gauntlet.

So far the Progressive Federal and Herstigte Nasionale parties have announced they will enter the municipal elections actively on a party political basis.

But the National party has made no such announcement, and it is expected to do so.

Minicipal sources believe it will rely on its effective control, of the various ratepayers' associations to maintain its covert control of the 30-member city council.

Next year's election will be fought for an enlarged council of 36 members.

Mr Louw, himself a National Party member, told The Citizen: "We who are involved in local government here know full well that many of the existing 30 councillors are HNP in spirit, if not in fact card-carrying members.

"Between them and the Progressive Federal Party nominees they could take over the council.

He believed the Nationalists were "in serious trouble in the elections — not the Treurnicht Nationalists but the P W Botha Nationalists," he said.

For the Nationalists to rely on ratepayers' associations was futile.

Mr Louw said apartheid had always been enforced in Pretoria's parks in terms of an old British decree . . . until 1973.

"Then, when the South African Games were to be held on a multiracial basis in Pretoria, it became clear that the HNP could seize on the issue to embarrass the Government.

"So apartheid in the parks was dropped on paper — in legal terms but not in fact.

"What has happened since then is that apartheid is enforced in a number of parks by the council simply chaining their gates closed and banning entry to everybody.

"This is the most complete apartheid you can imagine — banning of all races," said Mr Louw.

RUMORS POINT TO MATANZIMA'S LOSS OF FAVOR

Johannesburg THE STAR in English 28 Oct 81 p 29

[Text]

President Kaizer Matanzima, dominant figure in Transkei politics for more than 20 years, has announced his retirement. What now?

Kaizer Daliwonga Matanzima (66) is to retire "in the interests of his tribe and family," according to the official announcement last week — but rumours are strong that he fell into disfavour with Pretoria and did too many rash things for South Africa's liking.

It has long been believed that the South African Government would prefer his younger brother George (62) as President and benign father figure.

But one thing is certain — if Kaizer Matanzima retires in fact and not just by pronouncement, politics in Transkei could become a whole new ball game.

Kaizer Matanzima entered politics in 1942, resigning from the Transkei Native Representative Council in 1944 to continue his law studies, and did not rejoin the "Bunga" (parliament) until 1955. He was elected Chief Minister of Transkei in 1963, becoming Prime Minister on independence in 1976.

For most of this time, but markedly since independence, a chill wind of fear has accompanied his name in Transkei. If this fear is now removed and the powers of police chief Martin Ngceba curbed, or if he is dismissed, Transkei could begin to develop a democracy more acceptable to its people and to the outside world.

Chief Matanzima's resignation leaves many questions. If his brother George succeeds him as figurehead president, the power reins will move out of the control of the Matanzima brothers altogether.

But if George Matanzima remains as Prime Minister and one of the paramount chiefs succeeds Kaizer, a Matanzima will remain comfortably at the helm of Transkei, with a figurehead president. This, probably, would be Pretoria's choice, but in Transkei nothing is certain.

It remains astonishing, with the fact of Kaizer Matanzima's impending retirement already known to the Transkei Government, as it must have been, Mr Mlonyeni should have been given the key interior portfolio, and able ministers like Ramsay Madikizela edged out and Stella Sigcau promoted sideways.

Kaizer Matanzima will no doubt be feted and honoured before he goes next February. But behind the scenes there will be many sighs of relief.

POLLS INDICATE GROWTH IN ANC SUPPORT

[Article by Helen Zille]

[Text]

AN UPSURGE in support for the African National Congress is said to be one of the major features of extensive opinion polls conducted for the Buthelezi commission of inquiry recently.

The surveys were apparently conducted on the Witwatersrand, in KwaZulu and Natal, to enable the commission to formulate a constitutional plan for Natal that was potentially acceptable to most blacks.

The opinion surveys are expected to provide some of the most significant information in the Buthelezi commission report, which will be finalised at a meeting in Durban today. It is likely to be released soon.

Popular

According to informed sources, the conclusions drawn from the opinion survey are that:

- The ANC received more popular support on the Witwatersrand than any other political grouping.
- In Natal, Chief Gatsha Buthelezi's Inkatha movement received clear majority support, but the ANC was the only other organisation with significant support.
- Inkatha also enjoyed considerable support on the Reef.
- The majority of people polled in all areas believed that ANC insurgents would receive co-operation and sympathy from most or very many blacks.
- In all regions the majority of blacks opted for one-man-one-vote in a unitary state as a "first choice" system of Government.
- However, a majority were also prepared to accept power sharing in KwaZulu and Natal.

These surveys stand in stark contrast to others conducted in the wake of the 1976 riots in Soweto, Pretoria and Durban — comparable areas to those surveyed by the Buthelezi commission.

The comprehensive post-1976 survey, conducted by the influential West German Arnold-Bergstaesser Instituut, found that Chief Buthelezi was the dominant black political personality in the country. He was preferred by 43,8% of blacks. The leaders of the African National Congress came second with 21,7% with Mr Nelson Mandela, the jailed ANC leader, being preferred by 18,6%.

Sobukwe

The remainder of support was distributed among homeland leaders, Mr Robert Sobukwe, the PAC leader who died shortly before the survey, and the black consciousness movement.

The Arnold Bergstaesser report concluded: "The outstanding political phenomenon in black urban politics is, without a doubt, Chief Gatsha Buthelezi. However, the report also warned that the readiness for conflict was growing, among urban black youth in particular.

The conclusions drawn from the opinion polls conducted this year for the Buthelezi commission indicate a strong change in mood from the poll five years ago. The most significant feature appears to be the upsurge in support for the ANC, particularly on the Witwatersrand, coupled with growing anger and militancy.

PW BOTHA REAFFIRMS GOAL OF FULL POLITICAL PARTICIPATION

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 13 Nov 81 p 7

[Text]

THE Prime Minister, asked the Business Leaders' Conference to accept that the Government was serious in its endeavour to secure effective political participation for all South Africans.

This was conditional only to maintaining sufficient stability to make possible healthy economic Development and safeguarding the principle to effective decision-making.

Mr Botha said there were differences among political parties and, he assumed, among those who had participated in the Carlton Conference on the way in which an effective political voice for all should be sought.

Whereas he did not have a mandate two years ago, he had since then obtained an overwhelming personal mandate from the electorate.

"I want to make it clear to you that I will not shrink from carrying out my duty as I and my collegues see it, in the interests of the country."

Mr Botha said he could not, however, answer for "distorted pictures" on Government policy which raised false expectations.

One often heard accusations of too much, too soon — or too little, too late. This was precisely because the necessary understanding of the complexity and sensitivity of the task of reform was lacking.

"It is necessary to take account that this is a continuing, growing process that cannot be accomplished unilaterally and overnight.

"Those who ignore the fact that we are an African State and who dictate stereotyped constitutional formular derived from Western Europe and North America for South African problems are not making any contribution."

The Government was not steering towards a unitary State with a unitary society for all in South Africa.

"However, it does realise the necessity of continuing consultation and negotiation as the only way in which constitutional development can be carried through".

As far as the RSA itself was concerned, this consultation and negotiation was taking place with many leaders of self-governing and independent States, and with community leaders in the Republic.

As regarded independent States and those on the threshold of independence, the Government had already announced its firm intentions, and had taken steps, to enter into negotiations with them on the creation of a Confederation of States.

"It is by no means the aim to make those States subordinate to the RSA, but to create interstatal structures for orderly co-operation in respect of our many common interests in the economic, social, technological and security spheres," Mr Botha said.

NP VERLIGTES, VERKRAMPTES BATTLE EACH OTHER

[Article by Chris Freimond]

[Text]

BITTER infighting between verligtes and verkramptes in the National Party has flared again — on the eve of the party's crucial Transvaal congress opening in Pretoria tomorrow.

And the quarrel has spread to the pro-Government Perskor newspaper group, where there has been a clash between a verligte editor and the verkrampte chairman of the company.

The whole issue could erupt tomorrow morning at an important pre-congress head committee meeting of the Transvaal NP in Pretoria.

At this meeting, strategy — said to have been discussed at last month's meeting — to remove Mr Fanie Botha, Minister of Manpower, from the vice-chairmanship of the party, and to discredit Dr Gerrit Viljoen, Minister of Education, could be employed.

And it is possible Dr Andries Treurnicht, Transvaal NP leader and head of the verkrampte faction, will confront the Prime Minister's reformist ideology head on when he opens the congress tomorrow afternoon.

He hinted at this when he told Die Vaderland last week that he planned to talk about policy matters in his opening address.

The Prime Minister, Mr P W Botha, is expected to come under heavy fire from delegates.

A number of resolutions to be discussed under the Prime Minister's Department make it clear the NP in the Transvaal wants definite lines drawn between acceptable reforms and those it will not tolerate.

These include:

- That the congress expresses unambiguous opposition to a common voters' roll for whites, coloureds and Indians and resolves that legislation never be passed to allow it;
- That Mr Botha spell out "clearly" what he means by "normalising and moving away from discrimination";
- That ambiguous and vague political pronouncements that create uncertainty be replaced by "unafraid, direct and purposeful politics".

Tensions

In the past week, tensions between the Cape-based NP "reformists" led by the Prime Minister and the Transvaal "traditionalists" under Dr Treurnicht, have been greatly heightened.

Among aggravating factors were Press reports of a secret meeting last month at which Dr Treurnicht and 21 Transvaal MPs discussed plans to break the influence in the party of the more verligte Transvaal Cabinet Ministers, including Mr Fanie Botha, Mr Pik Botha and Dr Viljoen.

And at a public meeting at Nylstroom in Dr Treurnicht's Waterberg constituency, a Treurnicht lieutenant, Mr Daan van der Merwe, MP for Rissik, scathingly attacked "assassins" in political, academic and journalistic circles.

This was interpreted in the Afrikaans Press yesterday as a "declaration of war" on certain people within the NP who were critical of Dr Treurnicht's opposition to reforms contemplated by Mr P W Botha.

Dr Treurnicht and his close confidant and Cabinet colleague, Dr Ferdie Hartzenberg, were the only Ministers at Nylstroom.

Clash

The latest development exacerbating tension was a clash between Mr Harald Pakendorf, verligte editor of Die Vaderland, and Mr Marius Jooste, verkrampte chairman of its publishers, Perskor, over whether or not to publish a report of last month's secret meeting of the Treurnicht camp.

Mr Pakendorf said yesterday he was not prepared to discuss internal company matters. Mr Jooste described reports of the clash as "nonsense".

However, it is understood that when news of the secret meeting was leaked and journalists questioned Dr Treurnicht about it, he phoned Mr Jooste — who then confronted Mr Pakendorf.

After all the MPs said to have been present at the meeting denied it, it was decided not to publish a report.

But last Thursday, in an interview with Die Vaderland, Dr Treurnicht denied there had been a secret meeting to plot against other NP members. He said colleagues consulted him occasionally, resulting in "healthy unity" in the Transvaal NP.

SMEAR CAMPAIGN AGAINST TUTU REACHES EUROPE

Johannesburg SOWETAN in English 30 Oct 81 p 14

[Article by Joshua Raboroko]

[Text]

A campaign to discredit Bishop Tutu, the general secretary of the South African Council of Churches was this week reported to have reached Namibia and parts of Europe.

A pamphlet circulated in Namibia purporting to come from the "Commission of Reconciliation and Peace" appears to be aimed at creating the impression that it is of Catholic origin.

The Ecunews SACC's service reported that in the pamphlet Bishop Tutu is accused of "instigating children to boycott schools and examinations, failing to condemn violence whether the victim be the Pope or Thebehali, and pleading for the misery and starvation of black people by propagating disinvestment."

And in West Germany, a weekly magazine the "Spiegel" has claimed in an article that Bishop Tutu has misappropriated about R14 000 from funds of the SACC for building a house, according to sources close to the council.

The article also claims that as a result of the action the Bishop did not get the Nobel Peace Prize. Apparently in the article there was also a remark that Bishop Tutu had received a visa to go to Botswana.

The smear on the SACC stems from reports that Mrs Motlana, the vice-president of the SACC, received at least R7 000 to establish a shop in Soweto from a multi-million rand SACC fund created to help political detainees and their families.

They also stem from disclosure in court by Bishop Tutu that he had received R14 000 from his predecessor, Mr John Rees, who told him that the money was from an anonymous donor.

To all these accusations and smear campaign Bishop Tutu said he was "not worried" about those who were all out to discredit him nor the council, because the council was doing a "tremendous job for the community" and those who feel the council had misappropriated funds were "invited to look into our books."

Referring to the smear against him, Bishop Tutu said: "Why? why are these people worried about this little me, Tutu, are they trying to make me famous?

The Commission for Justice and Reconciliation has disassociated itself from the contents of the pamphlet and drew attention to the public statement by the Catholic Bishops in support of Bishop Tutu in April of this year.

It said the absence of a signature and address on the recent pamphlet was indication that the authors wished to make a cowardly personal attack on Bishop Tutu without the risk of being called to account for printing and distributing falsehoods and misrepresentations.

BROEDERBONDER BLASTS MYTH OF APOLITICAL GROUP

[Article by Don Marshall]

[Text] A former Broedenbonder yesterday stepped from the shadows of secrecy to refute a claim by Professor Carel Boshof that the Broederbond did not support any particular political party.

Dr Johan Gerber, of former Broeder No 4517, said he was removed as chairman of Section Staan Gereed, a local branch of the secret organisation in Pretoria, after the April General Election because he had supported the Herstigte Nasionale Party.

The Broederbond's attitude had been that he would not be able to act with impartiality in political matters as a result of his conservative political affiliations.

Prof Boshoff, chairman of the Afrikaner Broederbond, was yesterday reported in Beeld as saying that the organisation did not serve the interests of any particular political party.

In the newspaper report Prof Boshoff also denied that the Broederbond had rescinded its 1972 decision to expel members who belonged to the HNP, as reported in the MAIL last Tuesday.

Yesterday Dr Gerber described Dr Boshoff's Beeld statement about the organisation not supporting any particular party as "rubbish."

He said that he had been reluctant to go to the press regarding his resignation from the Broederbond but that Prof Boshoff's statement in the Afrikaans newspaper had left him with no other option.

He had tried to have his comments published in Beeld--"just as Prof Boshoff did"--but had been told by that newspaper's Pretoria editor to "write a letter to the editor."

This had not suited him so he had decided to approach the MAIL.

Dr Gerber yesterday released to the MAIL copies of correspondence exchanged between himself and the Borderbond since he resigned from the organisation last May.

He said his resignation followed his removal as chairman of Section Staan Gereed on April 30, this year, when he was informed by a Broeder deputation that he would also not be allowed to attend the next few meetings."

"It was initially contemplated by a member of the delegation that I, as an Action Member (Aksielid), and chairman, would not have been able to adopt a neutral posture when items with a political content came to be considered," Dr Gerber said in his letter of resignation, dated May 2.

The three-man deputation originally gave as the reason for removing him as chairman of the local branch as his association with Aksie Eie Toekoms but when Dr Gerber challenged this another member said that he had been removed because of his support for the HNP.

"I signed the nomination papers of the HNP candidates in Koedoespoort. Therefore, they decided to remove me as chairman."

Dr Gerber, who resigned from the National Party last February to join AET as its assistant secretary, could find no other reason than his association with the HNP for his removal from the chairmanship position. He said politics had played no role when he had joined the Broederbond 34 years ago.

Choose

"Membership of a political party--and specifically the NP--was not at issue when I was inducted in 1947 as a Broeder. It did, however, at a later stage emerge during canvassing as a vague prerequisite but no reference was to be found to it in documentation."

Dr Gerber said in 1972 party membership unmistakably came to the fore when HNP Broeders were required to choose between AB membership and HNP membership.

The choice was put because of the exposure of the AB's activity by supporters of the HNP within the organisation.

But Broeders sought another political haven because they no longer felt at home in the ranks of the NP.

In a letter to Prof Boshoff on September 16 Dr Gerber wrote:

"You assured me that you were in the process of drawing up a document in which the Government was warned not to go ahead with changes and reforms.

"I have never laid eyes on this document," he said.

"You and Prof Samuels agreed with me that we were on the road to destruction of the whites and with them all other groups if the integration process was pursued with."

TREURNICHT STAND REFLECTS NP POLICY

[Article by Helen Zille]

[Text]

DR ANDRIES Treurnicht, Transvaal leader of the National Party, last night took a strong Rightwing stand on NP policy, repeating his outright rejection of a single political structure for whites, coloureds and Indians.

Addressing a public meeting to mark the NP congress in Pretoria, Dr Treurnicht kept carefully within published NP policy — but managed to give an emphasis at odds with reforms favoured by Nationalist verligtes.

Delivering one of the strongly loaded "between-the-line" speeches for which he is well known, Dr Treurnicht:

- Stood firmly behind the party's 1977 consitutional proposals advocating a separate parliament for whites, coloureds and Indians — at a time when verligtes are talking about an "umbrella chamber" where the three groups could discuss matters of common concern;

Unyielding

- Took an unyielding line on the Mixed Marriages Act — at a time when many verligtes acknowledge that this law will have to be changed;
- Rejected the idea of a single department of education for all races, as recommended by the recently published De Lange Report — a suggestion some leading verligtes believe should be considered.
- Implied opposition to the appointment of other races to take unfilled public service posts for "whites" — at a time when verligtes advocate such a step.
- Spoke out strongly against "social" integration — at a time when key verligtes still support moves to scrap petty apartheid.

Dr Treurnicht skillfully avoided any hint of internal divison by describing these issues as aspects of the Progressive Federal Party's policy.

And he further strengthened his position by using quotes from statements by the Prime Minister, Mr P W Botha, and Dr Gerrit Viljoen, regarded as a leading Transvaal verligte, to support his views.

Supporting the Prime Minister's pledge to maintain "vertical differentiation", Dr Treurnicht said this meant a separate parliament for each group as recommended in the party's 1977 constitutional proposals.

"It is neither realistic, sensible, nor in the best interest of whites and coloureds to have one political structure," he said.

Consultation could take place in the President's Council or in the proposed "Council of Cabinets," provided for in the 1977 constitutional proposals.

This statement indicates there could be severe problems within the party if, as expected, the President's Council suggests far-reaching changes to the 1977 constitutional proposals.

Tough line

Taking a tough line on Mixed Marriages, Dr Treurnicht said the Afrikaans churches correctly maintained that such marriages could disturb "stable relations" in a "multiracial and multinational situation".

The National Party has once more papered over the cracks following the infighting of the past week.

This emerged yesterday after a meeting of the party's Transvaal head committee in Pretoria at which the party's internal divisions were discussed.

Dr Treurnicht referred to the matter during his opening address at the party's congress a few hours after the head committee meeting.

He accused the Press of "kicking up dust" to generate "some excitement in politics" and said there was no conflict inside the party.

"I want to repeat what the Prime Minister has said: 'There are no differences in principle in the party,' Dr Treurnicht told the congress.

"We have come of age. We can recognise our differences within the unity of the party and that is a sign of maturity," he said.

The Government had to deal with very sensitive matters "and we must expect that the enemies of the Government will try to create embarrassment. One way of doing this is by fanning difficulties in the National Party," he said.

This remark is significant, as political observers noted that the first reports of infighting appeared in Afrikaans newspapers.

The infighting has centred on:

- Reports that verkramptes held a "secret meeting" with Dr Treurnicht in October to discuss strategy to remove verligte Cabinet Ministers from leading positions in the Transvaal hierarchy;
- Accusations by Mr Daan van der Merwe, MP for Rissik and a strong Treurnicht supporter, that "assassins" in political, journalistic and academic circles were trying to undermine Dr Treurnicht.

Dr Treurnicht described the reports of the "secret meeting" as untrue and "despicable suspicion mongering".

It is understood that Mr Van der Merwe had denied that he was referring to National party leaders as "assassin politicians" or "unprincipled leaders".

Dr Treurnicht warned that the task facing the NP was too great for "petty personal vendettas and backbiting.

"Our task is too big to tackle divided," he said.

Dr Treurnicht concluded by saying there was peace and quiet in the party and he expected the congress to proceed peacefully.

He was given a standing ovation by the 1 109 registered delegates.

SADF PRESS CENSOR EXPLAINS, JUSTIFIES POLICIES

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 2 Nov 81 p 9

[Article by Lin Menge: "The Man Who Controls What You Know"]

[Text] There is something wooden about Kobas Bosman--a particularly smooth, hard wood which is impossible for Pressmen to dent.

He will chat amiably for an hour and say nothing in particular--for the record. Off the record he will give quite convincing reasons why particular news items should have been delayed or suppressed, and less convincing reasons why the reasons themselves should remain off the record.

But that presumably, is what the job is about — total imperturbability in the face of Press protests and entreaties. That is not to say that Brigadier Bosman wants to be seen as the chief censor — far from it. His is a balancing act between the right of the public to know and the interests of national security — on a rope tautly spanned by his superiors, the Minister of Defence and the Chief of the SADF.

And if executing the policy of the Minister and the Defence Force chief is his first priority, the second is building the SADF's image.

Image is all important to the SADF — as to any defence force. As the first Steyn commission put it with Biblical aptness, the image of operational efficiency and the fighting spirit must be maintained and strengthened — by the Press as much as by other agencies — "for if the trumpet gives an uncertain sound, who shall prepare himself to the battle"?

Ensuring that the trumpet sounds with certainty is Brigadier Bosman's chief preoccupation. Other people in this deeply divided country may have other preoccupations — such as the right to conscientious objection, or the immorality of asking blacks to fight for a country which denies them its citizenship — but they are not Kobus Bosman's concerns.

Accusation

Who is he? The son of a teacher, he started off farming in the Free State, then joined the SABC news department where, in time, he came to be diplomatic and political correspondent and finally news editor.

In 1976 he became staff officer media liaison for the SADF. He lives in Pretoria with his wife, two sons, one a medical student and one at school, and a small daughter, "blonde and beautiful". Four years ago he suffered a heart attack. Now he's a regular jogger.

So Brigadier Bosman came to the SADF not as a soldier but as a journalist — a Nat propagandist some would say. He rejects that accusation.

"I speak from an absolutely non-political platform," he says. "The SADF is a national force and it is non-political. I think that was demonstrated in the last session of Parliament — everyone who spoke on Defence did so from a non-political platform. That makes it so much easier to sell the SADF's image and I get along equally well with journalists from Nationalist and Opposition newspapers."

What about the notorious SADF document which proposed action to "nullify the Opposition"?

"That was just a flash in the pan. We had built up such a good relationship with the Press that it did not hamper our task or our relationship with the Press."

How does that relationship work?

"Media liaison is more difficult in Defence than in any other organisation because there are certain obstacles, and the most important is security. In building an image we have to move carefully through the position of South Africa in the world today, a position in which the SADF is playing a very important role, and problems which arise out of it such as the arms embargo.

"My philosophy of public relations is simple: the PRO, no matter where he is, is only a medium between the top structure and the Press and the public. The PRO who builds his own image is doing the concept of PR a disservice — so please don't make a big thing of this article."

There are three sections which he must manage: media liaison which now falls under Colonel Tim Krynauw, public relations headed by Col Frikkie van Oudtshoorn, and periodicals, such as Paratus, which falls under Col Pierre Coetsee.

Media liaison staff officer is the job which often woke Kobus Bosman at midnight. Besides Press queries there might be calls from overeas, confronting the SADF with highly sensitive information and needing a speedy reply. He admits the job was a strain.

"But it is not our task to vet information," Brig Bosman said. "We work according to policy directives issued by our Intelligence people and if we have problems we refer the reports concerned to the Intelligence division of the SADF.

"In my experience in the past six years we prohibited so few things they are really not worth mentioning. The media in South Africa has a very good understanding of what should not be published, so we seldom get queries that are absolutely unrealistic. I'm only executing policy, but I do think that over the years we have built up a very good relationship with our military correspondents."

Credibility

But what about the first Angolan invasion, and the failure to tell the public about it until nearly a year later?

"Maybe that did knock a bit of a hole in our credibility. It is something that we have to work to restore. But there were distinct, good reasons for not disclosing that we were in Angola — we didn't do it for funny's sake, and I believe the public understand those reasons.

"That is why our relationships with the media and especially the liaison committee of the SADF and the NPU are so important. That is where problems can be raised and a compromise reached. Because we're non-political we can solve problems in collaboration with the media."

He does not go along with the accusation — he says he is not even aware of it — that the Press is being deliberately manipulated to denigrate the SADF, but he does believe that protest demonstrations came into being with worldwide TV, and that the Press can unwittingly aid terrorists by giving out certain information. Such information, in his opinion, would include revealing where the enemy made their mistakes or were particularly successful, or how home resources were strained to the utmost to cope with an attack.

What of relations with the wider public?

Bad eggs

"It is part of our task to reply to letters from the public and the Press and we do believe we've got our finger on the pulse of the public. The Defence Command Council is very well aware of every bit of public concern and regards the Press as our watchdogs. Of course it is important for the Defence Force to be concerned with strategic and security considerations, but the biggest asset of the force is the men, and concern for them is an important policy matter."

Back to the image-building of those men. What about all those bad eggs in the conscript basket who rob and rape and even kill innocent members of the public?

"If a man commits a murder and he is, incidentally, a soldier, I don't think you can blame the Press for always bringing that fact out. However unfair it is, it is news, so we must accept it. But a national defence force reflects all the problems of the nation, be they alcoholism or whatever."

Shouldn't the SADF disassociate itself more promptly from crimes committed by servicemen, such as the shooting by an officer of a black child, for instance?

"There is no question that we disassociate ourselves, but we have to be careful not to find a man guilty before he has been proved guilty."

A final — and frank — word from the image-builder:

"My job is to create the best balance I can, and also to project the best image I can. If I do find a tendency to mal-balance, I'll do my utmost to create a balance to the other side."

FOSATU WANTS NEW PENSION DISPENSATION

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 4 Nov 81 p 5

[Article by Steven Friedman]

[Text]

THE Federation of SA Trade Unions (Fosatu) yesterday made wide-ranging demands for a dramatic overhaul of the country's pension scheme and these are to be put to employers in all industries in which Fosatu unions have substantial worker support.

The demands are thus likely to become a major bargaining issue in a wide range of companies.

They are contained in a resolution on the pensions issue adopted by a Fosatu central committee meeting at the weekend. The text of the resolution was released yesterday.

Although some of the demands are for changes in the country's pensions legislation, a Fosatu spokesman confirmed that many affected individual company and industry pension funds and would form part of demands by Fosatu unions.

Rejected

In the resolution, Fosatu rejects the Government's proposed pensions Bill and repeats its claim that the Bill extends and reinforces the existing private pension dispensation, which, it claims, workers reject.

It also says the new system, under which worker pension contributions will be preserved, is designed "to substitute, not supplement. State pensions even though neither can provide an adequate standard of living in old age".

Fosatu rejects the Government's decision to delay the legislation for three years and employer proposals for an "income barrier" below which workers will be excluded from the new Bill as "an attempt to smuggle in preservation through the back door."

It therefore demands:

- That the Bill be withdrawn until "the underlying problem of pensions is resolved through negotiation with workers and their organisations".
- That private pension schemes be seen as "supplements to and not substitutes for" state pensions.
- That state pension money not be handed over to "Bantustan Governments", where they "may be put to uses other than that for which they were originally intended".

Fosatu's demands on private pension schemes are:

- That pension fund rules be renegotiated with workers and their representatives;
- That there be a majority of worker representatives on pension fund boards of trustees;

Employers pay

- That the bulk of pension contributions be paid by employers not workers;
- That workers should receive employer pension contributions regardless of their length of service "so that the loss of benefits cannot act as a disciplinary measure";
- That pension funds should pay the same rate of interest as banks;
- That workers draw up an "investment code" for pension funds to ensure that money, particularly the 53% which must be invested in Government assets, is invested in areas "workers consider socially desirable" rather than areas such as Defence;
- That the retirement age be reduced to 50, or that pensions be payable after 30 years service.

Fosatu also says industry-wide pension schemes should not serve "minority interests".

ARCHBISHOP LAMENTS RECENT SPATE OF DETENTIONS

Johannesburg SOWETAN in English 29 Oct 81 p 18

[Article by Sello Rabothata: "Some released But More Detained"]

[Text]

AN EXCUTIVE member of the Congress of South African Students (Cosas), Vaal branch, who was detained by security police a week ago has been released but a number of other people have been taken in.

Mr Simon Nkodi, the branch's general secretary, said he spent the first day of his detention at Protea Police station where he was questioned about his activities and the whereabouts of some people. He spent the rest of the days at the Hillbrow Police station until his release on Monday.

"I am not happy they released me. In fact, they should have held me for a longer period. I am deeply concerned about the others who are still detained without trial", Mr Nkodi said.

Mr Jeremiah Tlhobane, the branch's publicity secretary who was detained on the same day as Mr Nkodi, is still in detention.

Last week three executive members of the Azanian People's Organisation (Azapo) were released after spending 15 days in detention under Section 22 of the General Law Amendment Act. They are Mr Jefferson Khotso Lengane, chairman of Azapo's special Labour Committee, Mr Kennedy Mogami and Mr Reginald Tebogo Mngomezulu.

Meanwhile security police detained Mr Keith Coleman, a journalist with a student publication, Saspu National, and his colleague and friend Mr Clive van Heerden at the weekend. The two men are believed to be held under Section 22 of the General Law Amendment Act.

Miss Hanchen Koornhof, the Minister of Co-operation and Development, Dr Piet Koornhof's niece, was released under Section 22 of the General Law Amendment Act — which allows for 14 days' detention — and redetained under Section Six of the Terrorism Act.

Archbishop Joseph Fitzgerald of the Johannesburg Catholic Diocese yesterday expressed grave concern at the continued spate of recent detentions without trial.

"This concern is especially grave in regard to the detention of Mr and Mrs Alex Mbatha, who are church workers for the development of the Southern African Catholic Bishop's Conference," he said.

PARENTS SUPPORT COMMITTEE SET UP FOR DETAINEES

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 4 Nov 81 p 15

[Article by Martin Feinstein: "A Strange Society"]

[Text]

ONCE a week, in a common room at Wits University's Senate House, a quiet group of about 20 middle-aged men and women, with a sprinkling of younger faces, gather round a large table.

Walk past, and it looks like a mildly popular extra-mural lecture.

Look closer, however, and you will see one of the most remarkable gatherings of South Africans — from a Koornhof to an Mthembu to a Mahommed to a Coleman — brought together by one cross-cutting fact: they all have sons or daughters in jail under the General Laws Amendment and Terrorism Acts.

This is the month-old Parents Support Committee (PSC), an informal group of astonishing diversity born out of a collective sense of shock, outrage and plain parental anxiety over the dawn swoops on students, educationists and community workers.

Here, in one room, are:

- Professor J Koornhof, brother of Cabinet Minister Dr Piet Koornhof, top scientist and father of detainee Hannchen Koornhof (22 days), a Benoni schoolteacher;
- Black Sash leader Audrey Coleman and her husband, Dr Max Coleman, parents of detainee Keith (10 days), a Wits honours student and journalist for the South African Student Press Union (Saspu);
- Mrs M Mthembu, a Johannesburg domestic servant and mother of detainee Mandla Mthembu (41 days), a writer for Turret College;
- Retired import-export businessman Charles de Beer and his wife Sheila, parents of detainee Cedric de Beer (43 days), an official of the Environmental and Development Agency, part-time tutor at Wits and former Nusas leader;
- The Rev Francois Bill — a top Presbyterian Church leader — and his wife, parents of detainee Charles Bill (53 days), a national serviceman and former student;
- Dr I J Mahommed — himself a former detainee — and his wife, parents of detainee Elaine Mahommed (79 days), a Wits student.

With them and several other parents are the younger faces of brothers, sisters, cousins, friends and colleagues of these and other detainees — a rare cross-section of South Africans who have come together in the belief that their kin are not criminals, but idealists.

The PSC was born out of the many individual support committees — one for each detainee — formed after the first arrests in August.

At first a response to the day-to-day problems of paying detainees' rents, keeping car batteries charged and delivering food and clothes, both the individual groups and the PSC are now beginning to exert pressure aimed at securing releases.

This is being done in several ways, some spurred by anger, others tinged with pathos.

Most of the parents have written to Johannesburg's chief magistrate for assurances that their children are being visited regularly.

"The more letters they get the more they'll know that we are watching closely," said one.

For the same reason, many of the parents make daily telephone calls to the Security Police, asking a set of questions — "Is my child alright? Where is my child? When can I see him/her?" — but not expecting any answers.

Whatever the bland replies, the calls serve to remind the police that they are holding young people whose parents, while they may not agree with their offspring's politics, do not see them as criminals or risks to State security.

Also, with the parents' support, the Congress of Academics for a Democratic Society at Wits has written to Britain's teachers, lecturers, journalists, students and several universities briefing them on the detentions and asking them "to take up these detentions as part of the continuing political repression in South Africa and publicise them as widely as possible".

Another parent, appalled at the lack of any official condemnation of the detentions from Wits University, has written to the vice-chancellor, Professor J D du Plessis, asking him if and when the university will take a stand.

"We would have expected strong and prompt action from the university, but it isn't that way," said the parent, himself a Wits graduate.

"The university is dragging its feet.... I am concerned that no public statement is forthcoming and I want to know what will be done."

So far, it appears, the university has only written a pro forma letter to the Security Police asking for access to its students for tuition purposes.

One of the group's most important functions is to share the tension, anxiety and in some cases confusion brought on by the knowledge that one's child is in the mysterious hands of the Security Police — and may stay there for months.

Particularly for those parents who are undergoing a bewildering political baptism, the swopping of telephone numbers, feelings and experiences is reassuring.

(One mother, buffeted almost to tears by these strange political winds, kept saying: "It's the unjust laws we must go after, not the people who apply them", until, gently, someone reminded her that many of the people sitting around her had been doing just that for years.)

Of experiences, both bitter and humorous, there is no shortage.

Recounted in this quiet, panelled room in this academic highrise in Braamfontein, they feature security policemen of varying shades of cordiality, the food fetishes that filter through from the cells (answered in almost daily food parcels — but whether they are received is not known) and the "human vacuums" left by the detentions.

Keith Coleman and Clive van Heerden, for example, who were arrested on October 24, were the larger part of an industrial sociology honours course of three people; the one remaining student will have to brave revision and exams alone.

Similar "vacuums" exist where the other detainees once worked and studied: Robert Adam (detained September 22), also a course writer for Turret College; Barbara Hogan (detained September 22), a part-time Wits tutor and community worker; trade unionist Alan Fine (detained September 24); Mike O'Donovan (detained August 12), national serviceman and ex-student; and Leslie Lacks (detained August 12), a student.

How long the PSC will continue depends largely on how long the detainees are held.

But among the individual support committees, where opposition to the security laws is at least as strong as concern got individual victims, moves are afoot to set up a permanent group in readiness for the inevitable swoops to come.

If they are succesful, future detainees may feel a fraction less fear for the cells when they hear a pre-dawn knock on the door.

YOUTH RESERVES GET GOVERNMENT GO-AHEAD

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 13 Nov 81 p 3

[Article by Jaap Theron]

[Text]

THE GOVERNMENT has finally agreed to establish a junior police reserve force while the establishment of a reservist force for women was also urgently being investigated, Mr Louis le Grange, Minister of Police, announced last night.

Mr Le Grange, who presented 65 medals to police reservists in the Western Province for faithful service, said there was no doubt women reservists would be able to render services equal to those of their male colleagues.

It had been decided to proceed with the establishment of a junior police reserve force subject to certain requirements and conditions.

The youth reservists would have proper supervision, control and discipline at all times, while care would also be taken that members would not face dangerous situations.

The services of school-leavers who were members of this force and who became liable for national service, would be terminated immediately to permit them to do their military service.

Mr Le Grange criticised publication of Mrs Mana Slabbert of the Institute for Criminology at Cape Town University titled Violence on Cinema, Television and the Streets.

The book suggested that the influence of TV and radio and of motion pictures had a direct bearing on violent crime in the Cape Peninsula.

Mr Le Grange said the book offered interesting reading matter, but was unfortunately also clearly "politically motivated".

STUDENTS NOW ACCEPT RADICAL RIGHT-WINGER

[Article by Ada Stuijt: "'Docile' Students Applaud AWB Leader"]

[Text]

THE leader of the extreme Rightwing Afrikaner Weerstandsbeweging, Mr Eugene Terre'Blanche, was received by 450 loudly-applauding Rand Afrikaans University students yesterday.

He was invited by the Students' Representative Council to lecture the students on the role of the radical Rightwing in South African politics.

One of the university's lecturers in communications, Dr Arrie de Beer, was the only person to ask Mr Terre'Blanche some rather pointed questions.

Mr Terre'Blanche said: "We must not allow this country to be ruled by blacks, coloureds or Indians.

"How can we allow blacks to rule us, when most of them can't even pass their first-year university examinations? How can we allow Indians to have a say in the running of our country, when their allegiance lies in India and Pakistan?"

"The coloureds are the result of racial mixing between a weaker type of white man, coloureds and Malays and visiting sailors, therefore why should the better class of white now have to accept them into our community as quasi-whites?

"We can't wish them to become white, and if we force integration on to the coloured man he will always be frustrated by having to compete with the more intelligent white man.

"That's why we should make provisions — as was proposed by Dr Andries Treurnicht — that the coloured man be given his own homeland," he said.

University officials said they were surprised by the non-critical atmosphere among the students during the lecture.

"Two years ago when he was invited to speak here, they wouldn't even listen to him," he said.

HOMELAND ATTACKS TIE DOWN SECURITY FORCES

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 31 Oct 81 p 7

[Article by Patrick Laurence: "Homeland Attacks Are Aimed at Stretching Security Forces To The Fullest"]

[Text]

"Terrorist groups are today smaller but better organised than the clumsy groups of the 1960s. They are thoroughly indoctrinated and much more determined to achieve their objectives." — Lieutenant-General Johan Coetzee, head of the South African Security Police

By PATRICK LAURENCE

THE attack earlier this week on the Venda police station — the third police station in or near a "black homeland" to come under assault in recent months — represents a bid by insurgents to stretch South Africa's security forces to the maximum, according to political analysts.

The analysts draw attention to the assessment of insurgent strategy given by the Chief of the South Africa's Defence Force, General Constand Viljoen, in a recent address.

"The strategy of the anti-Republic of South Africa terrorists differs, however, from that of Swapo (in South West Africa) as they operate countrywide in South Africa in widespread actions that make far greater demands on the security forces as far as manpower levels are concerned," General Viljoen said.

The drawn-out, widespread and fluid nature of revolutionary-terrorist warfare is aimed at over-taxing the country's security force base and thereby its economic power basis as well."

Attacks

The homelands are situated for the most part on South Africa's borders and attacks on homeland police stations seem tailor-made for the insurgent strategy of over-stretching security forces.

Attacks on homeland police stations — there have been 11 recorded attacks on police stations in "white" South Africa and the "black homelands" since October 1976 — constitute a new variation in the generally increased tempo of insurgent activity.

There have been more than 50 acts of sabotage and violence since the beginning of the year, a 200% increase on the level of activity for the same period last year, as the Minister of Defence, General Magnus Malan, noted in a recent address.

Professor Jack Spence, the South African-born professor of

PATTERN OF VIOLENCE . . . the map shows how the attacks have spread all over South Africa, including the homelands, since the beginning of the year politics at the University of Leicester and an authority on guerrilla warfare, sees attacks on homeland police stations as a supplement to, not a divergence from, earlier attacks on industrial targets.

He says "Urban terrorism is not enough. It is largely designed to show that the African National Congress is more just a talking shop. Its guerrillas now seem to be trying to give themselves maximum visibility across the entire spectrum."

But, he adds, insurgency in South Africa has not yet advanced beyond Mao Tse-Tsung's first phase, in which the primary objective is to sharpen awareness of, and resentment against, grievances — but in which insurgents also use force to demonstrate that they are not just a debating society.

"The second phase is characterised by roving guerrilla bands involved in hit and run battles with government forces."

Dependence

Another factor in attacks on homeland police stations relates to a bid by insurgents to undermine governmental authority in the homelands — and thereby to neutralise Pretoria's attempts to recruit blacks in the homelands as its political and military allies.

One of the purposes behind these rapid surprise attacks is to destabilise these territories psychologically.

The objective is to create in the words of Che Guevara — as quoted recently the Security Police Chief, Lieutenant-General Johan Coetzee — "a situation of unrest, of anguish, almost of impatience for the development of violent events that will relieve the period of suspense."

Attempts by some homeland leaders to pursue an independent line flounder because of their dependence on Pretoria for funds, for officers to train their armies and police forces and for arms to equip them.

It is open secret that the "liberation movements," particularly the ANC, do not share the contempt for homelands displayed by many quasi-radicals in drawing-room conservations. They are seen as obstacles to the struggle, not as "relevancies."

The task of raising the level of resentment in the homelands is aided by Pretoria's policy of using the homelands as "dumping grounds" for superflous blacks from the urban areas, Prof Spence says.

The "resettled" people, he adds, constitute a potential reservoir of recruits for insurgent movements, a reservoir which is conveniently situated close to South Africa's borders once a recruit is chosen to undergo military training in neighbouring states sympathetic to the "liberation" cause.

Efficient

Mr Richard Cornwell, of the Africa Institute, lists two more advantages for insurgent attacks on homeland police stations:

- They undermine the legitimacy of the homeland governments by forcing them to call in assistance from South Africa.
- The reaction of the generally more efficient and more experienced South African forces is usually slowed down by the necessity of liaising with the homeland security forces.

Mr Michael Morris, director of the Terrorism Research Centre, notes that the attack on the Venda police station came at a time when police were heavily engaged in the hunt for the suspected killer of two contractor workers after at least three suspected cases of sabotage late last week.

Whether by accident or design, it was a classic illustration of drawing police forces to one area (the highveld) and then striking in another (the bushveld).

Referring to the recent warning by Defence Minister Malan of the danger of insurgents opening a "second front," Mr Morris characterises it as "careless," as it gave insurgents an "ideal opportunity" to gain maximum publicity for their attacks.

Insurgents

Mr Morris disagrees with those who see the recent attacks on homeland police stations as evidence of a nascent bid to initiate a Mao-style rural insurgency, in which the outer, rural edges of South Africa are gradually subverted along the lines deployed Zanla and Zipra insurgents in the Rhodesian war.

Mr Morris says the three homeland police stations concerned are located in the homeland urban centres of Mdantsane, Mabopane and Sibasa, thus falling, in his view, into the general pattern of attacks in urban areas.

The attacks are the work of a ANC squad which specialises in attacking police stations and "zaps them" whenever they can, he says.

But, he adds, by attacking homeland police stations the insurgents are emphasising a political point: they are giving violent expression to their declared political opposition to the fragmentation of South Africa and to the black "collaborators" who helped to dismember the motherland.

NEW TRAINEES PRACTICE PARACHUTE DROPS

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 2 Nov 81 p 3

[Article by Marja Tuit: "Aspirant Paratroopers Take The Dairing Drop"]

[Text]

THEY sat in two neat rows, some testing their parachute packs while others folded their arms and stared ahead or prayed.

The drone of the Dakota engines filled the fuselage, adding to the tension as 24 bronzed troopies awaited the moment of truth — in six minutes they would experience their initiation into the gruelling world of the paratrooper.

The red light flickered off and as the green came on the men stirred, relief on their faces. The waiting was over. Action at last.

"Stand up troops," bellowed Sergeant Willie Bolton, the tough as teak parabat instructor and Free State rugby flank.

Four aspiring paratroopers reacted as one and went through their drills. A howling wind blasted through the rear door as the men stepped forward in unison.

Marble blocks

"One, two! One two! One two!" Their boots slammed down on the deck as they moved forward.

Four months of training — bearing the weight of the dreaded 30kg marble blocks — and fitness exercises which have toned them into hardened fighting men were about to be put to the test as they took their final leap into the blue 400m up.

It was fear and tension for 84 troops of No 1 Parachute Battalion in Bloemfontein this week when they took their first jump from an aircraft on Wednesday.

Between then and next Friday the July intake at the battalion will do seven jumps each. If they pass the test they receive their wings as qualified paratroopers on Friday.

Captain David Moore, officer in command of the battalion, said a successful paratrooper "needs confidence in his own ability, his leaders and weapons and this is only achieved by thorough and hard training".

A "Mail" photographer and I had the opportunity last week to see what it takes to make a paratrooper.

Credo

The credo of the country's only parachute training unit — which celebrates its 21st anniversary next April — is "Ex Alto Vincimus" (We Conquer from the Air) and an amazing track record of 183 987 accident-free parachute jumps since the unit opened in 1961 is some achievement.

With company commander Captain Kobus Human as our guide, we were shown around.

The unit boasts several Springboks and provincial sportsmen — Nico Nicolaison, a Springbok long distance runner, and Dougie Eager, a Springbok swimmer, are two of the wellknown names at the unit.

Captain Human said that of the selected 600 troops at every intake, only 40-50% would finally make it "because the training is so tough".

They have to pass six tests, consisting of a 3,2km run in a maximum time of 18 minutes; 200m man-on-shoulders run in 75 seconds; 67 sit-ups in less than two minutes; climbing a 7m rope without aid; scaling a 4m wall with full kit; and a co-ordination test where men have to run a distance of 6m, touch the ground and run back — 40 times in 90 seconds.

National servicemen are allowed to fail two of these tests while the permanent force members may fail only one.

"These men have to be unbelievably fit because they are used for special operations and are the elite of the Defence Force," Captain Human said.

Apparatus

In a large hangar the troops receive a three-week parachute training course where they are taught the drill of how to land and fall.

The "block and tackle" — an apparatus where a man is suspended above the ground — is the fear of all parachutists "but it is essential because if a man opens his feet when he lands, he will open them when he jumps from an aircraft," Captain Human said.

The parachute packing and maintenance building, where all the parachutes are packed, repaired and stored, is one of the most modern in the country and 32 women receive a five-week parachute packing course before they are allowed to work there.

The women each pack between eight and 15 parachutes a day. They are then meticulously inspected and stored. Each parachute has its own logbook and can be used for only 100 jumps or 10 years.

At the repair section, all tears in the canopies are darned.

We also saw how troopers were put through their air drill in the mock Dakota and Hercules cabins on the training ground.

The "aapkas" — a wooden jump tower — is the nightmare of all parabats. They have to jump out of the tower, 17m above the ground, and slide down cables to the ground.

On the second day we accompanied troops from the July intake for their first jump from an aircraft.

As the troops jumped they were observed through powerful binoculars and marked until they landed.

"They have to go through their drill in the air and only get two chances. If they fail they have to wait for the next training course," Captain Human said.

Ejected

Before the men jumped, their equipment was checked about six times by the officers in charge and their companions.

One by one the men were ejected from the aircraft. Back on the ground they chattered excitedly about their first experiences in the air.

Next Friday will be remembered as "glamour day", when those who have passed all the tests receive their wings as true paratroopers.

BLACK PUPILS WILL GET LANGUAGE CHOICE

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 4 Nov 81 p 4

[Text]

THE Department of Education and Training is to introduce a new system of teaching languages and medium of instruction in black primary schools next year.

The teaching of three languages — mother tongue, Afrikaans and English — in primary schools will be spread over three years, according to a circular by the department to school inspectors and principals.

In Sub A, the only language taught will be the pupil's mother tongue.

Either English or Afrikaans will be taught as a subject in Sub B. One of the three languages chosen will then become the medium of instruction from Standard 3.

In Standard 1, the official language not selected in Sub B will then be introduced as a subject.

This means that:

- From Sub A to Standard 2, mother tongue will be the medium of instruction;
- From Standard 3 to Standard 5 one of the three language subjects — English, Afrikaans and mother tongue — will be used as a medium of instruction;
- Religious education will be taught in mother tongue throughout.

'Confrontation'

The department circular said parents, through the school committees, had the right to choose the medium of instruction and which language would be taken as a subject.

Mr Wilkie Kambule, a lecturer at the University of Witwatersrand and former Soweto school principal, said the new regulations indicated that the Government had not learnt any lesson from the 1976 student uprisings.

One of the causes of the unrest was the Government's decision that Afrikaans be the medium of instruction for mathematics and science.

"Black education is poised for another confrontation," Mr Kambule said.

"Decisions are made by white officials in the offices of the Department of Education and Training in Pretoria. Black parents are not properly consulted."

The general secretary of the African Teachers' Association of South Africa (Atasa), Mr H H Dlamlenze, said the new regulations were "quite in order" [illegible] represented a step in the "right direction".

Mr Dlamlenze, a Soweto school principal, welcomed the spreading of the teaching of languages over three years. Pupils in other parts of the world started learning a second language in their second year of study, but this was not the case with black pupils.

"We have been doing a queer thing by burdening our kids with three languages in Sub A."

Professor E Mphahlele, head of the recently formed Council for Black Education and Research, said he had no quarrel with mother tongue as medium of instruction from Sub A to Standard 2.

"Although the introduction of two so-called official languages are staggered between Sub B and Standard 5, the black child still has to deal with three languages by compulsion," he said.

Option

He stressed that English should be the medium of instruction from Standard 3 upwards, and suggested that pupils be given the option to choose between English and Afrikaans as a language to be studied until Standard 10.

The other official language could be taken at the pupil's discretion up to university level — "just as white students have the option of doing a foreign language at matric," Prof Mphahlele said.

He rejected the teaching of Religious Education through the medium of mother tongue. This was adversely going to affect students who persued the study of divinity at university level, he said.

CLOSED SHOP UNIONS COULD STIR BLACK IRE

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 30 Oct 81 p 12

[Article by Steven Friedman: "Sign Up Or Get Out--New Union Battle"]

[Text]

TIME was when many black workers feared the sack if they joined a trade union. Now many face a firing if they don't join.

The reason is the closed shop, a time-honoured custom whereby unions and employers agree that all workers in an industry must be union members.

This practice hit the headlines recently when 26 workers at the United Tobacco Company (UTC) lost their jobs after refusing to join Tucsa's African Tobacco Workers' Union (ATWU), which negotiated a closed shop with employers.

But it is also an issue in the metal, motor components, furniture and printing industries, where established unions have negotiated closed shops, forcing blacks to join their unions.

It has already sparked a strike and there are fears it could spark others.

To add to the controversy, lawyers say the established unions are negotiating closed shops which may violate labour law.

Closed shops are not new and many industries have them.

They are usually negotiated at industrial councils and compel members of unions on the council to work only for members of the party employer association and members of the association to only employ union members.

In some industries, such as metal, the closed shop only affects some jobs and workers may belong to any of the unions on the council.

But in other industries all workers must belong to a specific union. On the mines, workers in a particular job must join a specific union.

Most closed shop agreements go back at least a decade.

Blacks could not legally join unions which bargained on industrial councils and were thus not covered by the closed shop, which applied only to workers eligible for union membership.

But blacks are now eligible and thus subject to the closed shop.

According to unionists and labour lawyers, this has given established unions a large (and unwilling) black membership at the stroke of a pen.

After receiving Ministerial approval to do so, they simply amend their constitutions to allow them to recruit blacks. Because blacks are now eligible, these unions say they are covered by the closed shop.

But lawyers say this may violate labour law, which allows industrial councils to negotiate closed shop agreements.

The Minister can only approve such an agreement if he is satisfied that the parties who signed it are "sufficiently representative".

In the case of a union or unions, "this would certainly mean they would have to represent a majority," says the Industrial Registrar, Mr Matt le Roux.

Minority union

And another senior Department of Manpower man, Mr Mike van Noordwyk, says the Department would not allow a minority union to negotiate a closed shop.

When many existing closed shops were signed, the unions did represent a majority — of non-blacks. These agreements were therefore ratified and are legally binding.

They may no longer be representative — because blacks are now "employees" — but they are using their existing agreements to incorporate blacks in the closed shop.

"They are using their representativeness in one situation to claim rights in a changed one. The courts could overrule this," says a lawyer.

Some industries, like metal, are granting exemptions from the closed shop, but others are "backing minority unions by refusing exemptions," he said.

At some stage, of course, these agreements will expire and the new agreement will have to be submitted to the Department.

But then, say lawyers, the unions will prove representativeness by "simply producing scores of black members — all of them forced to join under the old closed shop clause."

Registered unionists say registration procedures prevent abuses of this kind by insuring that unions who are registered for blacks are representative.

Not so, say lawyers. If no other registered union objects, an established union can win registration to represent blacks without proving that it represents any.

Mr van Noordwyk confirms that some closed shops are extended in this way and adds: "We cannot intervene until after November 1, when the new Act comes into force. Some closed shops might then not be renewed by us."

He says officials will look at new closed shops "on their merits".

But the problem doesn't end there. Black unions have constantly accused their established counterparts of "organising management, not unions".

By this they mean that some established unions use their relationship with employers to aid their black organising efforts.

This could simply mean allowing the union to address workers, while denying that right to other unions. But it has been known to include active organising efforts by the company personnel office.

Joined voluntarily

Thus, black unions say, a registered union could satisfy the authorities that it represents a majority, even if few workers joined voluntarily.

At UTC, where the company says ATWU represents a large majority, workers claimed they knew nothing about the union and had never met its officials.

While the union's secretary, Miss Christine du Preez, says they joined voluntarily, UTC says it did grant ATWU facilities, like the right to approach workers during breaks. Workers may have believed management wanted them to join.

Black unions thus see the closed shops as a tactic by registered unions to win members they could not otherwise win because of black resistance.

That claim is given substance by the mining unionist who recently complained about employers' unwillingness to grant him a closed shop.

"Recruiting workers without a closed shop is expensive and time-consuming," he said.

But while most registered unions support the closed shop, they say they only negotiate it when they represent a majority.

The row has again highlighted the closed shop — a source of controversy both here and abroad.

The attack on it in countries such as Britain has been led by conservatives who fear it as a source of union power.

Strikes there are legal and the closed shop is used to ensure that a minority honours the decision by a majority to strike.

Critics argue that workers have a right not to join unions and recently won a judgment in their favour from the European Human Rights Court.

Here, the issue has received attention from Government policy-makers — chiefly on the closed shop's role in enforcing job bars.

In the pre-Wiehahn era, job reservation only applied to about 3% of jobs.

But industrial council agreements stipulated that only union labour could perform certain jobs. Because blacks were not permitted to become "union labour", they were barred.

The first Wiehahn report, noting that there were at least 49 closed shops, decided that the practice is "so firmly entrenched it cannot be abolished".

But five commissioners signed a strongly-worded minority report recommending that the Government not approve new closed shop agreements.

They labelled the closed shop the "commonest form" of job reservation.

The five also feared that unracial unions could use it to "freeze out" others and cited the freedom of association argument.

The Government decided that existing closed shops could continue but that new ones would not be sanctioned (this does not seem to have been rigidly applied — the tobacco closed shop agreement was signed this year).

But the National Manpower Commission probed the issue and last month the Government accepted its recommendation that the practice be allowed.

The only change it recommended — which has been incorporated in a draft Bill — is that workers have 90 days to join a closed shop union.

Officials believe this gets round the job reservation problem by actually getting workers into the job before the closed shop comes into play.

Employers tend to back the abolition of the closed shop.

Thus, Mr Rod Ironside, chairman of the Federated Chamber of Industries' labour affairs committee, says his committee is to discuss the issue at its next meeting, but adds: "Personally, I would like it abolished".

He cites the freedom of association argument and adds that the closed shop is "seen as a form of job reservation."

Registered unions

And, says Mr Ironside: "It means unions don't have to sell their services to workers. Closed shop unions have a very comfortable life and don't have to work at winning worker support."

The practice's chief supporters are registered unions. Their key argument is spelt out in Garment Worker, journal of the Garment Workers Union, whose president, Dr Anna Scheepers, is also president of Tucsa.

It asks "why a freeloader should enjoy benefits won by other workers?"

Its argument is that, where most workers join a union, that union will negotiate work conditions for all workers.

The minority will benefit from those negotiations, whether they join or not. They should therefore join the union and pay dues to it, so that they do not enjoy the fruits of union members' efforts without contributing.

Mr Ike van der Watt, general secretary of the SA Boilermakers' Society, rejects closed shops tying workers to a particular union.

But he supports agreements compelling workers to belong to a union on an industrial council — though not to a particular one.

"I feel workers must join a union so they are protected and union members are not undercut. But it should be up to them which union they join," he says.

Mr van der Watt concedes that this may be seen as a means of forcing unions to join industrial councils — they would have to belong to one of the closed shop unions. But, he says, "the answer lies in changing the registration procedures so that they can join the councils".

Excluded from negotiations

He says he might be prepared to concede to employers the right of workers not to belong to a union — if those workers were excluded from negotiations.

He says employers often want to establish works councils for non-members.

"This means they are forcing them to bargain through a council which they might not support. This doesn't sound like freedom of association to me."

Mr Ben Nicholson, director of the Confederation of Metal and Building Unions, concedes that unions with a specific closed shop can enforce job bars by blocking black applications to join their union.

But where workers can join any union and there are black unions on a council, "they can always get the job by joining the black union," he says.

A key argument for the closed shop, says Mr Nicholson, is that it "is a source of industrial peace" and "a bulwark against union militancy".

"Unions who have no closed shop have to blow up every issue to demonstrate their muscle. We don't have to do that."

Aid stability

This, he says, is why employers agree to closed shops — despite their stated objections. Garment Worker also says closed shops aid "stability."

But he insists that this doesn't mean unionists can rest on their laurels. Members of closed shop unions can join other unions as "dual members". And closed shop unionists can be voted out of office.

Black unionists insist that "a system which doesn't keep a union on its toes is a bad one — being tested on every issue is what unionism is all about".

Few black unions have taken a considered policy stance on the closed shop principle and they are not necessarily against it.

Fosatu's spokesman says its unions may, at some stage, consider demanding closed shops. But, he adds, "they must at least be freely negotiated by a majority union at plant level".

Thus, even if a union represents a majority of workers industry-wide, it should not be able to force membership on a plant where most workers have not joined it.

And black unions insist that, despite the stated opposition of employers to the closed shop, many are happy to sign such agreements because "it suits them very nicely by locking in a tame, compliant, union".

Key issue

The closed shop is set to become a key labour issue — and a source of unrest — as black workers reject unions which have been "forced" on them.

The issue is also a source of dissatisfaction for employers who want to work out an accomodation with black unions free of industrial council influence — it is the councils which apply the closed shops.

Where closed shops are aimed at keeping representative unions out, they are likely to have as little success as other measures aimed at the same thing.

And councils may find it increasingly difficult to maintain closed shops in the face of growing black worker disenchantment.

PRIME MINISTER SEES DIFFICULT TRANSITION NEXT YEAR

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 13 Nov 81 p 7

[Text]

IT WAS necessary to temper optimism with a necessary degree of realism and to face the fact that the South African economy would go through a difficult transitional phase next year, the Prime Minister, Mr P W Botha, said in his keynote address.

Referring to the excellent co-operation between the private and public sectors, which resulted from the Carlton Congress two years ago, he told business leaders that this co-operation had undoubtedly contributed to the exceptionally high rate of economic growth during the past two years.

He believed that the conference, which he referred to as "the Good Hope Conference," would also promote economic progress and prosperity even further.

He warned, however, that there would first have to be consolidation and adjustment before the next upward phase of the business cycle could begin.

"There is no denying that conditions and prospects in the world economy have deteriorated during the past few months. The major industrial countries are at present experiencing severe recessionary conditions.

"In addition, there has been a marked drop in the gold price from the high levels of 1980. These unfavourable external developments, which are obviously beyond our control, have already had an adverse effect on our exports and domestic economy, and this process will probably continue into 1982.

"It would therefore only be realistic to expect the real growth rate in 1982 to fall temporarily below the exceptionally high rates of 1980 and 1981, and the deficit on the current account of our balance of payments to continue for the time being.

"We will not easily succeed, either, in bringing down the rate of inflation to a satisfactory level in the coming months.

"To handle the situation correctly we must be sure that we are not living above our incomes. This will mean, among other things, that both the public and private sectors will have to decide on their priorities very judiciously and that all unnecessary State spending will have to be eliminated and that thorough control of the money supply will have to be maintained.

"Fortunately the signs are already there that, if we persevere on this road, a solid foundation will be laid for the next strong revival in 1983 and 1984," the Prime Minister said.

PRIME MINISTER RELEASES REVISED NINTH ECONOMIC PLAN

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 13 Nov 81 p 8

[Text]

INDUSTRIAL development in existing metropolitan areas should in future be regulated mainly by indirect measures and sections of the Physical Planning Act would be repealed to achieve this, the Prime Minister said.

Mr Botha released the revised version of the ninth economic development programme (1978-1987) for the Republic.

He spelt out the government's attitude towards a programme of industrial decentralisation that resulted from an investigation by the economic co-operation and strategy panel, the special constellation committee under the chairmanship of Dr Gerhard de Kock, and rounded off by the economic planning branch of the Office of the Prime Minister in conjunction with the working party of the Cabinet committee for economic affairs.

The report had been considered by the Cabinet before being made available at the conference, the Prime Minister said before touching on certain aspects of the recommendations which he considered important.

"In the first place, it is suggested that industrial development in the existing metropolitan areas should in future be regulated mainly by indirect measures, with due regard to the differences in development between the different areas," Mr Botha said.

Regarding industrial development in areas away from the metropolitan areas, it was suggested that this should be promoted on a regional basis at a limited number of industrial development points.

The proposals involved dividing South Africa into eight development regions within which 20 development points were identified in the White areas of the Republic, while it was foreseen that self-governing and independent States would possibly identify a further 27 points of development in their own areas.

Regarding regulation of industrial development in existing metropolitan areas, the control of industrial land in terms of Section Two of the Physical Planning Act and the recovery of the costs of infra-structure and public services in such areas by means of taxes were regarded as suitable measures.

"It is also foreseen, however, that the introduction of these measures will be accompanied by the repeal of Section Three of the Physical Planning Act," Mr Botha said.

IT WAS the Government's serious intention to expand further the system of free enterprise, the Prime Minister said.

He drew attention to the Government's decision to accept the recommendations of the President's Council that the Group Areas Act and related acts should be investigated by a technical commitee to introduce improvements without prejudice to town and urban communities.

"The Riekert Commission's recommendations on matters such as the opening of trading areas to all population groups and the lifting of restrictions on the employment of people of a particular population groups in certain occupations outside their own group areas must necessarily be dealt with in conjunction with this wider inquiry."

Mr Botha said that because the State lacked the financial means to carry the full burden of housing, the private sector would have to play a more active part in planning and financing lower-cost housing.

BUSINESSMEN, ECONOMISTS SEE COOLING OF ECONOMY

Johannesburg THE STAR in English 30 Oct 81 pp 1, 3

[Article by David Breier]

[Text]

South Africa's economic boom is over. There will be fewer jobs next year, smaller pay increases, and a falling economic growth rate, say top businessmen and econ-mists omists.

Many believe, however, that a "cooling off" period will curb inflation, encourage economic consolidation, and benefit the nation--provided the slow-down does not last long.

Last year the growth rate was a phenomenal 8 percent. This year it is likely to end up at about 4,2 percent.

Next year, according to many economists, it may fall to less than 2 percent.

But according to widespread predictions, including those of Dr Gerhard de Kock, Governor of the Reserve Bank, the economy will pick up again in 1983 in line with expected world trends.

Mr Tony Bloom, chairman of the Premier Group, said South Africa was caught in the classic squeeze between inflation and the need to provide jobs to counter unemployment.

He said the lesser of the two evils was unemployment.

Mr Bloom, speaking on the eve of next month's private enterprise summit with the Prime Minister, Mr P W Botha, criticised the Government for permitting the recent overheating of the economy.

Arguments

Mr Arthur Hammond-Tooke, Federated Chamber of Industries economist, said there were arguments that the slowdown would benefit the economy in the short term.

These were:

The lull would give industry a chance to train skilled manpower as the shortage creates a ceiling to economic growth.

As demand for goods cools off, there would be less demand inflation.

But to prevent the overall effects of rising black unemployment, Mr Hammond-Tooke suggested possible support for the economy through a moderate and well-timed expansionist policy including increased Goverment spending.

Irresponsible

However, Mr A Engelbrecht, chief economist of Volkskas, said it was irresponsible to stimulate the economy now.

He said that before the problems of unemployment could be solved, the issues of inflation and the adverse balance-of-payments had to be solved.

Mr Engelbrecht said he doubted inflation would be solved by the economic down turn. The drop in the value of the rand would lead to higher import prices which would aggravate inflation, he said.

He said the Government could not be blamed for the abnormally high growth rate last year as this was due to the high gold price.

But Dr Johan Cloete, group economist of Barclays Bank, said the Government had failed to control the economy properly and had allowed a stop-go syndrome.

He said a higher average growth-rate could be achieved by smoothing the cyclical fluctuations in the economy instead of having a high growth rate one year and little growth the next.

Dr Skippie Scheepers, deputy chairman of the National Manpower Commission, said it was impossible for the Government to prevent fluctuations as trends such as the gold price and overseas recessions affected South Africa.

Dr Scheepers said that the shortage of trained manpower would be less urgent in next year's downturn, but he said there would still be a shortage.

Ideally industrialists should use this opportunity to prepare themselves for a future boom by training manpower and using the Government's subsidies for in-house training.

But he said he doubted industrialists would follow this course as they were businessmen and tended to reduce training when they had less need of workers.

He predicted that pay increases next year would be lower than over the past year.

Dr Scheepers said employees would not fire black workers during the recession, but the unemployment problems could be aggravated when new workers entering the market could find new jobs. At present there are about 500 000 unemployed blacks in the country, he said.

Professor Geert de Wet, Randse Afrikaanse Universiteit economist, said the Econometric Study Group at RAU had predicted a growth rate of only one percent or even nil for next year.

He said inflation could be reduced from 15 percent to 12 percent, but he regarded this as still too high.

"We can only start crowing that we have beaten inflation when we have reduced it to five percent or even to nothing," he said.

He said South Africa would have to restore its balance of payments by reducing imports and increasing exports before it could experience an economic upsurge in 1983.

He said next year's economic lull would be "pleasant" for businessmen who could take it easy, but it would be good for the country as a whole.

Mr Meyer Kahn, managing director of OK Bazaars, said the economic downturn would have a positive effect on reducing inflation and would result in less job mobility as jobs would be hard to find, while salaries would not go up at the rate of the past years.

PW BOTHA LANDS STRENGTH OF ECONOMY

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 13 Nov 81 p 2

[Text]

CAPE TOWN. — The South African economy could still be considered one of the strongest in the Western world, the Prime Minister, Mr P W Botha, said yesterday.

In a statement issued in Cape Town at the business leaders conference, Mr Botha said it was projected that on an average, the real gross domestic product for South Africa for the next seven years would grow at about 5,1 percent a year.

"The present relatively high gold price and the expectation that this price will stabilise at about this high level in the future means that the current account of the balance of payments will, in the long term, leave more room for growth.

"Because of these factors the private sector should increase its share in the economy.

"The important role played by gold in the South African economy has been reaffirmed to such an extent that any substantial decline in the gold price can change the short term economic climate from optimism to pessimism.

"The South African labour market experienced a shortage of skilled labour and a surplus of semi-skilled and unskilled labour.

"The economic upswing experience during 1980 has helped to create more employment, including employment for semi-skilled and unskilled workers but at the same time it has again accentuated the chronic shortage of skilled workers.

"Given the high level of capacity utilisation and the shortage of certain production factors, there is very little that the authorities can do at this point in time to stimulate the economic growth in the short term."

As far as possible the country should pursue a higher economic growth rate generated from its own resources and the rate at which the public sector's claim on the available resources increased in comparison with that of the private sector would have to be curbed to a point where the private sector would be enabled to fulfill its development role.

So far as public expenditure was concerned it was assumed that the government would play only an accommodating role in the economy and would on average over the whole period not act to stimulate it.

The slowing down of public sector expenditure in comparison with that of the private sector implied that the state would have to adjust its taxation policy.

As far as monetary policy was concerned the GDP indicated that the money supply would play an important role in bringing about change "at the real level".

So far as future trade policy was concerned it was assumed that on the import side no additional measures would be taken to promote import substitution.

With regard to the combating of inflation the present policy of financial discipline would still be pursued, while attention would still have to be given to ways of strengthening the market forces of supply and demand. — Sapa.

LOWER DOLLAR GOLD PRICE COULD BE DETRIMENTAL

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 30 Oct 81 p 17

[Article by John Mulcahy]

[Text]

A LOWER dollar gold price has a direct and detrimental effect on SA's balance of payments, and if it fluctuates at levels lower than in the past year even harsher monetary and fiscal policies will have to be pursued.

This warning is given by Mr Basil Hersov in his chairman's review of Anglo-Transvaal Consolidated Investment Company (Anglovaal). He says such a development will have an inhibiting effect on the growth of industry and must affect industrial company profits.

The belief of some economists that the South African economy over the past generation has been moving away from its dependency on the gold and other mining industries has proved incorrect.

"The fortunes of South Africa and the Anglovaal group, which in many respects is a microcosm of the SA economy, still depend very much on gold and other mining activities and will do so for the foreseeable future," says Mr Hersov.

Erroneous predictions, constantly made, prove that the future gold price level is impossible to assess as there are too many intangible factors at work for any rational short-term forecasts to be made.

In calculations relating to new mines or capital expenditure on existing mines volatile factors, such as exchange rates, inflation, price fluctuations and interest rates have to be taken into account.

"In all these matters we bear in mind that the gold price, being so central to our fortunes, has long since become an emotional issue where objectivity is nearly impossible."

For this reason, it is important to pay attention to both the pro-gold and anti-gold lobbies to maintain some perspective.

Greater sophistication has become necessary in the marketing and financing of mineral products, taking into account the numerous futures and forward markets that exist, and the hedging made possible against movements in prices and exchange rates, as well as in interest rates.

"We believe that the best policy to pursue under all these circumstances is one of prudence and flexibility, combined with the broadest use of new techniques and skills."

Mr Hersov says financial results in the current year indicate improvements in most group companies. Subject to the usual provisos on the uncertainties of world metal and mineral prices, and no serious deterioration in the South Africa business climate, Anglovaal is again budgeting for high profits.

Attributable profit in the year to June rose to R47 654 000 from R38 074 000, and earnings rose by 25% to 1 121c a share.

Earnings growth in the past year resulted from higher dividends from mining investments and the considerable increase in the earnings of industrial subsidiaries.

The market value of the group's listed investments at June 30 was R302-million, compared with R266-million at the end of the previous year, and by October 2 the market value had risen to R407-million.

Anglovaal's industrial interests, which in the past year accounted for 41% of group income, reached an aggregate turnover of R1 000-million, and pre-tax profit of about R100-million.

All industrial companies in the group, with the exception of Denver Metal Works (Pty), performed satisfactorily, say Anglovaal's directors, with profit gains augmented by the contributions from Grinaker Holdings, Bakers and RISA Investments.

Since January this year there has been a slowing down in the economic growth rate, and although this cyclical trend is expected to persist throughout the financial year, the industrial group (ATI) expects to improve profits.

Mr Hersov says the financial strength of Anglovaal's subsidiaries has been improved in recent years by adopting conservative dividend policies, leading to substantial improvements in debt-equity ratios.

Anglovaal's search for gold, coal and base minerals was maintained at a high level during the year, with drilling programmes for gold in progress in the Free State and Western Transvaal.

In two areas of the Eastern Transvaal, where exploration is being undertaken in partnership with Anglo American Prospecting Services (Pty), drilling results have been disappointing, and the options over one of the areas are being abandoned.

Drilling continues in the remaining option area, says Mr Hersov, but it is not possible to forecast results.

Drilling of the various base mineral occurrences has been completed, and although studies of the results are still in progress, the development of a mine on these areas is unlikely.

Coal exploration has been intensified, with several areas prospected and additional reserves located in the Witbank and Bethal districts.

Mr Hersov says an assessment of total reserves will be made after more detailed drilling is completed in the current year.

SA's total coal exports will only reach the limit under existing export quotas in 1985-86, says Mr Hersov, but Anglovaal on its own behalf and that of its partners has for some years had an application for an export quota before the authorities.

The group has also applied for a licence to produce methanol, and a decision is awaited from the Minister of Mineral and Energy Affairs.

Mr Hersov goes no further on the Venetia diamond deposit in the Zoutpansberg district.

OPPENHEIMER COMMENTS ON 'SON OF CARLTON'

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 13 Nov 81 p 2

[Text]

CAPE TOWN. — The business leaders' conference had created hope that the Prime Minister's process of change would continue, Mr Harry Oppenheimer, chairman of Anglo-American Corporation, said yesterday.

At the same time national business leaders had been generally disappointed with the slowness of this change, he said.

Speaking after yesterday's conference, he said two years ago his reaction to Mr P W Botha's reform initiatives had elicited "a little too much hope."

Mr Oppenheimer emphasised, however, that in long political experience, what he had seen and heard from the present National Party government amounted to "enormous change in South Africa, which was never contemplated 10 years ago and which gives me hope that the process that was started (at the Carlton Conference) will go on."

Earlier, during the conference itself, Mr Oppenheimer said the Carlton Conference held two years ago had opened new lines of consultation and co-operation between the Government and the private sector.

Since then, in his view, many businessmen had been disappointed with the progress made subsequently.

"It seems that the Government either will not accept or is unable or unwilling to act upon the facts."

Mr Oppenheimer said it was only in the field of industrial relations that major, solid progress had been made.

"We all know the three other main areas in which reform is still needed in order to set the private sector free to realise its potential for the country."

"The first is in regard to the mobility of labour. The second is in relation to Black education, with particular reference to technical education, and the third is in respect of housing.

"Certainly there have been improvements in all these fields, but I think it will be common cause here that very much more is urgently needed to be done in each of these, both legislatively and administratively.

"It is particularly frustrating to businessmen when practical measures to improve the situation are rejected for what appear to be ideological reasons, as for instance when Blacks are refused entry into half-empty technical colleges.

"It would not be proper for me to discuss the political implications of the large and rapidly growing industrialised Black population, except insofar as the conduct of industry is directly affected," Mr Oppenheimer said.

He would, therefore, confine himself to pointing out that unless the Government in its wisdom was able to devise an acceptable political dispensation for urban Blacks, it was virtually certain that their growing industrial power would be used for political purposes with gravely disruptive effects on the whole economy.

Mr Oppenheimer said the private sector also felt it had reason for disappointment and had frankly to admit that the high hopes of two years ago had been followed by a general sense of disillusionment.

He ascribed this to the possibility that the private sector had entertained exaggerated expectations of what the Government could do, or to mistaken ideas about what the Government wanted to do.

"Perhaps the Government did not fully take into account how private business operates and how it is motivated.

"In any case, I believe that if the Government's great initiative is to succeed we must talk in much plainer and more precise terms than we did two years ago."

Mr Oppenheimer said there had been "no reaction" from the main table regarding the Prime Minister's opening speech yesterday morning.

"There is nobody who didn't ask for an end to discrimination," Mr Oppenheimer said, describing reaction to the Prime Minister's keynote speech. The general feeling was that discrimination was not being removed fast enough.

He was also disappointed about the size of the conference because, as he put it, it limited the Prime Minister in talking confidentially about the future.

"But I am of the impression that the Prime Minister is still on his reformist course," Mr Oppenheimer said.

"I am not sure about how fast it is, but it is something at least," he said.

Compared with the Carlton Conference of two years ago, he said, the business world had been "more starry-eyed than at this one". — Sapa.

BOTHA CONSIDERS SUMMIT AS CONSTRUCTIVE

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 13 Nov 81 pp 1-2

[Article by Murray McNally]

[Text] The Government and private sector would continue talks initiated by the business leaders' conference, the Prime Minister, Mr P W Botha, said in Cape Town yesterday.

The business leaders' conference, held in Cape Town, provided the Government with an opportunity to hear a variety of opinions of leaders in the private sector, Mr Botha said.

He believed the private sector would benefit from the conference because delegates now had "a greater appreciation" of the problems which beset the Government.

Discussion between the private sector and the Government would continue and if it was necessary, another business leaders' conference would be held in the future.

He said observers who had predicted a negative confrontation between the private sector and the Government at the conference were proved to be wrong.

The conference was, instead, characterised by "constructiveness".

"I was impressed by the response shown by the various delegates and the wide range of interests represented," Mr Botha said later at a Press conference.

"Several delegates noted that there were few countries in the world where business leaders and governments had the opportunity of meeting at a conference of this sort."

In his opening address to the conference, Mr Botha emphasised the importance of encouraging industrial development at various points by means of a "substantially improved package of incentives".

The proposed level of incentives varied from region to region, depending on development needs, establishment disadvantages and development possibilities, he said.

In view of the high priority which the government continued to give to development of the national states, provision was made before giving preferential treatment to selected points in development regions as regards to the incentive levels.

The process of regional development and particularly the programme of industrial decentralisation, had been subjected to intensive devaluation by the economic co-operation and strategy panel and the special constellation committee during the past two years.

Recommendations on industrial decentralisation which resulted from the investigations were released yesterday. They include:

- Industrial development in existing metropolitan areas would in future be regulated mainly by indirect measures, but with regard to the differences in development between the different areas.
- Industrial development would be promoted on the periphery of metropolitan areas at a limited amount of deconcentration points by means of appropriate incentive.
- Industrial development in areas away from the metropolitan areas should be promoted on a regional basis at a limited number of industrial development points.
- The proposals involved dividing South Africa into eight development regions within which 20 development points were identified in the White areas. Selfgoverning and independent states could identify a further 27 points within their borders.

The idea was that the State provision for infrastructure creation at any given time should be concentrated only on a limited number of development points so as to give impetus to large-scale industrial developments further afield.

The Government was keen to see the suggestions put into effect from April 1 next year, Mr Botha said.

PROMOTION OF INDUSTRIAL AREAS NEEDS RETHINKING

Johannesbu THE CITIZEN in English 13 Nov 81 p 7

[Text]

THE direct control of industrial development in metropolitan areas should be abandoned and incentives for industrial development outside these areas should be designed to promote private initiative, the working group for economic affairs of the Prime Minister's Economic Planning Branch recommends in a memorandum.

They identified eight main economic development regions for South Africa and proposed measures for promoting industrial development and deconcentrating areas where such development was subject to natural growth forces.

The memorandum said there was no reason to depart from the present definition of metropolitan areas for the purpose of regulating industrial development. These were:

The Cape Peninsula, the Port Elizabeth-Uitenhage area, the Durban-Pinetown area and the Pretoria - Witwatersrand-Vaal Triangle.

Regarding the regulation of industrial development in these four metropolitan areas, the group proposed the following general measures:

●As an indirect physical control measure, control in respect of location of industries under Section Two of the Physical Planning Act is to be continued, provided that the development of area-bound industries is not restricted unnecessarily and that capital intensity is not promoted unduly;

●As an indirect fiscal control measure, the Government should recover from employers and other residents the cost of infrastructural and other Government services which amounted to internalising costs which would be effected, inter alia, by the creation of additional sources of Government revenue to finance services (specific recommendations were still to be prepared by the government institutions concerned;

●Section three of the Physical Planning Act should be abolished once proposed improved incentives for industrial development, as well as the indirect fiscal control measures in metropolitan areas, came into effect in order to regulate the location of industries through indirect rather than direct measures.

Regarding incentives for industrial development outside the metropolitan areas, the working group proposed that the incentives be designed to limit, as far as possible, Government participation in redering of collective goods and services, the creation of infrastructure and the maintenance of a favourable climate for private investment and local development.

MAIZE EXPORTERS ADOPT HARD-NOSED LINE

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 3 Nov 81 p 16

[Text]

A HARD-DRIVING group of farmers, recently put in control of South Africa's maize industry, have thrown the maize export trade into an unprecedented state of flux.

The Maize Board has made two far-reaching changes in its export policies. Instead of committing itself to selling all exports, with the exception of some government-to-government deals, through the traditional system of twice-weekly secret tenders, the board will consider negotiating directly with international trading houses and foreign consumers.

Furthermore, the board is to make increasing use of the Chicago futures market to hedge its export earnings. Only about 65 000 tons of mazie has been hedged since the mechanism was first used last year.

South Africa is the world's third largest maize exporter, after the US and Argentina. Thanks to a record crop of more than 13 400 000 tons, exports this year are expected to reach 5 320 000 tons against 3 490 000 tons in 1980. Maize is SA's most valuable agricultural export, with earnings likely to reach R600-million this year.

The maize industry has important political connotations, both within South Africa and abroad. Many countries which normally boycott South African goods — including Kenya, Iran, Jordan, Venezuela and Singapore — buy sizeable quantities of its maize.

The 7 000 maize farmers are a powerful political lobby. The recent history of the maize lobby has a crucial bearing on the industry's increasingly aggressive attitude towards those whom it believes are not helping it as much as they can, including the international grain trading companies.

In the late 1970s, two groups of farmers — one affiliated to the conservative South African Agricultural Union, the other far more outspoken and radical — fought bitterly for Government recognition as the mouthpiece of the industry.

The two bodies merged last year to form the National Maize Producers Organisation (Nampo). But the more aggressive group has the upper hand. One of its leaders, Mr Crawford Van Abo, took over as chairman of the Maize Board three months ago.

The winds of change are now gusting through the industry. Nampo men are openly critical of Maize Board officials, and are believed to be planning a complete restructure of the board's administrative machinery. Press hand-outs on Maize Board policy are released not at the board's headquarters in Pretoria, but from Nampo's offices at Bothaville in the Free State.

Mr Van Abo, who besides being a maize farmer deals in property, gold and diamonds, is anxious to increase the board's marketing flexibility, thereby — he hopes — raising export earnings.

According to Mr Van Abo, South Africa's maize receipts would have been R100-million higher this year had the entire export crop been hedged on the Chicago market. The board's policy up to now has been that no more than half the crop would be hedged.

Instead of regarding hedging as a way of protecting earnings in a falling market, Mr Van Abo and his colleagues — who have a majority on the board — appear to be confident that it is a fail-safe way of boosting export profits.

On a recent visit to the US, Mr Van Abo closed a hedge eight months before its maturity date, realising a profit of R1 300 000. A trader argues that "they made a profit for the wrong reasons. They're going to burn their fingers."

The board has appointed three US brokers — among them Cargill Investor Services and ACLI International — to handle its hedging transactions.

The decision to permit direct negotitions outside the tender system has had a mixed reception. Representatives of the large grain trading houses — such as Continental Grain Tradax and Bunge — do not expect the move to disrupt their South African operations.

Some welcome the prospect of signing long-term contracts without the uncertainty of wondering who will win the tender each Tuesday and Thursday.

Smaller buyers are more worried, however. In spite of assurances, the Maize Board has increased the tonnages siphoned off for government-to-government deals with countries such as Taiwan, Zimbabwe and Mozambique. The traders fear the process will be repeated in direct transactions, leaving next to nothing for the tenders.

The eagerness of the new board to increase its flexibility has been further demonstrated by its rejection of several tender bids in recent months — a rare event in the past.

Traders suspect that the board may soon raise the monthly tender programme from 30 to 40 cargoes. Although South Africa's rail and port facilities cannot handle more than about 34 cargoes a month (grain loading facilities in East London are to be expanded over the next four years) by offering as many as 40 cargoes, the board will be able to cancel tenders on which bids are not high enough for its liking.

SEARCH FOR OIL MAKES GOOD PROGRESS

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 5 Nov 81 p 5

[Text]

THE search for oil in South African waters was making good progress and there was a "reasonable possibilty" that economically viable gas and light oil reserves would be found, said Sasol's chairman, Mr D P de Villiers, yesterday.

Speaking at a congress of the Regional Development Association in Middelburg, he said: "With the current standard of Soekor know-how, it hopes for further successes in the southern sea tefritories.

"Judging by the nature of the geological structures present, the finding of oil is a reasonable possibility."

Soekor felt that successes it had achieved on the structures where it had drilled indicated a good chance of finding viable gas or oil reserves.

During the past few weeks, two drills had been working in the South Coast area, Mr De Villiers said.

The drilling programme with the two drills would continue until January next year.

In 1983, three drills would be used in South African waters.

Improved

Mr de Villiers said Soekor had improved its drilling techniques considerably. It was now possible to drill a 2 000m borehole in less than three weeks — a job that had taken between seven and eight weeks previously.

Turning to coal, he said that more and better exploration programmes, larger investments and improved mining methods had led to a dramatic change in South Africa's coal reserve position.

"In 1975 the Patrick Commission estimated our in situ coal reserves at 81 000-million tons and recoverable reserves at 25 000-million tons.

"Today, these figures are respectively 110 000-million tons and 51 000-million tons," Mr De Villiers said.

Compared to the rest of the world, the South African energy situation was favourable. South Africa was dependent on crude oil for only about 20% of its energy needs.

Boycotts

In spite of great progress in the energy field, several aspects of the South African energy situation were still "strategically delicate".

"In spite of boycotts, we still have many oil friends. Bandying about information about international transactions, especially if the information proves to be wrong, creates the danger of severe embarrassment.

"If we wish to keep our wheels rolling in South Africa, colossal capital investments will still have to be made.

"Erroneous and provocative information about investors in the energy industry does not augur well for our country's energy future," he said. — Sapa.

WESTERN PLATINUM SEEKS TO EXPLOIT UG-2 REEF CHROMITE

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 5 Nov 81 p 16

[Article by John Mulcahy: "Wesplat to Look at Ferrochrome Plant"]

[Text]

WESTERN Platinum is looking for a way to exploit the substantial quantities of chromite it will soon have available from the UG-2 Reef.

The Lonrho-controlled maverick platinum producer, which in complete contrast to Rustenburg and Impala discloses full operational results, will start milling material from UG-2 in April.

Work is well advanced on a mill to treat 60 000 tons a month of ore from UG-2, which will leave about 35 000 tons a month of chrome ore.

The chromite will be channelled into a tailings dam, separate from the Merensky tailings dump, until a method of exploitation has been devised.

The Council for Mineral Technology (formerly the National Institute for Metallurgy) is testing the various routes for exploitation of Wesplat's chromite, and it is believed that ferrochrome is a strong possibility.

The chrome ore extracted from UG-2 will have a grade of about 35% chrome, and it will be necessary to upgrade it to about 42% before further exploitation can be considered.

The capital cost of a ferrochrome plant would be about R100-million, and Wesplat's principals — Lonrho, Falconbridge and Superior Oil — are unlikely to take the decision to go ahead with a plant while the ferrochrome market is in its present trough.

However, the prospect is being seriously considered — on a visit to the mine I was shown the likely site for a ferrochrome plant — and if Wesplats can extend the cost-effectiveness of its mining operation to a ferrocrhome scheme it could pose a real threat to existing South African producers in years to come.

Wesplat is milling around 110 000 tons of rock a month from the Merensky Reef, and is also building up a surface stockpile at a rate of 12 000 tons a month.

Wesplat's general manager, Mr Andrew Saffy, says the stockpile will be built up to 120 000 tons, and will be used for the initial throughput into the UG-2 mill.

UG-2 is expected to contribute an additional 110 000 oz of platinum group metals to Wesplat's production, taking annual output of PGM to 245 000 oz, including 140 000 oz of platinum (now about 85 000 oz a year).

UG-2 contains about 6,5 g/t PGM, compared with around 4,8 g/t on the Merensky reef, so the advantages of an extraction method are clear.

At Rustenburg and Impala the reverse is true, with the Merensky Reef in those areas carrying a higher value of PGM than UG-2, and this will inhibit exploitation of the chrome-rich reef by the two majors.

Wesplat sells about 75% of its PGM on contract to Mitsibushi in Japan, with the US the second biggest customer.

Mr Saffy says Wesplat would not have gone ahead with development of the UG-2 — at a time when the platinum market is in the doldrums, and other producers are talking of cutbacks — if it did not have assurance of demand from contractual customers.

While Wesplat's production is barely enough to cause a ripple in the huge pool of production by Rustenburg and Impala — estimated by Mr Sid Newman recently at 1 300 000 oz and 950 000 oz respectively — it is clear that the mine has been able to sell its current production, as well as increase production.

On the operational side Wesplat has successfully implemented the "up-dip" method of mining, with startling effects on productivity.

The mine has 13 stopers, producing more than 110 000 tons of rock a month, and development has been at such a fast rate that it is now about two years ahead of stoping.

The exceptional development would, in normal circumstances, have allowed the mine to reduce its working complement, but the development team has been kept on to open up UG-2.

Mr Saffy believes there is not enough emphasis placed on the cost-effectiveness of platinum as a catalyst. "Because of its catalytic role platinum saves an enormous amount of energy."

The only factor to force the platinum price down further would be an oversupply situation on the market, says Mr Saffy, and the decision by Impala to gear its production to offtake indicates that the big producers are striving to keep supply and demand in balance.

Although Russia does not release details of production, it is known to be experiencing severe technical problems, affecting production, and this should also help to maintain the supply-demand balance.

Wesplat sells most of its production on contract at negotiated prices which take into account the ruling producer price, and the free market price.

The company has on occasion used forward selling to hedge against possible declines in the price, but has for some time been out of the hedging market as the view is that the platinum price will probably no fall further, says a Wesplat spokesman.

WEATHER AUGURS WELL FOR SUGAR CROP

Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 30 Oct 81 p 21

[Text]

PROSPECTS for South Africa's 1982-83 May to April sugar crop look good at this early stage, according to the general manager of the Cane Growers Association, Mr Ernie Morrison.

The general manger of the Sugar Association, Mr Peter Sale, says the weather over the past few months in the main cane areas has been favourable for next season's crop.

Mr Morrison says the crucial time for the crop will be between January and March, when cane grows fast at the height of summer.

September rainfall was well above average and this month excellent growing conditions have been experienced throughout the sugar belt, he says.

Zululand, which produces about 35% of the South African crop, had a particularly good September with rainfall 59% above average.

Mr Sale said the Sugar Association had reversed last month's decision to stop releasing official monthly estimates of the domestic sugar crop.

He said the latest estimate put 1981-82 output at slightly under 2-million tons tel quel against 1980-81's drought-hit 1 610 000 tons.

Projections for the 1981-82 crop have risen over the past few months in response to the favourable weather, and Mr Sale says there is likely to be a further moderate increase in forecasts.

Mr Morrison said, however, that the current crop had the lowest sucrose content since 1934 when locusts ravaged the cane. The reason for this year's low sucrose content is a combination of last year's severe drought and abundant late rains during this season's harvesting.

Mr Sale said it would take about 9.5 tons of cane to produce a ton of sugar this season against a normal average of about nine tons.

Mr Morrison said the eldana borer pest was a continuing problem cane growers.

He said the industry was trying to quantify crop damage attributable to the eldana and growers were cutting cane as quickly as possible to minimise its effects.

HIGH TENSION CABLE SET FOR LOCAL PRODUCTION

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 13 Nov 81 p 21

[Text]

SOUTH Africa is about to enter the top echelons of cable manufacturing when African Cables completes its new plant in Vereeniging designed to manufacture high tension cable.

The improvements to the existing African Cables plant are nearly complete and have cost about R4-million. Until now high tension cable has been imported at considerable cost.

The extensions promise to make the company one of the major local manufacturers of cable, holding at least 30 percent of the local market.

In addition to plant equipment necessary for the manufacture of the new cable, the firm has also invested nearly R1-million on a test laboratory comprising two sealed Faraday boxes equipped with lightning simulators and sophisticated electrical measuring devices.

This test equipment is the most sophisticated in the Southern Hemisphere and is unequalled even by SABS equipment. The African Cable factory itself is the largest of its kind in the Southern Hemisphere.

High tension cable is in demand by Escom and some of the larger municipalities. There are now only a few very specialised cables which are still imported. Even these, however, can be manufactured locally, although the cost is prohibitive. — ANDY THOMPSON.

BRIEFS

SECRETS CHARGE--A member of the health services in the South African Defence Force was yesterday found guilty in the Johannesburg Regional Court on four charges under the Official Secrets Act. Gerhardus van der Weff, 20, of Argyle Court, Smit Street, Joubert Park, was sentenced to two years' jail and 40 months suspended for five years, plus a fine of R400 or 100 days' jail. Proceedings were held in camera when evidence and judgment were given on Thursday. Magistrate Mr L V de Kock said that Van der Weff was convicted on serious charges. He said Van der Weff committed the offences partly due to the influence of his friend Mr Benjamin Greyling, who had contact with a banned organisation in Swaziland. He said evidence showed that documents involved in the trial were of a sensitive nature and could have resulted in a serious loss to the Republic. According to the charge the offences were alleged to have been committed last year (no date given) at the Military Theological Institute of the South African Defence Force at Verwoerdburg. Van der Weff had pleaded guilty to all charges. He told the court that he wished to start a new life if given a suspended sentence. [Text] [Johannesburg RAND DAILY MAIL in English 3 Nov 81 p 2]

DESTABILIZATION TARGET--Every government in Southern Africa that was unwilling to serve Soviet interests was a target of the strategy of destablisation the Prime Minister said. "What the communists are concerned with is not the interests of the Black and Brown people in South Africa. They are out to undermine the stability and the prosperity of the sub-continent." There was one important consideration in trying to undertake a process of reform along well-considered lines. Instability was bound to follow if reforms were tackled which did not allow for balance of spheres of interest. "The raising of the level of political participation alone, or of the average level of prosperity alone, or of the level of education alone, or in respect of specific groups alone, cannot be conducive to stability." [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 13 Nov 81 p 8]

ROCKET ATTACK--A house manned by Defence Force personnel was attacked and destroyed early on Sunday in a grenade and rocket attack near the Swaziland border. The attack, in which no one was injured, came shortly after midnight on Saturday. The incident was confirmed yesterday by a spokesman for the South African Defence Force. Two members of the Defence Force were inside the house at Jeppes Reef when the attack occurred. They managed to escape. The attack was a hit and run affair with grenades. Rockets and small arms fire was used. The building was completely destroyed. The Defence Force spokesman said the small arms fire attack was launched from a distance. Several explosions accompanied the rifle fire and the attackers are believed to have fled across the border shortly afterwards. Police headquarters in Pretoria confirmed that investigations had been launched after the attack but it is believed policy have little hope of apprehending the attackers. No-one has yet claimed responsibility for the attack but it is believed the African National Congress was behind it. Jeppes Reef is situated only a few kilometres from the Swaziland border and about 100kms from Nelspruit in the heart of the lowveld. Police said the house was within walking distance of the border and was used as accommodation space for the Defence Force. [Text] [Johannesburt SOWETAN in English 3 Nov 81 p 3]

INDUSTRIAL DECENTRALIZATION--The new deal for industrial decentralisation announced by the Prime Minister, Mr P W Botha, in Cape Town yesterday should encourage industrialists locating both existing and proposed projects away from the major metropolitan areas. This was the view of Mr Louis Barclay, manager of Industrial Consulting Engineers and Developers of South Africa (ICED). There were several major implications in the changes announced, including the fact that they fell into the overall concept of a constellation of African states and that the spirit of private enterprise was to be given added impetus, he said. Mr Barclay welcomed the fact that in future the emphasis would be on positive incentives as opposed to forcing industrialists to move to decentralised areas. "There are now genuine benefits to be had from such a move as opposed to merely receiving compensation for the economic inconvenience of doing so," Mr Barclay said. [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 13 Nov 81 p 2]

BETTER RESISTANCE--South Africa was today better equipped than two years ago to resist the external forces aimed against her and to extend a hand of cooperation to help others, the Prime Minister, said. "Our relations with the United States and some other countries are also characterised by greater realism. Thanks to our agricultural industry the RSA is one of the most important producers of food in the world, and the most important in Africa. As far as SWA is concerned a fresh attempt is being made to find a satisfactory solution, with recognition of the role to be played by the internal parties. This is not to say we are out of the woods. There are still major and delicate negotiations in store. If we differ, let us differ, let us differ on the merits of matters, but let us co-operate in those matters on which we really agree. In this way a better understanding will also evolve in due course concerning those things about which we do not now agree." [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 13 Nov 81 p 7]

SHIPPING DIFFICULTIES--Bulawayo, November 5--A Nigerian businessman has bought 30,000 Zimbabwe dollars' (42,000 U.S.) worth of hardware here but says he is stuck for a way to ship it home. M.I.T. Aroboto, who has his own company in the West African state, told the Bulawayo chronicle that he could not send the spades, shovels and other building materials home via South Africa because Nigerian customs would not accept them. "I cannot send them via Maputo because there is no ship that travels to Nigeria from Mozambique", he said. An official of the supplier company said Mr Aroboto's problem illustrated the difficulties that lack of transport was posing for Zimbabwean businesses trying to shift their focus from South Africa to Black Africa in keeping with Government policy. "There are lots of items that can be exported to Nigeria", the official said. "Prime Minister (Robert) Mugabe said we should look to the north. Now we have found markets but don't know how to get the goods there". He suggested an air freight service be set up between Zimbabwe, with its relatively well-developed manufacturing sector, and Nigeria, with its millions of dollars in oil revenues to spend. YOUNG PEOPLE'S MORES, MARRIAGE HABITS SURVEYED

[Article by Jose C. Cunha: "Society Without Grooms and An Excess of Polygamy"]

[Excerpts] The streets of our cities have lost one of their major natural attractions. It is not enough for them to be clean and illuminated; it is not enough for them to be draped in flags on national holidays. It is essential that our youth, our student, working and struggling youth should enrich the city.

Where are the young couples in this society? Why don't they show up in the streets hand in hand?

Ah! The problem is different, it is deep, it is difficult to solve. But it is not impossible to do so.

As we know, it is not easy, nowadays, for a young fellow to obtain the authorization of his girlfriend's parents to go out together; there are economic reasons militating against it. He has no housing, no furniture, no stability in life, because he is in the military, he is a student, etc.

In reference to those young people who work, we believe it is unfair for them to be affected by these situations, sometimes for years at a time.

Young people work, they have their savings, but there is no stove, there is no refrigerator, there are no dishes. The time has come to take another step in life, and there is no solution.

We believe that this explains why our young people don't go out acting as young lovers do. Yes, young people are in love, but they are in love in apartments, in invisible places, in cars, etc. And the proof that there is love around is in pregnancies, in the pregnant women we see in the streets and in the innumerable weddings that take place without previous announcement. From simple young love, we go to marriage, often because parents impose it on the young couple.

On the other hand, we find that many young girls increasingly are turning their sights toward an easier situation. They fall in love with those who have houses, cars, furniture, etc., or at least have the possibility of acquiring them.

Here we have the reason, therefore, for the lack of grooms and the excess of polygamy. We believe that with a little effort, we could begin to turn this situation around. We could start by establishing a law on housing, in which young people would have priority in getting it. We could set up bank loans to help toward the large investments that become necessary. It may not even be so difficult to lower the price of furniture, using our own raw materials; the furniture which does not even exist today, or, when it does, leaves a lot to be desired, both in price and in quality.

ACYL ASKS NATION NOT BE MADE SCAPEGOAT OF ANTI-LIBYAN FEELING

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3351, 19 Oct 81 pp 2442-2443

[Article by Alex Rondos: "Appeal to US over 'Scapegoat' Chad"]

[Text]

AN APPEAL that Chad should not be made the scapegoat of United States opposition to Libya has been made in New York by Ahmat Acyl, the Foreign Minister of Chad's Transitional Government of National Unity (GUNT). This follows a hardening of the US attitude towards Libya and a promise that the delivery of military assistance to "friends" in the region — notably Sudan and Egypt — would be accelerated.

Addressing a news conference at the United Nations, Ahmat Acyl said he hoped that "any difference between the US and Libya may be settled outside of Chad and without involving Chad as a scapegoat," adding that the GUNT believes that the "US should not attach too much importance to the Libyan presence in Chad and not use it at any rate, to disturb the relationship between the US and Chad."

The tension on the Sudan-Chad frontier has increased considerably in the last few weeks, being aggravated by the assassination of President Sadat. The Sudanese have alleged that Libyan aircraft have been crossing into their airspace bombing villages close to the boundary with Chad and that Libyan troops may have crossed the frontier and suborned some of the local population. According to the few reports trickling through from the frontier area there is evidence of aerial attacks just within Sudan.

The attacks came shortly after a series of engagements between GUNT forces, the backbone of which was composed of Libyan troops deployed to the fragile eastern regions, and Hissen Habre's followers, who are operating in Eastern Chad but largely based in Sudan.

Ahmat Acyl has claimed that the GUNT forces were "victims of aggression on the part of Sudan when Chadian dissidents supported by regular Sudanese troops infiltrated Chadian territory". He stated, though, that the area was now under government control.

The frontier has now become so porous that it is perfectly possible that Libyan troops may have crossed into Sudan and that their aircraft may have bombed villages. While the GUNT forces try to establish relative order in eastern Chad, traditionally a centre of support for Habre, his sympathisers as well as those affected by the fighting, have fled across the frontier.

President Nimeiri has now said that the US will defend his government against an attack by Libya and that Sudanese forces will take part in joint military exercises with Egyptian and US forces. The source of any such attack would be from Chad. Mr. Alexander Haig, the US Secretary of State, has, however, moved rapidly to try to clarify the Sudanese President's claims. He made it clear that the US would not defend Sudan against an attack from Libya but that deliveries of military equipment to the area would be speeded up in order to meet "urgent needs". A team of US military personnel will follow this equipment, though it has been emphasised that their stay will be temporary to familiarise the Sudanese with the equipment.

Among Chad's neighbours and in Washington, Ahmat Acyl's appeal that Chad should not become the scapegoat of anti-Libyan sentiment will raise a number of questions. The principal one concerns the very nature of the Libyan role in Chad, and therefore the Libyan desire to withdraw from Chad. There is little doubt that the success claimed by the GUNT in Eastern Chad is due solely to the support offered by Libya. It is claimed that some 10,000 Libyan troops were involved in the operation — though this may be a little far fetched — and that they have now contributed to the government's complete control that it claims to have over Abeche Biltine, Guereda, Iriba and neighbouring areas. It has also been reported that there is a Libyan garrison of over 2,000 men at Am-Timan, in the Salamat, in southeastern Chad, near the border with the Central African Republic.

The Sudanese logic — and by extension that of its backers — argues that while Libyans are present in Chad, and therefore a potential threat, the Chadian dissidents, namely Habre, should be supported. The GUNT view is that since the Sudanese are supporting dissident incursions into Chad and are capable of creating considerable disorder, the timetable of Libyan withdrawal has to be postponed. "Libyan troops will remain in Chad as long as we are threatened by the Egyptian-Sudanese coalition on our eastern frontier," Ahmat Acyl said recently.

This rather tortuous and muddled causality gives free reign to either side. But it is difficult to envisage a Libyan withdrawal in the near future, because of its present military obligation in the east, and because it has now committed itself to the training and financing of Chad's proposed Integrated National Army. Reports from Yaounde claim that Libya will train 2,000 men annually for the next five years and help set up the organisation of the Chadian army, under an agreement reached between N'Djamena and Tripoli.

If Paris had hoped that President Goukhouni Weddei would announce a timetable of Libyan withdrawal from Chad after his visit to Paris, then the French Government has been disappointed. And no doubt it will shortly make its disappointment clear. For other African states, the prospect of continued Libyan presence in Chad will meet with disapproval. But, if as it seems likely, the withdrawal will be much more delayed than expected, then some of the threats issued concerning attendance at the next OAU summit in Tripoli may have to be reconsidered.

FRENCH ARMS FOR GUNT--Paris, October 27--France today confirmed reports that it was sending arms to the Transitional Chadian Government but refused to indicate when the arms deliveries began and what type of weapons were being sent. A Foreign Ministry spokesman reiterated that France supported an Organization of African Unity (OAU) call that an inter-African peace-keeping force be sent to Chad, and that Paris supported the Transitional Government (GUNT) of President Goukouni Weddeye. "It is in this double context that France's logistical support to the GUNT must be situated," the spokesman said. This support was strengthenened by President Goukouni's recent visit to Paris. RECONSTRUCTION APPEAL--Paris, October 26--Three French Christian groups today made an urgent appeal for aid in the work of reconstruction in Chad. The French Protestant Federation, the Ecumenical Aid Service and the Protestant Missionary Service called on all Protestants in France to collect "as rapidly as possibly" funds to help set up a basic medical service in Chad and rebuild a church college destroyed during the civil war. 'RDLGE' ELECTIONS CALL--Dakar, Senegal, October 24--An opposition movement in exile from Equatorial Guinea has called for the general election scheduled for next year to be supervised by the Organisation of African Unity (OAU) or by the United Nations. The call came in a press release issued here yesterday by Manuel Ruben Ndongo, leader of the Democratic Rally for the Liberation of Equatorial Guinea (RDLGE), a grouping which claims to represent four parties opposed to the current military regime in the ex-Spanish colony. Next year's presidential and legislative poll should be preceded by a preparatory period of "democratic opening", Mr Ndongo said. The ruling Military Council ought to make contact with all exile opposition elements with a view to organising the voting, he added. Mr Ndongo said a referendum for a new constitution, as proposed by the military regime, was unnecessary. The 1968 independence constitution could, if respected, produce real democracy in the country, he said. [Text] [Paris AFRICA AFP in English 27 Oct 81 p 24]

COMMENTARY EXAMINES PROBLEMS OF CHAD FORCE

AB171857 ACCRA Domestic Service in English 1300 GMT 17 Nov 81

[KAB Addae commentary]

[Text] Recent reports from OAU sources indicate that the organization is feverishly marshalling efforts to fill the vacuum created in Chad by the departure of Libyan forces and for the next few days, the whole world will have its fingers crossed to see how the continental body will meet what may be described as the greatest challenge of its existence.

Already, by last Sunday, about 300 paratroopers from Zaire, one of the 6 countries that have volunteered the estimated 6,000 member peace-keeping force, were reported to have arrived in Chad.

If the OAU succeeds in this enterprise, it will be a deserving feather in its cap. On the other hand, should the organization fail, the dangers that this might pose are enormous. For instance, just as Libya was reported to have completed its troop pullout, the commander of her forces in Chad announced that forces of rebel Defense Minister Hissein Habre are taking advantage of the vacuum to capture three towns in Eastern Chad.

Meanwhile, Foreign Minister Ahmat Acyl's pretentions to power are still to be reckoned with. Whatever the final outcome of the exercise, the entry into Chad of Libyan forces and their more or less forced withdrawal will provide valuable lessons for Africa, whose countries are often the object of military conflicts arising mainly from border disputes and internal civil wars.

It is recalled that the pullout call on Libya was made by Chad President Goukouni Queddei on the eve of the Franco-African summit which opened in Paris on 3 November. The Chad president's request itself was occasioned by French President Mitterrand's support for an African force, with the French pledging to provide logistic support such as transport to convey the troops.

But the flexibility of Colonel al-Qadhdhafi in ordering the forces in Chad to begin an immediate withdrawal is a remarkable change of heart. It will be recalled that the decision of the OAU at its last summit in Kenya to hold the next year's meeting in Tripoli nearly broke the organization up. During and after the conference, views have been expressed showing that the decision to go to Libya is not a popular one, with some countries actually threatening to boycott the summit. The president of Ghana, Dr Limann, said on his arrival from the summit that Ghana would not attend. This might be described as too severe a stand, given especially Ghana's important contribution to the birth and nurturing of the OAU. For subsequent events show that

Colonel al-Qadhdhafi now wants the OAU to accept him as one who did not come to destroy the organization but to build it.

But what about the actual task for the force in Chad, where whether Nigeria's 2,000 troops, Senegal's 1,500 and the rest will meet the challenge posed by Libya's sudden withdrawal remains to be seen.

In this connection, one is dismayed by the dispute already processing among the countries contributing troops for the operation. Nigeria has announced its opposition to the holding of yet another summit meeting on the force and says her contingent will not be dispatched until the disputed meeting is held. In fact, Nigeria is boycotting this summit, saying it is unnecessary and it is not in keeping with the urgency of the situation.

One only hopes that all this bickering does not herald another dismal failure of the OAU.

WEST GERMAN GRANTS--Ghana and West Germany today signed five agreements in Accra under which the German Government is providing Ghana with loans and grants totaling DM 49 million for development projects in the country. ECONOMIC AID AGREEMENTS SIGNED--The governments of Ghana and Canada today signed two separate agreements and an exchange of letters. The agreements make available to Ghana a total of 23.9 million cedis. The first agreement is the renewal of the General Development Cooperation Agreement signed by both countries in 1963. The agreement, which replaces a former one, laid more emphasis on the desire of the two governments to develop and promote a program of development cooperation in line with the present objectives of Ghana's socioeconomic development. The second agreement makes available to Ghana a Canadian loan of 3 million Canadian dollars, equivalent to about 6.9 million cedis. The loan, which is interest free and repayable over 50 years, including a 10-year grace period, is to be utilized by the Volta River Authority. The money will be used to establish a staff training program for the Volta River Authority, which is to produce a team of highly qualified personnel to maintain existing and future hydro-power installations in the country. The letters of exchange extends a grant of 7.4 million Canadian dollars, which is equivalent to 17 million cedis, to Ghana. This is to be used to increase the operational reliability of urban and rural water supplies to the northern and upper regions. NIGERIAN CREDIT ON OIL PURCHASES--Nigeria has introduced a 120-day credit facility to Ghana and other Ecowas nations which buy crude oil from her. This new arrangement is an alternative to other countries which can pay for their crude oil imports on 30-days credit and thus enjoy a discount of $1.50. This was disclosed by the minister of fuel and power, Mr Wulff-tagoe, in an interview with a GBC correspondent in Accra in connection with the recent visit to Ghana by the chairman of the Nigerian National Petroleum Corporation, Horatio Agadeh. Mr Wulff-tagoe explained that before the introduction of this new arrangement Ghana was enjoying 90-day credit facility for crude oil imports from Nigeria and not 180-day credit facility. He said the 120-day credit facility took effect just before the recent OPEC meeting in Geneva. The minister extended the government's gratitude to Nigeria for the new concession. Mr Wulff-tagoe said, however, that the 180-day credit facility would be a better arrangement for any country which imports crude oil because the cost in relations to the economy is quite big and Ghana will welcome a further liberalization of the terms. On oil exploration, he said the tempo has increased, five new companies are currently negotiating for concessions in oil exploration in Ghana. Mr Wulff-tagoe stated that the visit of Mr Agadeh to Ghana was invaluable because the government was planning a similar visit to Nigeria to rearrange crude oil supplies for next year. END ASKED TO ONE-PARTY SYSTEM--Monrovia, 4 Nov (AFP)--A group calling itself the concerned citizens of the Republic of Guinea has called for the immediate abolition of the one-party system there which has failed to justify its existence and is responsible for the slow socio-economic and political development of Guinea, the INDEPENDENT DAILY OBSERVER newspaper reported here today. The spokesman of the group, comprising some 200 guineans in Liberia, the Ivory Coast, Sierra Leone and France, 30-year-old teacher and journalist Cheik Mohamed Kone, said a multi-party democracy was the only road to speedy and efficient reconstruction of Guinea in the interest of all citizens. He accused the ruling Ginean Democratic Party (PDG) of having made relatively little progress in President Sekou Toure's 22 years of administration, keeping Guinea in a primitive stage of development among other African states. The time has come for all Guineans who love their country to speak out before it is too late, and we hope President Toure would take our call in good faith, Mr Kone told the observer. The group also accused President Toure's administration of corruption, nepotism, widespread human rights violations and neo-colonialism, which resulted in only 15 percent of the population enjoying the nation's wealth. Guinean Ambassador to Liberia Moussa Cisse dismissed the group's allegations as anti-Guinean propaganda and said they did not reflect any reality in Guinea. SABRE RATTLING OF KAIZER MANTANZIMA HIT

[Editorial: "Mantanzima Echoes Master's Voice Again"]

[Text]

IT was most unfortunate that in the course of his valedictory message in the company of his couspirators of Venda and Bophuthatswana the "President" of South Africa's district of Transkei, Kaizer Matanzima, took the opportunity to rattle his sabre at Lesotho and Prime Minister Dr. Leabua Jonathan. He also announced his intention to retire from an unsung political career.

Once and for all we want "President" Matanzima to know that Lesotho has not, and will not engineer any military attacks on South Africa or any part thereof. The Transkei is one such part of South Africa. All refugees in Lesotho are nosted strictly in terms of the Geneva convention relating to the Status of Refugees.

"President" Matanzima's speech was highly provocative, but it was part of the humstring song to the effect that South African refugees in Lesotho attack South Africa. Threats against Lesotho drive one to the conclusion that Matanzima wants to make use of the military pacts he has with South Africa against Lesotho.

It is also possible that the former Commander of the Rhodesian Selous Scouts has reported that he is now ready for action against another African country.

We know that Matanzima is already being used by South Africa to fight against the Liberation Movement. He wants to use South Africa against Lesotho as part of the deal but South Africa will never attack this country. "President" Matanzima's words were full of sound and fury but signified nothing.

After a short spell of severing diplomatic relations with South Africa, as Mr. B. J. Vorster had rightly predicted, he belly crawled cap-in-hand to Cape Town — a feat that could only be achieved by Matanzima. The move to sever diplomatic relations with South Africa was rash and it made no impression on Africa because Matanzima is well known for his erratic political career. The belated and unconvincing suggestion that the "President" will retire from politics is part and parcel of his oppotunities tendencies. He is now consulting his wife.

Although Chief Matanzima has deemed it meet to attack the Prime Minister of Lesotho, it is significant to observe that Prime Minister Leabua Jonathan has said nothing about Matanzima since 1976. He does not want to waste his breath on Matanzima who is politically incorrigible.

TOURISM SEEN AS THREAT TO ENVIRONMENT

Maseru LESOTHO WEEKLY in English 30 Oct 81 p 1

[Text]

TOURISM is being challenged as one of the major threats to environment and there are fears that unless control over it is exercised, grave damage to irreplaceable natural resources would result.

This was disclosed at a two-day workshop on tourism organised by Lesotho National Tourism Office (LNTO) for personnel of hotel enterprises and government officials directly or indirectly involved in development of tourism.

Tourism has been characterised as a destroyer of traditions and a cause of social decay and discord, its cultural value has always been questioned, as are its positive economic aspects.

One of the tasks of participants was to address themselves to these problems and others related to tourism.

Participants exchanged ideas through discussions and recommended solutions to problems facing tourism industry.

Some of these problems discussed were that statistics relating to tourism was not easily available. It was also noted that the average Mosotho knew little about the country and that local farmers were not organised or motivated to supply hotels with locally produced food.

MARITIME MEETING--Liberia has failed to get a seat in category A during the inter-governmental maritime consultative organization meeting in London. She has, however, maintained her seat in category C. The Liberia News Agency reported yesterday that after three unsuccessful ballotings to capture the maximum votes required, Liberia was only elected in the fourth round receiving the required number of votes to retain her seat in category C. The main reason given for Liberia's failure to get in category A has been the developed nations wanted to make room for Greece while the Group of 77 nations backed Liberia. Although Liberia has the largest ship tonnage in the world, yet her efforts during the elections were defeated by the United Kingdom, Japan, the United States, Greece, Norway and the Soviet Union. Commenting on the results of the elections the head of the Liberian delegation, maritime commissioner Phillip T. Bowen, said it was one of those unusual elections where you have more candidates fighting for the same seat. Twenty countries contested for the 12 seats in category C. Liberia's argument during the meeting was said to be its annual contribution to the organization's budget. It said they should be made according to the size and wealth of the country or member nation and not based on the number of ships which sail under a country's flag. RICE PRICE INCREASE--An increment in the retail price of rice per cup ranging from five to ten cents throughout the country has been approved by the People's Redemption Council, PRC. A Commerce Ministry release issued in Monrovia today said the retail price for a cup of rice in Montserrado County will now be 30 cents while the price in Bong and Cape Mount counties as well as the territories of (?Bommy and Doddy) would be 32 cents. According to the release quoted by the Liberian News Agency, rice will now sell for 33 and 34 cents per cup in Nimba and Lofa counties including parts of Grand Gedeh County depending on the location. In Sinoe and Maryland counties the price is marked off as 35 cents per cup. The recent increase in the retail price of cup of rice was the result of a request to government by the Liberian Marketing Association for a possible increase from 25 to 30 cents due to government recent decision to increase the price of a 100 pound bag of rice from $20 to $24, thereby cutting its subsidy to the consumers. In a letter to Commerce Minister A. FISEMA CONGRESS HELD IN ANTANANARIVO

Workers Unity Discussed

[Text] Antananarivo--In Antananarivo yesterday, the sixth FISEMA [Malagasy Federation of Trade Unions] congress opened at the Railway Employees Club, coinciding with the date of the 25th anniversary of the formation of that Malagasy trade union organization in 1956. It should be recalled that some 400 delegates from all over the island, representing 40,000 members, will join together at the congress to discuss the topic "trade union action for the strengthening of worker unity in order to pursue the revolutionary struggle for economic and social progress."

Attending the opening session was a delegation from the World Federation of Trade Unions (WFTU) (220 million members in the world and with which the Malagasy FISEMA is affiliated), headed by its secretary general, Ibrahim Zakaria, a delegation from the Central Committee of Soviet Trade Unions, headed by Comrade Kourzine, vice president, a delegation from the Central Committee of Hungarian Trade Unions, made up of three members and headed by its vice president, Palotai. Also attending were Gilbert Julis, member of the National Executive Committee of the French CGT [General Confederation of Labor], and Comrade Sautron, secretary of the General Confederation of Labor of Reunion. Other delegations are expected in Antananarivo on the occasion of this sixth congress of FISEMA.

After the traditional opening address pronounced by Comrade Ralambotahiana, president of FISEMA, different messages of support and greetings from various national unions were read, including SEREMA-AREMA [expansion unknown]-Vanguard of the Malagasy Revolution, represented by Voantio Tsifanahy from the National Fair, and Ratsimiebo Henri, member of the Constituent Central Committee, the FMM [Malagasy Workers Federation], represented by Rasolondrainibe, member of the National Bureau, SYMPIMITO/MONIMO [expansion unknown]-National Movement for the Independence of Madagascar, FISEMARE/AKFM/KDRSM [Union of Revolutionary Malagasy Workers/Congress Party for Malagasy Independence/Democratic Committee To Support the Malagasy Socialist Revolution], and SECES [expansion unknown].

It should be noted that there is a memorandum of understanding between FISEMA, the FMM and SEREMA. The solemn closing of this sixth FISEMA congress will take place tomorrow, Sunday, at 1500 hours, at the Railway Employees Club.

Suggestions for Recovery

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 15 Oct 81 pp 1-2

[Text] "For trade union cooperation, in order to rally the strength of workers behind the revolution so that they will aid economic and social development."

From 25 to 27 September, FISEMA held its sixth congress, which fit into the context of the celebration of its 25th anniversary and the 45th anniversary of the French CGT, of which it is the offspring.

In addition, the congress comes at a difficult time both nationally (unemployment, declining purchasing power, disorganization of the supply system, and so on) and internationally (crisis of the great capitalist powers (which sharpens the financial crisis and the crisis of means of world production).

At the congress, FISEMA paid particular attention to these different problems, especially the economic sabotage perpetrated in order to discourage workers. The results of the sabotage were examined: the decision of enterprise owners to leave the country; delays in orders of raw materials and spare parts needed for the smooth operation of plants, which causes layoffs and drops in production, in addition to spending higher than receipts, so that workers are not paid; failure to respect laws governing labor laws (unjustified dismissal of trade union presidents and personnel representatives); conflicts between workers from different trade union or political organizations, caused in order to create a tense atmosphere within the enterprises, which in turn has an effect on production; changes in personnel, sudden changes in work methods.

"All of this sabotage," the sixth congress of FISEMA stated, "is aimed at destroying the Malagasy economy, the basis of the success of the revolution."

After this preliminary study, FISEMA turned to different topics based on the National Front for the Defense of the Revolution: "It is time to determine once again who should be members and the responsibilities of the Front." Concerning national unity: "Politicians and the people must realize that it is not easy to rectify the imbalanced development of regions resulting from colonization." The Front has a great duty to perform in seeking every possible means making it possible to strengthen strengthen national unity and the united nature of the Malagasy Government." Concerning democratic and trade union rights and dialog: "FISEMA demands that all trade union organizations enjoy the rights and privileges granted to unions affiliated with the organizations of the Front: representation of Malagasy workers in the ILO, the OAU, CNAPS [National Social Welfare Fund], OSTIE [expansion unknown], in union retraining, the possibility of using the RTM [Malagasy Radio and Television]," and so on.

The sixth FISEMA congress also made different suggestions for Madagascar's economic and social recovery.

ANP PRESIDENT SAYS 1982 BUDGET ONE OF 'AUSTERITY'

Austerity Budget in 1982

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 13 Oct 81 pp 1, 3

[Text] It will be an "austerity budget." This is how Lucien Xavier Michel Andrianarahinjaka, president of the National Popular Assembly (ANP), described the 1982 national budget as he officially opened the second regular session of the ANP for the year (12 October-3 December).

The simple but extremely important ceremony was attended by the head of the government, Prime Minister Desire Rakotoarijaona, the chairman of the Military Committee for Development, Colonel Rabeony, the presiding magistrate of the High Constitutional Court, Tilahy Robert, numerous members of the Supreme Revolutionary Council (CSR) and ministers.

This session is important because of the very fact that it will enable deputies to look at the proposed 1982 budget.

Although we do not yet know the contents of the bill, President Andrianarahinjaka said, it definitely expresses our current problems and the ways chosen to solve them. Consequently, it is also certain that not all the aspirations of the people will be met.

Changes

In his preliminary report, he brought out the most important problems, particularly emphasizing the cattle rustling and the dahalo [terrorists], security in general, supply difficulties, the black market, and so on.

It is no longer the time to dwell on these difficulties, he said, but rather, to solve them. More than ever, it is the time to apply the phrases that we so often use: "relying on our own strength," "adapting to existing conditions," "using the means at hand," and so on. Actually, now is the time to change ways of thinking and working methods.

The president of the ANP explained that our current difficulties stem from our foreign exchange problems: Our foreign trade balance is out of kilter, as our exports no longer pay for our imports.

Decisions have been made, but it is above all a matter of emergency solutions that are not permanent. Among these decisions are the austerity measures, limits placed on the amount of currency that can be taken out of the country, the different agreements made with the IMF, and so on.

The president of the ANP also said that the impact of the world crisis on the Malagasy economy proves that our economy is still dependent on other countries.

Unsatisfactory

However, aside from the impact of that crisis on our economy, one can no longer deny that our agricultural production is not satisfactory, which causes difficulties in supplying edible oils, cotton and rice.

Giving a number of examples, President Andrianarahinjaka spoke of cotton. Its very low cost does not encourage farmers to produce, and yet, we spend our funds to import cotton to supply our industries.

With respect to oil, our refineries do not have enough raw materials and as a result, the little produced is sold at a very high cost on the black market: from 750 to 1,000 Malagasy francs per liter.

A few months ago, several tons of fertilizer were blocked at the ports of Toamasina and Mahajanga while farmers were waiting for it in order to produce better yields.

The Revolutionary Government has given each firaisana [canton] 1 million Malagasy francs to expand rice growing (20 hectares), but very few have carried out the operation because of the lack of land, equipment and irrigation problems, but also because of a lack of enthusiasm among the producers.

"These are only examples," Andrianarahinjaka said, "but one can derive lessons from them in order to face our difficulties. Those difficulties will disappear if every person is aware of his responsibilities and assumes them and if each individual is full of enthusiasm."

One Suggestion

The president of the ANP then turned to the dahalo and the cattle rustling.

Four faritany [higher administrative unit] are now infested with them and the people live in a state of terror. The forces of order have already made great efforts in the fight against the dahalo. Some fivondronana [villages] have set up mobile districts and the fokonolona [peasant unions] are fighting hard to defend their lives and property.

However, the most important thing is to prevent the dahalo from continuing to perpetrate their crimes.

One suggestion is made by the people of the four faritany involved: The Revolutionary Government should consider the fight against the dahalo as a "pacification" task and military camps should be set up in all the regions hit by the dahalo until security is fully restored. Training and equipment should be given to the fokonolona so that they might defend themselves against the dahalo. The president of the ANP said that the acts of looting and terrorism by the dahalo were similar to acts aimed at destabilizing the government.

This suggestion was greatly applauded by the deputies.

It should be noted that before this budgetary session, the deputies will also study and pass other bills and statutes.

Lessons in ANP President's Speech

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 14 Oct 81 p 1

[Text] Discussions were lively yesterday concerning the speech delivered by President Lucien Xavier Michel Andrianarahinjaka at the opening of the second regular session of the ANP in Tsimbazaza. The interest is easily understood because no one can remain indifferent to the impact of what is called the "austerity budget" on the daily life of the people. We all remember the very lively debate last year when the deputies studied the proposed 1981 budget. On that occasion, they did not fail to condemn the failure of certain government enterprises or companies, whose method of operation is in flagrant contradiction with the objective assigned for the establishment of a new society.

In his remarks, Andrianarahinjaka did not conceal the fact that the different as- of the socioeconomic difficulties facing the country can already be seen in the next budget, which will be discussed and passed by the deputies in the weeks to come. Considering this fact, austerity will be more pronounced next year and sacrifices even more proportionate to the difficulties, due to the austerity budget. But whatever the case, the essential fact is the determination of everyone to sincerely accept the measures imposed by the circumstances, however draconian they may appear, or risk further widening the gap separating the different social classes. This is the inequality widely condemned by the awareness campaigns waged by the revolutionary groups.

"What is most disappointing is to see that products completely made at home are so scarce. Such scarcities create problems. We believe that major efforts must be made in this direction and that improvements are possible if every person works with enthusiasm." These few passages from the speech by the president of the ANP do not allude to the dishonest acts of all kinds of profiteers who hoard basic commodities in order to encourage the black market, whose corollary is inflation and illegal price hikes.

Furthermore, within the framework of his working tour of the country, the head of the CSR, Monja Jaona, leader of the MONIMA [National Movement for the Independence of Madagascar], has followed the president of the ANP in condemning the dishonest tactics aimed at creating a psychology of shortages so as to perpetuate the black market, although there is no lack of prayers in our country, based on what he was able to observe during his tour. In Ampanihy, Monja Jaona urged the people to demonstrate vigilance in order to foil such sabotage, without forgetting to point out the exportation of cattle, forbidden by existing legislation. Such "exportation" is not unrelated to the rest of the cattle stealing that has been on the rise recently, along with banditry that has the people of the regions living in terror.

One must recognize the efforts of the public security officials and fokonolona authorities to put an end to this disturbing situation. Price inspectors and BMIE [expansion unknown] agents have also assumed their responsibilities in checking the profiteers who publicly practice illegal price hikes to the detriment of consumers. However, their efforts will be useless without the effective aid of government officials and all those concerned about the problems of "unimported" inflation and scarcities.

In view of the problems just enumerated, can solutions still be found to our problems? President Andrianarahinjaka already answered the question before the deputies in Tsimbazaza on Monday: "The difficulties will disappear if each person is aware of his responsibilities and assumes them and if every individual is full of enthusiasm." In conclusion, we would add: "Yes, our problems will find appropriate solutions if everyone accepts the austerity imposed by the circumstances without trying to satisfy his own selfish interests."

CHINESE TECHNICAL AIDES DECORATED FOR TRAINING EFFORTS

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 6 Oct 81 pp 1-2

[Text] Fifteen Chinese nationals who have completed their mission at the Toly Enterprise in Tulear were decorated Saturday morning at the Solimotel in Anosy at a ceremony presided over by Simon Pierre, minister of the Ministry of Rural Development and Agrarian Reform, who was accompanied by his close aides, headed by Secretary General Rabe Raphael and the secretary general of the MAE [expansion unknown]. Also attending the ceremony were the ambassador of the People's Republic of China to Madagascar, Sem Gan Yetao, and members of the management committee of the Toly Socialist Enterprise.

The chairman of the management committee emphasized the trust shown by the Revolutionary Government in this socialist enterprise and stressed the discipline and work put forth by the Chinese technical aides. It was they who were in charge of training the workers at the Toly Enterprise. For his part, Minister Simon Pierre recalled the contribution of the Chinese technicians to the mechanization of agriculture. It is the result of our "all-points" opening, he indicated, and of Chinese-Malagasy cooperation, a kind of aid that will enable us to do without aid. He then summarized the activities of the enterprise. Toly is still only beginning, but we are confident about its future, he said. Thanks to the aid of the Chinese, the Maintirano plant is already functional. Those in Farafangana and Ambatondrazaka will soon open their door. In order to recognize the efforts of the Chinese technical aides, the Revolutionary Government decided to present decorations to them, including: eight recipients of the National Order of Madagascar, with three officers and five chevaliers; and eight recipients of the Order of Merit of Madagascar, with five officers and three chevaliers.

Minister Pierre then spoke of negotiations now underway with the National Import-Export Company of China, concerning the sending of a new team of technicians to Madagascar, and the purchase of equipment.

In a brief address, one of the Chinese technicians emphasized that the results yielded are the fruit of close cooperation between Malagasy and Chinese technicians.

The last speaker, Sem Gan Yetao, said that our two countries belong to the Third World and are still underdeveloped. Madagascar and China have a common past and it is completely normal that we should help one another and aspire to develop our cooperation. The 15 Chinese technical aides will return to their country tomorrow, happy to have accomplished their task at the Toly Enterprise in Tulear.

READER REGRETS UNDER-UTILIZATION OF CADRE

Maputo TEMPO in Portuguese No 577, 1 Nov 81 p 50

[Text] In an attempt to let off steam, I am putting together letters to form words, and words to form sentences. Sentences to denounce, criticize and probe--I don't know which is the right term--a certain situation, which is not the figment of a sick or hallucinated mind, but a situation that undoubtedly can be noticed by many, if only they would pay attention.

Today in Mozambique, and rightly so, there is a lot of talk about cadre. But also today, on the other hand and without rhyme or reason, some people don't know what to do with the few cadre that do exist.

What is it that makes some people or institutions place university graduates--who are so needed, or at least should be, after such large investments in their training --behind windows to fill out requests, to make some drawings, and a host of other occupation which--let it be said without a trace of elitism--any one without such training could perform?

Is it perhaps a new "method" devised to remove any superiority complexes from the "graduate," to do away with the "myth" of the university, or does this method cover up the disorganization and--naturally--the inability of such people or institutions in defining concrete and more useful tasks?

How can these people speak honestly of the lack of cadre in front of such cadre? Besides being a total under-utilization or, better, non-utilization of cadre, this fosters disinterest, apathy and perhaps even stagnation.

Yes! Stagnation! Because in many cases, the "tasks" that are being carried out have not even the remotest connection with what was learned and do not permit the practical application of the knowledge acquired.

The enthusiasm of participating in the productive sector evidenced at graduation (I am mentioning the university more often to avoid generalization which may not correspond to reality, because I am more familiar with the case of university graduates and possess better documentation to write about it) is immediately doused as soon as the university is left behind.

What would be my motivation as an engineer, a mathematician, etc., if in my work place I would be put to filling out requests for equipment or other such piddling work instead of using my knowledge of engineering, mathematics, etc?

Are the people or institutions where I work thus creating in me a focal point for frustration, tension and revolt that are totally unnecessary?

Better leadership, a definition of concrete and adequate tasks and a better exploitation of everyone's potential would better respond to my aspirations, to those of my work place and those of my country.

/Signed/ Joel Tivane
Polana-Canico District, Maputo

Editor's Reply: Joel Tivane could indeed be right on the mark if he did not exaggerate his analysis. If it is true that the party, through President Samora Machel, has already detected that there sometimes exists a poor exploitation of the available cadre, a bad distribution of these same cadre and, also, an erroneous definition of tasks to be performed, it is wrong to say that university graduates in engineering or some other technical or economic field are placed behind even secretaries, unless their responsibilities also include paper work as a complementary assignment.

That is why we are moved to believe that this reader did not express what he wished to do. What can be read between the lines or what can be perceived, is that he is perfectly confused, unless he is mixing up university graduates with student-workers at the university who are still in training.

MANPOWER STATISTICS PRESENTED AT LUANDA SEMINAR

Beira DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE in Portuguese 22 Oct 81 p 16

[Text] The heads of the Angola, Mozambique, Cape Verde and Sao Tome and Principe delegations to the international seminar in Luanda presented on Tuesday the official documents related to the present lack of cadre in the industrial and mining sectors of their respective countries.

The official document presented by the head of the Mozambican delegation, Suzana Maria Bento Vedor, national director for industry and energy resources, discloses that existing manpower in the various sectors is estimated at about 600,000 workers, of whom 123 [as published] work in the mining and processing industry.

The document notes that with the projected industrial development, manpower will increase 13 percent by 1985.

"Illiterate workers in Mozambican industry amount to 24 percent of the work force, while 75 percent have a second- to eighth-grade education and the rest (1 percent) have a secondary or higher education," Suzana Bento said.

In relation to existing programs and short, medium and long term training plans, the People's Republic of Mozambique intends to increase the number of training centers and the training of specialists abroad.

Training centers in the country are presently being established, organized and stabilized, the document notes.

In accordance with the document, one of the great difficulties encountered by Mozambique in implementing training plans is the limited financial resources available and the lack of support by international organisms in industrial manpower training policy.

This Mozambican document also stresses that the training provided thus far by international organizations is unrelated to the vital development concerns of the country. "Since our realities are ignored, only short courses on highly specialized subjects are offered for a restricted number of workers," the Mozambican delegation stated.

One of the document's central concerns is the training of the largest possible number of workers, especially at a basic and intermediate level in courses of long enough duration to guarantee adequate training.

PORTRAIT OF 'OVERSEER' HAS NOT CHANGED SINCE COLONIAL TIMES

Maputo TEMPO in Portuguese 5 Nov 81 p 1

[Text] He is present today under another shape. But the spirit is the same. He no longer wears the typical colonial garb: nankeen slacks, knee socks and boots, not forgetting the hat that used to complete the outfit. He has shed these clothes who identified him right away.

All the formal language that characterized him has disappeared. But the attitude, the gestures that reflected this spirit, the spirit of the overseer, remain. To compare the new overseer to the old is a question of method, because in spite of the fact that this "newborn" is connected by tradition to the "corpse," it must be acknowledged that he also represents a phenomenon inherent to these changing times.

The revolution, too, can produce this wound that infects part of the body like a cancer. But let us describe our present overseer:

We meet him every day, because he is not a rare bird. His favorite resting place is the state apparatus. Here, he attempts to surround himself with others of the same ilk--this guaranteeing the reproduction of the species!

The fact that he is an overseer robs him of initiative, of imagination. His behavior is always the same. He always religiously listens to the decisions of his hierarchical superiors and never succeeds in having them carried out, because orders are so sacred--in the most religious sense of the word--that they have to be implemented to the letter, nothing more and nothing less. He is not interested in the particulars of each case.

The most flagrant trait of the overseer is his relationship with people. This is where he identifies completely with his predecessor: servile with his hierarchical superiors, arrogant with his subordinates. He has nothing human about him, except for the carcass he carries around. He functions like an automaton with two faces in two different environments. Servile and a flatterer, he also is the incarnation of the executioner.

He represents a known danger. He holds on to his position as a drowning man to a life preserver. He suggests to everyone that he knows all about his sector. He centralizes everything in order to become irreplaceable.

P.S. The hunt against this species has already started. However, let us not forget, when we catch him, that he must be embalmed and exhibitied in the museum of history.

BRIEFS

CARBOMOC GOALS--Despite the fact that some difficulties have affected production in the CARBOMOC [Mozambique National Coal Company] during the third quarter of the year, the goals established by the 1981 central state plan are likely to be fulfilled. This was disclosed at a review meeting in Moatize on 29 October. The meeting was attended by the director general of the company and by foremen of the various work teams. It was determined during the meeting that the difficulties were mainly due to a lack of equipment. However, it is expected that until the end of the year, the CARBOMOC will fulfill the goals envisioned in the 1981 central state plan, especially since the company is now undergoing a phase of recovery. SOLDIERS DETAILED TO PETROMOC--One hundred FPLM soldiers are working side by side with the workers at general maintenance tasks at the PETROMOC [Mozambique National Oil Company] refinery in Maputo. The detailing of these soldiers to the petrochemical complex was the result of an agreement signed between PETROMOC officials and the Ministry of National Defense, when it was determined that the number of workers is insufficient for the completion of necessary repairs within the assigned time. According to the substitute director of the company, the soldiers were selected on the basis of their technical-professional specializations, such as locksmiths, electricians, mechanics, etc. The soldiers started working on 23 October and the administration of the company believes that it will be possible to complete the repair and maintenance program on schedule. FORMER INMATES--State inspector Raimundo Pachinuapa and the delegation he headed to Cabo Delgado have completed the first phase of the review proceedings related to the former inmates of reeducation camps, who will soon be placed in various economic activities around the country. The delegation returned to Maputo, having examined about 1,000 cases in Chaimite and Ruarua. An effort has been made to determine the reasons for which they were interned in the camps, as well as to gather statistical data on inmates. The delegation reviewed the cases of deserters, members of the defense and security forces who had committed various crimes, murderers, forgerers and others. Raimundo Pachinaupa also visited the areas where the former inmates will be placed, such as Chipembe, N'Guri and Lucoma, where preparations are underway to receive them. Referring to these areas, he said that all regions of the country need the contribution of cadre and that these must subject their own personal interests to those of the country. PORTUGUESE DONATION--The department for prevention of natural calamities of the national planning commission has received 1,214 kgs of various medicines amounting to 84,960 Portuguese escudos from the Government of Portugal as a donation for the victims of natural calamities. This donation is another in a series of donations of medicines and other items already received from the Portuguese Government. [Text] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 2 Nov 81 p 2]

OFFICIAL WITH STUDENTS IN CUBA--Jorge Rebelo, Central Committee secretary for ideological affairs, contacted the Mozambican students in the Isle of Youth in Cuba during his visit to that country. There are presently approximately 2,500 Mozambican students attending courses in 4 schools ceded to Mozambique by the Cuban Government. The Mozambicans study Portuguese, political science, history and geography under the guidance of Mozambican teachers. Other disciplines are taught by Cuban professors. These schools operate in accordance with the regulations on the political and administrative organization of schools in force in the People's Republic of Mozambique. Cuba and the GDR are the two countries which have provided the greatest support to Mozambique in the training of cadre. Given the fact that our country, at independnece, had a 90 percent illiteracy rate, there is an urgent need to train a considerable number of cadre to overcome the state of underdevelopment affecting it today. [Text] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 4 Nov 81 p 3]

OFFICIAL IN MOSCOW--Sergio Vieira, member of the FRELIMO Central Committee and minister-governor of the Bank of Mozambique, addressed the political-scientific conference for peace and progress held in Moscow, stating that peace is necessary in Africa. Sergio Vieira added that the African peoples will only succeed in solving the enormous sociopolitical problems resulting from the liquidation of the heavy legacy of colonialism under peaceful conditions. Renowned scientists and political personalities stressed during the conference that the main objective for all the peoples of the world is the struggle against the armaments race, especially in the nuclear field, and for universal disarmament, peace and security around the world. [Text] [Beira DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE in Portuguese 20 Oct 81 p 3]

TRADE WITH USSR--Maputo--Commercial exchanges between the People's Republic of Mozambique and the USSR will reach $60 million until the end of the current year. For the period 1976--the year in which the trade agreement between the two countries was signed--until 1980, the traffic of goods reached half of the above amount. Mozambique imports agricultural machinery and equipment for various purposes. These purchases are very important to carry out the tasks assigned by the third congress of the FRELIMO Party, which concentrated on the development of agriculture, industry and transportation. The USSR purchases from Mozambique microlite and tantalite, as well as sisal fiber. The possibility of increasing Mozambican exports to the USSR is under study. DAIRY PRODUCT SHORTAGE--The lack of milk has resulted in the decreased production of ice cream bars in Beira. This situation has been continuing from the time powdered milk began to disappear on the market. The two ice cream bar plants in Beira have received fresh milk supplies from the Parceria da Manga, but quantities have been insufficient to minimize the effects of the shortage of ice cream bars, a product much consumed in Beira during this period of extreme heat. The plants manufacture approximately 6,000 bars daily, which are sold at their door or around the city by the few bicycle sellers still in existence. Besides the difficulty in acquiring ingredients, the plants face additional problems in the transportation sector, since spare parts for bicycles are not available [Excerpt] [Beira DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE in Portuguese 21 Oct 81 p 2]

SOFALA POOR MARKETING CAMPAIGN--Because of low production in the 1980/1981 agricultural campaign, the province of Sofala will not fulfill its marketing goals for cereals. The AGRICOM [Agricultural Products Marketing Company] representative in this province, Alfredo Valentim, stated to our newspaper that to date only 36 percent of the plan has been fulfilled, adding that climatic conditions mainly account for the decreased agricultural production. However, there was no difficulty in the transportation sector, where only a few problems were noted in penetrating certain areas, due to the precarious road conditions. WESTERN FIVE'S PROPOSALS SAID TOO VAGUE AND BROAD

[Article by Wilf Nussey]

[Text]

The Western Five's latest proposals for a settlement in SWA/Namibia are a masterpiece of that kind of diplomacy irreverently described as talking a lot and saying little.

The document is not long, about 500 words, of which nearly a quarter is the list of the usual human rights which have bit the dust in most of decolonised Africa.

But so broad and vague are its terms that anyone could drive a truck through it from either side, Swapo or HNP.

This by no means implies that the proposals are worthless and a waste of time. It is in this very broadness, open to a multitude of interpretations, that its value lies because every previous attempt in the long, long years of negotiation to lay down firm conditions has inevitably led to stalemate, confrontation, collapse.

The Western Five have come up with something obviously intended to give the least offence and the most scope for negotiation.

Its one great weakness appears to be time: a serious lack of it. On presenting it the Western Five are asking Pretoria to commit itself by March next year to a date for Namibian independence and they have given the assorted political groups there exceedingly little time to study the proposals before giving their verdicts on it.

Briefly, the proposals call for a constituent assembly to be elected (they do not say when or how) which will then draw up a constitution for a "unitary, sovereign and democratic" Namibia with a legislature chosen by universal suffrage, an executive responsible to it and an independent judiciary.

The Western Five do not say how the legislature is to be elected, except to tentatively suggest that it could be done by proportional representation, a constitutency system, or a mixture of both.

They say the judiciary must interpret and uphold the constitution but do not specify how.

They say the constituent assembly must "adopt" the new constitution by a two thirds majority. Later, they add, it can be changed by a "designated process" either in Parliament or by a referendum, but again carefully avoid any details.

Clearly there is a vast amount of work to be done in a very short time. But the process cannot be lengthened because, as events have already proved, delay simply further polarises those involved.

And these proposals are only to set the stage for the first phase of South West Africa's transformation into the new state of Namibia. Next comes Phase Two: sorting out the mechanics of United Nations supervision of an independence election in terms of Security Council Resolution 435. Then comes Phase Three: the actual implementation of the process.

But by starting in this seemingly soft and tentative way, the Western Five have created the best possible climate to date for the next parts of the process to bud and flower through negotiation.

The proposals must be read against not only the background of the conflict between South Africa and Swapo, or the potential for future conflict between Swapo and its internal Namibian opponents.

They should be seen particularly against the inescapable fact that the territory's population of 1-million is divided into 11 highly distinctive and supremely individualistic ethnic groups whose levels of sophistication and technological development cover the entire human spectrum — from the so-called primitive to the modern.

Much as the world detests ethnicity because of implicit racial distinction and thereby discrimination, it ignores it in SWA/Namibia at its peril.

The ethnic and geographic distinctions have existed in the territory through all recorded history there. Now they are stronger than ever, with no single group in the majority.

The Ovambo come closest with some 45 percent of the population who traditionally occupy one of the smaller parts of the country in the far north.

They are also the stronghold of Swapo although the party certainly has backing across the country, if only because it represents the hardest opposition to the South African Establishment. Thanks to that, it could probably win an election.

But any attempt to impose uniformity, let alone the hegemony of any single party, on any other of the ethnic groups could light unquenchable fires which would make the Fleming-Walloon confrontation of centuries look like a bridge game.

Try telling the amazingly insular and intransigent Rehoboth Basters that their little parish south of Windhoek must be open to all, or that they must subdue their distinctiveness for the general weal, and the authorities will very probably have to subdue them again, as General Smuts had to in the late twenties when he used a biplane bomber and some shells.

Try telling the haughty Hereros that they will be ruled by a government essentially dominated by their traditional enemies, the Ovambo, and woe betide the teller.

The same goes for the Damaras, enslaved generations ago by other tribes but who have never forgotten it; the Namas and, of course, the right-wing whites.

The Western Five apparently give recognition to this great diversity of peoples in their phrase that elections could be "by proportional representation or by appropriate determination of constituencies or by a combination of both."

"Constituencies" and "proportional representation" mean very much the same thing because most ethnic groups occupy their own geographic areas anyway.

It is because of this very complextity that the Western Five proposals, vague as they are, offer promise.

But no solution in SWA/Namibia can survive without one other vital ingredient: the full and continued co-operation of the Western Five, the black Frontline States and South Africa.

It is only by working closely together that they can coerce all the various ethnic and political groups into accepting the outcome of a visibly genuine and fair election for independence. They will have to bang heads together and drive home the message that if any particular group or party tries to go it alone, it could sink itself with Namibia.

Therein too lies the reason for speed. All this must happen before Russia and its surrogates can so entrench the border confrontation and their presence that Angola, the most important of the Frontline States, cannot free itself from the communist grip.

FEDERAL PARTY LEADER'S PROPOSALS ON 435

Windhoek WINDHOEK OBSERVER in English 6 Nov 81 pp 7-9

[Article by Bryan O'Linn: "Overcoming the 435 Impasse"]

[Text]

IT IS IN the interest of the people of Namibia as well as South Africa and the world to achieve the aim of an internationally-recognised independence at the earliest possible moment.

Some of the reasons can be stated:

● The indefinate continuation of the war has disastrous consequences for Namibia and all its people.

Not only does it prevent the economic and political development of the country to its full potential, but progressively debases the humanity of the people.

The murders, rape, robberies and assaults and the breakdown of law and order based on justice, in the northern parts of the country, leave a growing legacy of intolerance, hatred and destruction.

● There is a grave danger that if no international settlement is arrived at in due course, the war can escalate with greater Cuban, East German, Russian and African active involvement, with Namibia and its people becoming the battleground for SA and its enemies and even land to an East-West conflict.

Namibia and its people will not only suffer tremendously in such a conflict, but may be destroyed in the process.

● The only way to change the present constitutional system, is to implement the process envisaged under Security Council Resolution 435 of 1978.

There is no prospect that the SA Government will change the present system in view of the fact that it constituted the settlement between the DTA and the National Party of SWA and is intended to remain the system of interim government until a new system is devised if and when Resolution 435 of 1978 is implemented.

The vast majority of the people of Namibia desperately wants peace, democracy and the internationally-recognised independence of this country in the immediate future.

They have the right to claim the speedy fulfilment of the Holy Trust of Civilisation inherent in the mandate system.

The true will of the people of Namibia cannot be effectively expressed by the existing political parties of Namibia, but only by the adult voters in free and fair elections as in envisaged by 435 of 1978, and the supplementary agreements in terms thereof.

The main objective should therefore be to use the present imperfect means to reach the goal of free and fair elections in which all the political parties will be free to participate under relatively equal conditions.

The progressive moderate parties cannot improve their position by delaying tactics.

Further delay will only strengthen the extreme left and right of the political spectrum and lead to further racial polarisation.

It is unlikely that we will ever have more favourable conditions and terms than those obtainable at present.

NO ALTERNATIVE

There is no practical alternative to Sec Council Resolutions 435 of 1978 and supplementory agreements reached in terms thereof in the subsequent protracted negotiations.

Efforts to settle all the problems of Southern Africa at the same time, should be discontinued.

So for example, the suggestion that the Cubans must first withdraw from Angola before 435 can be implemented, is a new element and is unreasonable and unattainable.

Similarly to demand that the Angolan Government must first accommodate Unita, is far-fetched and should be abandoned.

The endless chatter about a new Turnhalle-type conference, or Lancaster-type conference or so-called all party Namibian conference, should now cease.

Internal parties are free to hold as many all party conferences as they can organise themselves.

They should not however burden the Western Five with such proposals at this stage when all energy should be directed towards the implementation of 435 of 1978.

Such proposers and proposals only play into the hands of those who wish to confuse the issues and delay the process indefinately so that the status quo can be preserved and/or the process to an internationally recognized independence reversed.

STRENGTHEN AND REFINE

There is however a need to strengthen and refine 435 of 1978 and the supplementary agreements reached in terms thereof.

The purpose should be to achieve greater precision and certainty and to build more confidence that a relatively free and fair election will be held and that the participating parties will subscribe to and practice democratic principles and a policy of reconciliation, not only during the independence process, but also in the forseeable future thereafter.

How to strengthen and refine 435, is a difficult but not insoluble question. Some guidelines can be stated:

- No progress is possible if consensus or full agreement is required between all the interested parties including all the Namibian political parties inside and outside Namibia.

It is impossible to reach that sort of agreement with the HNP on the far right and Swapo on the far left and all the political giants in between.

- The best that can be aimed at is fair consultation with all interested parties and the maximum possible degree of broad agreement based on what is possible, practical and reasonable in all the circumstances.
- No party should be allowed to come with new demands whenever the previous objections have been settled.
- No interested party should have the right of veto of the Western Five's final formulation after fair consultation.

We therefore welcome the clear understanding apparently reached between SA and the Western Five that no party will be allowed to veto such final formulation based on the maximum possible degree of consensus obtainable in all the circumstances.

PHASE 1 OF THE RENEWED INITIATIVE:

After the recent round of discussions with the Five in Windhoek, we believe that the constitutional principles put forward by the Five as Phase 1 of the initiative to strengthen and refine 435, should and would be retained in substance in the finale document, although there is some scope for a better formulation in some clauses to express the true intention.

If so, it will be a significant step to strengthen 435.

It will be an aid to greater unity amongst all Namibians at the pre-implementation stage, and will open the door for compromise and reconciliation, even before the commencement of the implementation phase.

It will mean that we have agreement on the main principles of the future constitution of Namibia in advance and that we are at least halfway to a final constitution even before a Constituent Assembly is constituted.

On the other hand, reasonable scope is left for political parties to campaign for their particulars blueprints.

The constitution as a whole will then agreed on by a two-thirds majority of the elected representatives. The proposed prior agreement that an two-thirds majority will be required to approve the final constitution in the constituent assembly, is a very valuable concession.

In this way time will be saved and the process towards independence speeded up. It will also build greater confidence in the future of Namibia.

STRENGTHENED

The aforesaid advantages of this prior agreement, can be further strengthened if certain measures are agreed on to ensure that a party will be effectively prevented from renouncing during the election phase or in the constituent assembly, the prior agreement on such principles.

At the outset it must however be stated that there are many good reasons for believing that none of the parties will renounce the agreement on constitutional principles during the election or in the constituent assembly.

It must also be clear that the greatest security attainable will probably be if progressive but moderate parties obtain a substantial slice of the popular vote in the election.

They should therefore regard the attainment of such a result as a priority.

Nevertheless, the prior agreement on constitutional principles can be strengthened if, as with other pre-implimentation agreements it is recorded and confirmed by the Security Council in a suitable form, preferably in a further resolution.

It will then become an integral and essential part of the prescribed process and could become a precondition of an internationally-recognised independence.

In this sense it could mean that the independence process cannot be completed and internationally-recognized, unless and until such principles are written into the constitution of an independent Namibia. In the same way, the constituent assembly will have to courtesy until a two-thirds majority is obtained for the constitution as a whole.

It could in addition become a prescribed condition for participation by political parties in the election, to reaffirm its commitment to the principles and/or could become a prescribed ground for the disqualification of a party if such party renounces the agreement at any stage of the implementation process.

The International Judical Tribunal Instituted under 435 to decide who are political prisoners, should also have jurisdiction to decide on such disqualification.

Although international guarantees for upholding the constitution after independence will be welcome, it is unlikely that effective international guarantees can be negotiated in advance.

One of the problems are that any agreement to allow any foreign power or organisation to invade Namibia to uphold its constitution, will be an interference in its internal affairs and an attack on its sovereignty.

The possibility of an international fund to compensate people for property expropriated or lost should things go wrong, is a further possibility to be examined.

MORAL PERSUASION

The underwriting of the constitution by SA, the Western Five the Frontline States, will probably amount to nothing more than moral persuasion once Namibia becomes a sovereign independant state.

We do not believe that a relatively rigid constitution entrenching agreed basic human rights, the independence of the Courts and the rôle of the Supreme Court as watchdog and guardian of the constitution, is a mere piece of paper which can be torn up at will.

It provides for the interpretation of the constitution by the Supreme Court and for the right of any agrieved individual to approach it for a ruling when the basic human rights of the individual are violated.

Such principles, will be a formidable obstacle to tyranny, especially if it is entrenched in the constitution, requiring a two-third majority for any change.

It is true that no constitution and no international guarantee can ever provide absolute guarantees for all time.

But there will be many other incentives for a would-be dictatorship to honour the agreement enshrined in the constitution.

LESSONS OF DECOLONISATION

So the lessons of decolonisation in Africa have taught even the militants and the revolutionaries that tyranny and the total suppression of private initiative and enterprize will lead to the collapse of the state and all the dreams of Uhuru.

The need to enable skilled and productive people to continue to produce, will probably encourage a policy of reconciliation.

An independent Namibia will need healthy relations with SA, particularly in the realm of transport, investment and economic assistance. The West may be reluctant to invest in and to assist an independent Namibia if it renounces its constitution.

After independence, Namibia will need economic assistance more than arms and the West as well as SA is in a position to supply the investment and know-how for a successful peace.

SA and the West, will therefore have considerable economic muscle to influence events in Namibia.

I also believe that no single party will have such overwhelming support that it could ignore the rights and views of others and renounce all prior agreements.

The combination of a relatively rigid constitution and the aforesaid considerations afford reasonable guarantees for a sound future.

Many of those who now demand absolute guarantees have had the opportunity over a long period to create institutions envisaged in the aforesaid constitutional principles.

They were in a position to provide guarantees for such principles. Unfortunately, they failed to do so.

The new set of principles will be a new beginning and a great advance on what had gone before.

It deserved our support.

THE SECOND PHASE

We trust that the Second Phase to strengthen and refine Resolution 435 of 1978, will be continued in due course. This phase will deal with the socalled impartiality of the UN, the composition of Untag and related matters.

Again the starting point is Resolution 435 of 1978 and all the agreements subsequently arrived at in the course of protracted negotiations in terms of 435.

The points of view of the interested parties have been aired repeatedly over a long period of time.

Some basic points however should be stressed:

● Impartiality is a two-way street.

Not only should the UN supervisory team referred to as Untag be impartial, but also SA and its institutions, including the AG.

● The plan envisaged in 435 is a compromise and contains a large number of balances and checks to aid in the achievement of relatively free and fair elections.

The principle and aim of free and fair elections, is the central theme of Resolution 435 of 1978.

● Although the plan envisages elections under UN supervision and control, in essence the elections would be held under the joint supervision and control of SA and the UN.

So for example the AG. appointed the SA will retain power and control over the government of Namibia during the implementation period and the SA Police would remain primarily responsible for law and order.

The more detailed rules and regulations relating to the election process, will be drawn up by the AG, with the approval of the Special Representative of the Secretary General of the UN, after consultation with all interested parties.

● Resolution 435 reverses the trend of UN Resolutions in that it recognises all the political parties in Namibia and provides for their participation on an equal basis, whereas the General Assembly resolutions over a long period recognise Swapo as the sole and authentic representative of the people of Namibia.

● Implementation of Resolution 435 will mean that a new process is set afoot which will enable any party to participate and to form the government of an independent Namibia, an automatic reversal of the status quo and of sole recognition of Swapo.

No further Security Council Resolution is thus required to reverse this status quo. What is required is implementation of Resolution 435.

● The favouritism of the majority of members of the UN for Swapo, is based on a long history of events and it will be impossible to change this attitude to any significant extent, just as the favouritism of the SA government for its institutions and proteges will substantially remain, whatever happens.

The purpose should therefore not be to attempt to get SA and the UN to renounce their past attitudes and sympathies, but rather to agree on rules and procedures to limit the influence of such sympathies to the minimum.

To say that the UN will be the arbiter and the judge is a gross exaggeration.

It is the adult voters of Namibia who will be the ultimate judge.

To reach the stage where the people of Namibia through its adult voters in a free and fair election can be the judge of the conflicting claims of the parties, is the real aim of the settlement envisaged in 435.

It seems that the following specific measures can aid the attainment of impartiality:

● There must be agreement prior to implementation on the composition and dress of untag.

● From the moment of implementation of Resolution 435, all material assistance from the UN to Swapo must be cut off simultaneously with the assumption of full power over the interim administration of Namibia by the AG.

● The activities of the UN Council for Namibia must be suspended as well as that of the National Assembly and second-tier authorities.

The full powers of a Administration will then vest in the AG for the whole of the interim period in terms of Resolution 435 of 1978.

● UN funds will be used to stress impartiality, freedom of choice, secrecy of the ballot, the prior agreement on constitutional principles and the other rules and regulations relating to free and fair elections.

● Measures will be taken to ensure absolute impartiality and equal access of participating parties to Radio and TV.

● All public facilities to be open to all including town halls and accommodation at schools and colleges for the purpose of election meetings.

● Intimidation and bribery of voters to be serious offences which can lead to the disqualification of a party and/or its candidates.

Again the key to a speedy settlement is that no party to the negotiations should be allowed a right to veto.

THE IMPLEMENTATION PHASE:

The aim should be to begin implementation by April 1982.

In view of the period of 7 months envisaged in 435 for the implementation phase, the actual election can then take place in October 1982 and Namibia can attain internationally recognized independence by December 1982 or in the first quarter of 1983.

The Western Five and the SA Government must be thanked for the spirit in which the latest round of negotiations have been conducted.

Reasonable people appreciate the effort.

EDITOR PONDERS FUTURE OF AG 8

Windhoek WINDHOEK OBSERVER in English 6 Nov 81 p 20

[Article by Leon Kok in column "From the Editor's Desk": "Coming to Terms With AG 8"]

[Text]

WHAT will happen to AG 8?

That question is being asked in many circles, and not surprisingly so.

AG 8 is the country's interim constitution.

A year ago it was hailed as the perfect answer to the country's group relations; today it is under serious attack and is the source of considerable bitterness.

"Why", you might ask.

To answer that question, one has to go back into the history of AG 8 a bit.

It is a product of the old Turnhalle Conference and the present DTA, with qualification of course.

AG 8 is essentially meant to be a constitution in which national affairs (such as Finance and Defence) are handled by the first level of government while all ethnic affairs (such as education and cultural matters) are handled at the second level of government.

AG 8 is unique in the world in that the second level authorities are not geographically-based but serve particular ethnic groups throughout the country. Naturally, there is considerable overlapping between ethnic authorities and the location of ethnic groups. The Owambo authority for example is based in Owambo while the Damara authority is based in Damaraland.

The DTA pushed hard during 1979 to have AG 8 introduced in SWA and in the process met considerable resistance from the White NP. The SA Government, sensitive to White interests, was initially reluctant to intervene.

Eventually, last year, the former AG Dr Gerrit Viljoen, engineered a deal: he got the DTA to agree to a second-tier election (which the NP wanted and the DTA initially opposed) in return for the introduction of AG 8. As it turned out, the deal was accepted. AG 8 was introduced and two DTA constituent parties went on to lose the second-tier elections.

AG 8 is said to have been primarily drafted by legal experts in the AG's office, notably Mr Fred Visagie, but the design was primarily drawn up by DTA Chairman Mr Dirk Mudge and Dr Gerrit Viljoen. It corresponded perfectly with RP policy.

Significantly, the NP in its official organ, Die Suidwester, claimed credit for AG 8 and that claim was hotly disputed by the RP official organ, Die Republikein. Indeed, Die Republikein was taken aback that the NP could claim credit for something which the NP didn't deserve.

Meanwhile, the first ripples of discontent emerged in top DTA affronted circles.

A number of prominent Black and Brown caucus members felt that Mr Mudge had primarily taken it upon himself to do the negotiating on AG 8 and that his consultations with his DTA caucus on the matter were kept to a bare minimum.

It was felt furthermore that no-one in the DTA could do anything or get anywhere without Dirk Mudge and as such the affronted caucus members felt reluctant to confront him. Two of Mr Mudge's White stalwarts, Messrs Appie Louw and Werner Neef, did however see fit to opt out at a later stage, although the issues concerned did not relate directly to AG 8.

Not only were caucus members affronted by the drafting of AG 8, they were also affronted by its form. And as time went by, so the momentum of these anti-feelings increased. However, they remained publicly guarded.

DESPISE

The first high-ranking DTA official to start talking out against AG 8 was DTA President Mr Peter Kalangula. He despised its form from the very outset.

Mr Mudge has no doubt felt this pressure building up for some time and has conceded that there are flaws in AG 8. Rather than attack the interim constitution directly, however, he has accused the NP of exploiting it. Significantly though, in a speech in Rehoboth a fortnight ago, Mr Mudge implicitly rejected the concept of geographical authorites, thus placing himself at direct loggerheads to Mr Kalangula.

A high pitch in the differences between Mr Kalangula and Mr Mudge is said to have been reached in a DTA caucus meeting just prior to the arrival of the Western five delegation and flowing from that, it was agreed to appoint a committee under the chairmanship of Mr Pieter Junius to investigate and review the situation. The report is expected to be completed shortly.

The lack of immediate clarity is perhaps the main reason that AG 8 was not fully discussed this week between the DTA delegation and the SA Cabinet delegation. SA Foreign Minister Mr Pik Botha said on Tuesday however that the matter could be raised sometime in the future.

The Black and Brown members of the Ministers' Council no doubt expected Mr Mudge (as Chairman of the Council) to confront the Cabinet delegation and Mr Mudge probably felt unqualified and reluctant to do so. This in turn might well explain his visit to Swakopmund on Tuesday when one would otherwise have throught that he would have grabbed the opportunity to put the SA Government in its place.

Besides, it is not in Mr Mudge's nature to pursue a confrontation path. This is already wellknown to his colleagues and some for example feel that it has resulted in his being too soft in handling the AG Mr Danie Hough over the Seemüller case, SWA House, the Tintenpalast and the White Teachers Training College. In the Seemüller case it is felt that the least Mr Mudge could have done was to have publicly confronted Mr Hough or to have taken the matter to Court. Instead, NP leader Mr Kosie Pretorius was left laughing.

Turning to the future, there is a great danger that a split in the DTA could emerge, but I doubt that it will happen. One of Mr Mudge's great strengths is keeping groups together, even if it means compromising considerably on his own part.

TIGHT CONTROL

Anyway, he maintains such tight control over the DTA, the RP, the first-tier government and Die Republikein that in the long term he should generally be able to move things his own way.

Be that as it may, the DTA is now faced with these options:

- It can live with AG 8 in its present form;
- It can scrap it altogether;
- It can just get right out of government.

Looking at these points more closely, it is unlikely that the DTA in its broadest sense will want to live with AG 8 in its present form. It is felt that this is just what Swapo wants and that in a UN-supervised election it will contribute greatly to a Swapo victory.

In the meantime, however, minor changes can be expected to be made to AG 8. A compromise situation if you like between the Mudges and the Kalungulas. But no more than that.

Besides, Mr Hough cannot be expected to renege on an agreement that was engineered by his predecessor. The least he can do, in his view no doubt, is to uphold AG 8, unless of course Mr Pretorius is willing to make major concessions. And that is most unlikely. Now, in any event.

It is also unlikely that the DTA will want to scrap AG 8 entirely. Almost three years have gone by in setting up its structure and there just isn't time before a possible internationally-supervised election to bring about substantial amends or set up a new structure. Indeed, it would take a long time to purely formulate a new structure while after that there could be considerable infighting over borders, land claims and other interests.

The easiest option of course will be for the DTA to get right out of government, turn its back on AG 8 and sort out its new direction within its own ranks. Besides, it is already having to accept the blame for issues that are right out of its control such as the drought situation. I believe that this option is closer to us than meets the eye.

FOOL'S PARADISE

Having said that though, I believe that we will be living in a fool's paradise if we think that the problem will be entirely sorted out by the mere scrapping of AG 8 or even just amending it to a great degree.

Deep down the issue is all about the White-Black interface, the perceptions of the situation, the clash of interests and in fact the struggle for supremacy.

Mr Mudge's approach, whether he admits it or not, has been strongly geared to getting the best deal possible for the Whites with the least amount of resistance from the Blacks. His Black and Brown colleagues however took what they could get, while they could get it and will increasingly demand more as they consolidate their positions.

The gap is a big one that the Blacks are aspiring to close, it is the gap of haves and have-nots. Coupled with that is the crisis of rising expectations. The more they get, the more they become aware of the world around them and the more they will want. Its a natural human phenomenon and features here and in every other Third World country in both the north and southern hemispheres.

It should furthermore be borne in mind that the position in the country at present is anything but as polarised as it might be in say two or three years time. If a UN-supervised election is for example held in SWA during the next 18 months, thousands of radical exiles will return and their demands will be far greater than those that we hear about at present. And the DTA, if it is in power, will have to accommodate those demands. Failing that, it will come horribly short in the very next election.

Against that background, the question has to be asked: Must the Whites work with the moderate Blacks to defuse confrontation or should they resist and eventually be pressurised into oblivion?

I don't think that the Whites have much of a choice and I believe that it will be very shortsighted to ignore the perceptions and aspirations of the Blacks at this point, or for that matter any point ahead of us.

Simply, to dabble in selfish White politics can and will have a disastrous result.

Both the RP and the NP strongly need to realistically reassess their stances, because their present directions spell considerable trouble ahead.

And coupled with that, it is to be hoped that the SA Government will make suitable adjustments too if it is truly wants to secure its best interests on the sub-continent.

And above all, time is the essence.

MUDGE FINDS SEVEN OF NINE PROPOSALS ACCEPTABLE

Windhoek WINDHOEK OBSERVER in English 9 Nov 81 p 2

[Text]

THE CHAIRMAN of the SWA Ministers' Council, Mr Dirk Mudge, said in Windhoek today that the DTA had found acceptable seven points of the nine-paragraph constitutional guide proposed by the Western Contact Group for the Territory's independence.

Mr Mudge did not elaborate.

Speaking at the congress of the Labour Party – which forms the Coloured political component of the DTA – the DTA Chairman said Swapo had been beaten military.

But he doubted whether Swapo could win an internationally-supervised election unless the Swapo election organisation employed intimidation tactics.

"The DTA is prepared to participate in elections under United Nations supervision provided the world body ceases its bias in favour of Swapo."

In an apparent reference to current reports of strain within the DTA and between the alliance and the SA Government, Mr Mudge said the DTA – controlled "interim government is frustrated and unhappy that it cannot implement essential changes" in SWA.

"This view has been brought to the attention of the South African Government," he said.

Earlier reports in Windhoek quoted DTA spokesmen as saying it would be easier for members of the Ministers' Council and the alliance as a whole to resign from government and let the South African-appointed Administrator General run the country.

"We, as a party, will be able to engage in politics and have the privilege of criticising without assuming responsibility," Mr Mudge said. – Sapa

VERGES INTERVIEWED ON 'MEET THE PRESS' PROGRAM

Saint Denis TEMOIGNAGES in French 9 Oct 81 pp 8-9

[Part I of multi-part series on Paul Verges, secretary of the Reunion Communist Party; 8 October FR3-Reunion Radio interview, by Jean Philippe Roussy, Jean Claude Migneaux, Hubert Bruyere and Jean Pierre Juan]

> [Excerpt] At noon yesterday, FR3-Reunion's program "Meet the Press" [Face a la Presse] welcomed Paul Verges, secretary of the Reunion Communist Party. It was a big first on radio because Verges had never before spoken on the air as secretary of the Communist Party, except for the July televised broadcast with Wilfrid Bertile. Presenting this "Meet the Press" program, Jean Philippe Roussy began for FR3-Reunion as follows:

[Roussy] Today we welcome Paul Verges, secretary of the Communist Party of Reunion. Here to ask him questions are Jean Claude Migneaux, from FANAL; Hubert Bruyere, from LE QUOTIDIEN; and Jean Pierre Juan, from the JOURNAL DE L'ILE DE LA REUNION. Verges will therefore answer major questions of local or regional interest because those are the main areas of interest for our colleagues of the press.

For reasons of convenience, we have divided the broadcast, which is to last 45 minutes, into three parts.

If you will permit, the first part will be devoted to political issues (15 minutes). The second part will be for economic questions and the third, matters of a social nature [second and third parts not translated]. We shall perhaps have an extra 5 minutes to deal with miscellaneous questions. Who would like to ask the first question?

[Migneaux] Mr Verges, as you know, the Socialist Federation of Reunion is to hold an important congress on Sunday, probably the most important congress since 1974. The congress will undoubtedly take up the question of whether or not to resume more normal relations with the Reunion Communist Party, now considered to be a majority party. Without going so far as to say that the socialists have been traumatized, one does notice that part of them are very distrustful, even reticent. The recent past has in fact shown us that discussions with the communists were always very rugged under a very courteous exterior. These discussions often shielded the demands and sometimes even the intransigence of a Communist Party that was too sure of being the only party on the left to have the truth. Today, the date of

has gone by and your attitude is much more conciliatory. Here is my question: If the socialist resume contact with you, on what basis would you accept a future political platform? What are the limits beyond which you will not go? I am thinking, for example, of the question of a single departmental assembly that you want or the maintenance of two assemblies, elections in 1982, as you wish, or in 1983, as the socialist would prefer. In short, can you accept a platform on the basis of the socialist program as drafted?

[Roussy] Are there other questions or should Mr Verges answer this series immediately?

[Bruyere] Before taking up matters of political policy, although they do have their importance, I would perhaps have liked to ask a more general question: Since 10 May, a certain number of things have changed, in principle. I would have liked to ask Mr Verges: What are the signs of change in Reunion? Has he seen change? Many people believe that there has been no real, palpable change.

[Verges] It would perhaps be more logical, since problems on the change are going to stem from it, for me to answer the question put by Comrade Migneaux, representing the socialist newspaper.

If I base my answer on the notes I have taken, he says that our socialist comrades are traumatized, that there is a certain distrust, that some are reticent, for discussions are always rugged because of the intransigence of the communists, who are too sure of being right, but that we have been more conciliatory since 10 May.

I fear that while there is a great deal of good will in the question, there is still some recrimination. I think that he should have said what demands were exorbitant. We are not going to go over the entire past. Which of our demands were exorbitant? I suppose he is talking of the elections of 1977 in St-Pierre or St-Louis -- already long ago -- but that is past of the past, of history. Nevertheless, the figures are there and the question could unfortunately be turned around.

Is the Communist Party too sure of having the truth? We always say that we have good will. We have continuing exchanges on our political line. We apply it with a great deal of conviction, but we have never claimed to have the truth. We believe that that truth comes from experience, from the confrontation with reality. That is why we are always ready to take it into account, and even without being asked to do so by others, we have always corrected our line when we thought it was poorly adapted or that there were errors.

If the socialists resume contact, Comrade Migneaux said, on what platform would it be possible? What are the limits beyond which we would not go? What agreement can there be on the date of the elections: in 1982, as we want, or 1983, as the socialists prefer?

I believe that here, we must clarify things.

Concerning contacts, we are happy that the possibility is being brought up by the socialist federation. We asked for this right after 10 May. It has been nearly 5 months and I therefore think that the sooner the better.

On what platform? I am thinking of the last question Mr Migneaux asked: Are the communists ready to commit themselves to the socialist program?

We do not ask our socialist comrades to do so on the communist program because that would be an exorbitant demand. Therefore, do not ask from the very beginning for us to commit ourselves to the socialist program. That would be a "dominating" attitude, to use someone else's phrase.

In my opinion, the political platform stems from the results of 10 May and those of 14 and 21 June. I believe that the tradition of the Fifth Republic is formed the day of the presidential election. You socialists were there. We communists were there also. We are therefore part of the presidential majority.

According to the constitution, the president of the republic, who has many powers, is elected for 7 years. The subsequent elections have shown that there is an overwhelming leftist majority in the National Assembly for 5 years.

We therefore believe that henceforth, the roles are reversed and that while the right may have been able to exclude the left from government for over 20 years, the latter is now firmly in power, not only for an incompressible minimum of 7 years, but quite likely for 15 or 20 years. We are only at the beginning of this long march of success for the left and of failures, disappointments and defeats for the right. That is our analysis from which our strategy is derived.

That is why after the 10 May election, we said that the acceptable framework was the bill filed by the Socialist Party during the previous legislature, within the context of the regional reform.

Why did we say this?

Because on 10 May, a presidential majority formed around the 101 proposals of the candidate who became the president of the republic and who said, concerning the overseas departments: "For the French overseas peoples who are demanding real change: the opening of an era of concertation and dialog based on recognition of their identity and their right to achieve their aspirations. Among other things, in overseas departments, the institution of a departmental council elected by proportional voting and responsible for local life in each department, with obligatory consultation before any international agreement affecting the region of the world in which they are found. The bill presented on this subject by the socialist group in Parliament will be submitted to Parliament at the next legislative session.

That is the bill of which we were just speaking. That is the platform on which we are ready to come to an agreement, no more no less. It is precisely Proposal 58 of the president of the republic.

[Bruyere] Yes, but apparently, that bill is out of date because the first thing that Deputy Wilfrid Bertile did once elected was to sign a text with Michel Debre, Jean Fontaine and the Association of Mayors asking that exactly the same thing be applied to the overseas departments as to mainland France. Since that time, we have heard no more about the socialist proposal.

[Juan] Indeed, and I would even like to complete the question of my colleague Bruyere, saying that in spite of everything, universal suffrage rejected that proposal, as far as I know.

[Verges] Universal suffrage? Where? When and how?

[Juan] In Reunion.

[Verges] Listen, if henceforth, every department that does not give a majority to the president of the republic considers that from the time it did not give that majority, it does not have to yield to a program ratified by the majority of the French people, then I wonder where the separatists are?

[Juan] Of course, but I do not understand why you appeal to the Reunionese people, saying that we must take their desires into account. And on this precise point you say no; universal suffrage must be extended.

[Verges] I appeal to the will of the Reunionese people because on the first ballot of the legislative elections -- and we are not talking about the election of a president of the republic — on the first ballot of the legislative elections in June, the left had the majority in Reunion. The leftist candidates had it.

[Juan] And on the second ballot? That is what counts, after all.

[Verges] You say that the second ballot is the one that counts, and you know very well that we are contesting the election in the second district.

[Juan] That is your right. You can contest it until the end of your days; the facts are there.

[Verges] Indeed; that is what I am complaining about. In the Constitutional Council, I say that there are facts and we are trying to reply to the Constitutional Council, not say that there are no facts. I prove the existence of those facts and we shall see what we have.

[Juan] Very good, Mr Verges, but....

[Verges] But having said that much and to take the case of the French Republic, I do not see how, in an election concerning the entire French Republic, such and such a department can say: "I contest the election, the legitimacy of the decision made by the majority because what was voted on 10 May is the 101 proposals of the president of the republic, including Proposal 58."

I regret to say this, but the word has been used so much. It is a separatist attitude. It actually means separating oneself from the majority will expressed by the voters of the French Republic, whether they be in mainland France or in the overseas departments.

[Juan] That may very well be, Mr Verges, but you use that reasoning when it suits you. In this precise case, it does not suit you at all.

[Verges] Concerning Mr Bruyere's question, I believe that you are confusing your interlocutors. My name is Paul Verges; I am not Wilfrid Bertile. I think and hope that he will also come to answer your questions. But having said that much, with this attack being made on Wilfrid Bertile, I believe that the event that will be decisive is the congress of the Socialist Federation here on Sunday. That is what will establish the line. I believe that one of the characteristics of the Socialist Party is to have within it -- I am speaking in front of Comrade Migneaux -- a certain number of factions and a very great freedom of expression outside, which does not necessarily obligate the Socialist Party as such or the federation as such.

Concerning the Regional Council elections, we are asking for elections in 1982. Very Very well. I have learned through Mr Migneaux that the Socialist Party is asking for them in 1983.

[Migneaux] I did not say the Socialist Party; I said the government.

[Verges] The date of the Regional Council elections has not yet been set by the government. Consequently, each one must make his own proposals. We propose to have elections in March 1982, in place of the elections to replace half of the General Council, because in our opinion, the Council of which Proposal 58 of the president of the republic speaks, that departmental council in the mind of the socialist bills from the previous legislature, will take the place of the two current assemblies: the General Council and the Regional Council. In that way, we would dissipate the uncertainty more rapidly. We would know more rapidly where we are headed. The institutions will be established sooner and that would be better for the political climate of Reunion.

[Roussy] We have nearly finished with the political questions, but I would like to pose one more: This afternoon, there is a press conference of the MIR, the Movement for the Independence of Reunion. Does the Reunion Communist Party have relations with the MIR?

[Verges] We have no connection with the Movement for the Independence of Reunion.

[Roussy] Is autonomy still considered? Can long-term independence be considered by the Communist Party or not, if the situation on the national level should change?

[Verges] I believe that the Communist Party does not try to predict the future, on the one hand, and that it tries to keep its feet on the ground.

We believe that we have a minimum of 15 to 20 years -- that is, at least a generation to develop Reunion politically, economically, socially and culturally. We are convinced that in so doing within the framework of the French Republic and while enjoying French solidarity, we shall have in one generation a kind of close, strengthened relations with the people of France, which will be a considerable asset. That obviously does not exclude meetings in our geographical region.

But with respect to the assembly of which Mr Migneaux was just speaking, I would like to add a word. I believe that it is not possible to ignore the constitution to such an extent that one can deceive the Reunion people. I recently heard and I have read that a single assembly would be the "end of national solidarity."

That statement is as peremptory as it is illogical.

Article 72 of the constitution says -- and I quote from memory: it is such an oft quoted article that I almost know it by heart -- that the territorial collectives of the republic are the departments, the communes and the overseas territories. Any other territorial collective is established by law.

The current regional reform law is therefore going to create a new territorial collective, which will be the region, which will be converted from the current public establishment into a new territorial collective. From that moment on, regional organization in France responds to a logic. It is the collection of several departments into a region. Every department has a single assembly, which is the general council, and every region has a single assembly, which is the regional council.

Now then, Reunion is a single-department region. And you who have witnessed the sessions of our two assemblies, can you tell me what fundamental difference there is in their concept? You have the general council that sits with 36 general council members and which, considering the electoral division in Reunion, practically brings together 36 mayors and their deputies. They debate problems from essentially communal viewpoints. What is the difference between that and a regional council, which is changed only through the addition of members of Parliament, several of whom are already on it as general council members, and three or four representatives from communes with over 30,000 inhabitants?

As you are going to have, along with the region, a territorial collective creating a regional civil service, logic and the constitution imply that we should have a single assembly with the powers of the two current assemblies, considering the fact, furthermore, that the current general council has, by virtue of the decrees of April 1960, greater powers than those of a general metropolitan council and approaching those of a regional council.

The dispute over the single assembly conceals one concern: A single assembly will be elected by proportional voting and that does away with the unjust division of the cantons. There will be no more cantons overrepresented or underrepresented. No voice will be lost. The figures show that the left in Reunion will be victorious and the left in Reunion is the Socialist Federation, the radical leftists, a number of other factions and individuals, and the Reunion Communist Party.

HENNING DENIES DESIRE TO EMBARRASS PM BOTHA

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 9 Nov 81 p 3

[Article by Jaap Theron: "Prof's Denial on Congress"]

[Text]

PROFESSOR J J Henning of Pretoria, who unsuccessfully attempted to introduce a motion at the recent Nationalist congress calling upon congress to express itself unequivocably against a single voters' list and against Indians and coloureds in the White Parliament, denied yesterday he had wanted to embarrass the prime Minister with the motion.

Prof Henning, who attempted to introduce the motion after Mr P W Botha had expressed himself against a unitarian state, said he felt it was necessary "that the government knows exactly how the Transvaal congress feels about this issue."

Dr Andries Treurnicht, Transvaal leader of the National Party, who chaired the congress at the time, effectively blocked Prof Henning's motion by putting it to congress that everyone was satisfied with the Prime Minister's explanation.

Prof Henning nodded to Dr Treurnicht and the motion was then not put to the vote.

Prof Henning's motion was taken from a resolution from Pietersburg requesting an unequivocal standpoint by the congress on the matter.

The Prime Minister replied that the government was against a unitarian state — it was "not possible to give a fixed undertaking regarding the resolution."

Asked yesterday why it was necessary to introduce a motion carrying the main body of the Pietersburg-resolution after the premier has replied to the motion, Prof Henning said: "I felt the congress had to tell the government formally how it felt about the issue.

"I did not put the motion simply to embarrass the prime minister."

Dr Treurnicht initially prevented Prof Henning from reading the motion before the tea-break, and said it could be handled after the tea-break.

After tea Dr Treurnicht told the congress the prime minister had already referred to the resolution from which the motion was taken and he asked congress if everyone were satisfied.

Prof Henning nodded and as no other delegate spoke Dr Treurnicht said it appeared everyone was satisfied with the Prime Minister's explanation.

Observers pointed out afterwards that Dr Treurnicht only did what was expected of a provincial leader and congress chairman under such circumstances, namely to defuse a possibly explosive debate which could have followed if the motion was allowed and put to the vote.

One possibility was that amendments would have been made to the motion and that heated debate could have followed, which would have harmed the congress's image of unity.

CHIEF BUTHELEZI PRAISES FREE MARKET SYSTEM

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 9 Nov 81 p 9

[Text] CAPE TOWN. — The system of free enterprise appears to be one of the roughest and toughest systems of human interaction ever developed by man, but it should also be seen as one of the most resilient systems ever developed, says Chief Gatsha Buthelezi, Chief Minister of KwaZulu.

In a statement released on the eve of talks the Prime Minister, Mr P W Botha is to hold with businessmen, Chief Buthelezi said while the Black man's disillusionment was increasing, it was "important to look at the direction in which our country is moving".

Managers could, for example, within the philosophy of the free market system, demand amounts of work from labourers to the detriment of those labourers if it were not for legalisation and the limitations set by the workers organisers, he said.

Exploitation

Enterpreneurs would, for example, exploit natural resources to such an extent that large areas, sub-regions or waterways would be destroyed if it was not for legalisation and pressure from social groups," he said.

"I have to acknowledge the fact that modern business and industrial leaders are not nearly as mediaeval as I set out above.

"I also wish to stress that the tempering influence on the toughest element of the free market system should be kept alive by being alert.

"If the industrialist is not alert, too much legislation and too much administrative control by the State would limit his freedom to create riches out of raw materials."

Limited

This had already happened in South Africa.

Investors could not freely site factories in areas of their choice. They could not move labour from one area to another. Their marketing was being limited by legislation and administration, he said.

"Some talented entrepreneurs are being kept out of the so-called White areas because they are Black. Other entrepreneurs are again being shown the door in Black areas because they are White.

"The South African State interferes with the free marketing system to a disturbing extent."

The Government's development programmes had for many years been determined by party political priorities, instead of national or economic priorities, chief Buthelezi said.

The Prime Minister held consultations with businessmen last year. That was good. This year, he again wants to have consultations with them. That is also good.

Last year he spoke about freeing the economy of State control. He talked about the partnership and the system of free enterpeneurship, that was good.

Production

South Africa needed this kind of freedom. Increasing unemployment could only aggravate political instability.

"We will have to become much more productive than we were at present if the backlog in housing, education, medical and social needs are to be eradicated.

"I have already said, and repeat it again, that the system of free enterprise is the system we have to implement.

He saw no future for a socialistic economic system to give impetus to economic development.

"If the lack of alertness among entrepreneurs and lack of direction at Cabinet level lasts too long . . . the system of free enterprise would not be able to create what I expect of it," he said.

"Social and political disorder would increase to the extent that even coercion to support the daily administration would collapse." — Sapa.

SOWETO FOCAL POINT--Port Elizabeth--The chairman of the Greater Soweto Planning Council, Mr Louis Rive, says there is little doubt that as the focal point for social, economic and constitutional evolution in respect of the urban Black, Soweto will be seen nationally and internationally as representative of what happened in South Africa. Mr River was speaking at a banquet in Port Elizabeth, at which he received the gold medal award of the Public Relations Institute of South Africa. He said it was even more important for South Africa to find the right answers for the Soweto's of today and tomorrow than for the rest of the world to find the answers for Africa. It was a fallacy to think that the country could maintain stability and move forward peacefully by trying to pacify the urban Black man with gifts and handouts. He said urban Blacks had an aversion to paternalism, and self-help was part of the Black man's cultural heritage. He believed it was vital for cities such as Soweto to be as self-sufficient as possible. [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 9 Nov 81 p 9]

SAIC FLOPS FOR PAGEVIEW--The leader of the New Republic Party, Mr Vause Raw at the weekend accused the South African Government of "high-handed, stubborn stupidity" because of its refusal to allow Coloureds and Indians back into Cape Town's District Six and Pageview in Johannesburg. Opening the Umlazi NRP fete near Durban, Mr Raw described the Government's partial rejection of the recommendations of the President's Council on the two areas as "crass stupidity." He said the issue had become "symbolic" to the Indian and Coloured communities. "It is not a matter of merit or argument, but a highly sensitive matter the Government failed to understand. There was "no earthly reason" why Pageview, which bordered on an area now declared Indian, should not be returned and it was an "obvious answer" to declare district Six an open area or return it to the Coloured people. Mr Raw blamed the Government's approach to the issue for the failure of the Indian Council elections, and said it had too much pride to acknowledge its mistakes. MINISTER ADDRESSES HIGH-LEVEL SEMINAR ON PLANNING

[Text]

JUDICIOUS and effective planning of Tanzania's scarce national resources is the best remedy for the country's current economic difficulties, the Minister of State for Planning and Economic Affairs, Ndugu Kighoma Malima, said in Arusha yesterday.

Addressing a high-level seminar on planning, Ndugu Malima said the economic crisis would not be overcome easily if basic social requirements like education, health, water and essential commodities were overlooked.

He told the seminar participants, mainly senior planning officials from ministries and parastatal organisations, that the present hardships should not tempt the country to abandon its long-term socio-economic objective — to create "a socialist, egalitarian, rational and just society".

The Minister said it was wishful thinking to rely on "various accommodations and partnerships with capitalism" to solve our problems because such were the relations which had led poor countries into "the present blind alley".

"We have, therefore, rightly rejected all quasi-solutions which pretend to solve our present economic problems at the expense of our people," he said.

Ndugu Malima urged the participants to suggest ways of dealing with specific problems and point out "unsuspected and hitherto unknown" opportunities to improve the situation.

He told the five-day seminar which opened yesterday that it was not true that the planning sector knew everything about how "or even what has to be done in order to solve our present economic difficulties."

The Minister suggested a need to borrow from planning principles in other socialist countries where, he said, mobilisation and allocation of national resources were centrally controlled by planning authorities on behalf of the Party and government.

Planning discipline, he said, required that programmes and projects were implemented by those entrusted with their execution and that once the plan was approved no new projects except emergency ones would be entertained.

He explained that co-ordinated planning for agricultural or industrial development should go hand in hand with basic infrastructure such as transport facilities, power, water and housing.

MINISTER ANNOUNCES EXPORT INCENTIVE PLAN

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 10 Nov 81 p 1

[Article by Isaac Mruma]

[Text]

EXPORTERS of manufactured, processed and horticultural products worth more than 10,000/- in one single shipment will be considered for the export rebate incentives, the Board of External Trade (BET) announced yesterday.

A BET spokesman said in Dar es Salaam that those sending out shipments below 10,000/- were considered "small exporters" but would be considered for the scheme if they expanded their business volume and exceeded 10,000/-.

He reminded eligible exporters to obtain from the board's headquarters in the city the export rebate claim forms with which they could apply for the incentive.

The Government has allocated 100 million shillings in 1981/82 for the rebate scheme.

The scheme does not cover unprocessed products exported as raw materials nor agricultural products as these are handled by another scheme.

The spokesman said BET would inform the eligible qualifying exporters by letter on the amount awarded to him/her.

The present export rebate scheme, launched by the government in June this year replaces the erstwhile scheme which was more involved, requiring the eligible exporters to go through a long process before they finally collected their cheques.

Under the present scheme, once the BET approves the awards, the beneficiaries collect their money.

The rebate rates have been fixed and vary for each group of industry or products.

The rates go up to 25 per cent of the free on board (FOB) value of the export items.

The FOB value means the value of the item without its insurance cover and freight costs.

Among other criteria, the awards would consider those who fully utilised their production capacities, those who utilised less foreign exchange to produce goods that fetched more foreign exchange and also those who exported their products outside for lower prices than those offered at home.

Announcing the export incentive scheme the Minister for Trade, Ndugu Ali Mchumo, had said exporters exceeding the average performance "by quality and not by volume" over the past one year would get an additional bonus of 10 per cent on top of the rebate.

SUNGURATEX MANAGER BRIEFS ASSEMBLY SPEAKER

THE Tanganyika Dyeing and Weaving Mills Limited (Sunguratex) expects to produce over 11.2 million metres of cloth this year, the company's Acting General Manager, Mr. J.M. Thornton, said on Wednesday.

He added, however, that there had been a decline in production in recent years due to many problems. Important among all was lack of spare parts and raw materials mainly from overseas. Last year the company produced 11,061,419 metres of cloth against the targetted 15,068,000 metres.

Mr. Thornton was briefing the Speaker of the National Assembly, Chief Adam Sapi Mkwawa, who visited the company on a familiarisation tour of textile production.

Mr. Thornton said the target of 11,216,275 metres could have been well surpursed, but fell short due to an acute shortage of spare parts and other accessories. He said 56 weaving machines were grounded for three months since August, for lack of vital spare parts.

"This is a national problem", he said, adding that the company was making alternative arrangements for obtaining "at least some of the spare parts and other accessories locally".

EANSL WORKERS TO RECEIVE TERMINAL BENEFITS

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 5 Nov 81 p 3

[Text]

FIFTY-seven workers of the defunct Eastern Africa National Shipping Line (EANSL) would soon receive Shs. 1,104,006/65 from the government as their terminal benefits, it was learnt in Dar es Salaam yesterday.

Confirming this, the Director of Shipping in the Ministry of Communication and Transport, Ndugu P. Megji said arrangements have already been finalised on how the workers could be paid.

He said the former employees would have to report to the ministry to receive their benefits which include payments of accrued leave, notice of termination, leave allowance and severance allowance.

He explained that payment of the benefits is part of the EANSL liquidation process following its dissolution in April last year in which Kenya, Uganda, Tanzania and Zambia held shares.

Ndugu Megji said the London-based joint liquidator, Coopers and Lybrand, had set the net figure to be paid to the beneficiaries after deducting their loans at 1,300,996/65.

However, he said the workers would share some Shs. 1,104,006/65 because further deductions would have to be made since the workers had received loans from the government when they were repatriated from Kenya.

He said those unable to travel to Dar es Salaam should forward their contact addresses so that their cheques could be sent wherever they are.

In June this year, Tanzania signed the "heads of agreement" which was prepared by the liquidator on how the shareholders could meet their liabilities. The other shareholders had signed it earlier.

EANSL was disbanded after it fell into constant financial problems leading its creditors to seize its ships.

WORLD BANK EXPERT SAYS NATION COULD BE MAJOR TOBACCO PRODUCER

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 9 Nov 81 p 3

[Excerpt]

TANZANIA could become a world major tobacco producer like the US if proper modern methods were applied, a World Bank tobacco expert said in Tabora at the weekend.

Talking to tobacco field officers, at a two-day seminar on good tobacco husbandry Dr. M.A. Wahdi said Tanzania had suitable land for tobacco growing and if proper methods were followed, it would become one of the best tobacco producers in the world.

He wondered why Tanzania should not even equal other tobacco producers like Malawi, Zimbabwe and Zambia. He said these countries had similar conditions but they produced an average of 1,500 to 2,000 kilogrammes of tobacco per hectare compared to Tanzania's average of only 500 kilogrammes per hectare.

The World Bank expert, who has been seconded to the Tobacco Authority of Tanzania (TAT), pointed out that some of the problems hindering the progress of tobacco production in the country were bad selection of sites and late preparation of farms. He added that delays in harvesting also contributed to bad production.

NATION'S PARTICIPATION IN 'ANUGA' WORLD WORLD FOOD MARKET 'A SUCCESS'

Dar es Salaam SUNDAY NEWS in English 8 Nov 81 p 1

[Text]

TANZANIA's participation at the just ended "Anuga" world Food Market in Cologne, Federal Republic of Germany, has been described as a success.

According to the Board of External Trade (BET) representative at the Tanzania pavilion, Ndugu Gillied Ndossi, the country's participation at the six-day fair was "quite successful".

Among Tanzanian firms which took part were the Cashewnut Authority of Tanzania (CAT), the General Agricultural Products Export Corporation (GAPEX), the Tanzania Instant Coffee Company (BUKOP) and the Tobacco Authority of Tanzania (TAT).

The corporations exhibited an extensive range of agricultural products including coffee, cocoa, cardamom, cloves, coconut products, cotton seeds, cereals, tea, instant coffee, fresh and canned fruits, wine, vegetable oils as well as corned beef, meat extracts and other meat products.

BET received several export inquiries and Ndugu Ndossi said he was optimistic about follow-up business. Coffee, tea, cashewnut, cardamom, fruit juice, fresh fruits and cereals did particularly well, he said.

The FRG is a good market for Tanzania's food exports and the prospects are good for further expanding the sales.

It is understood that Tanzania's coffee, tea, cardamom and cashewnut are in good demand in Germany and Tanzania is making efforts to diversify exports to the FRG.

This year's "Anuga" has been described as the largest in its 60-year history in terms of the range of food and drinks on show and the area covered by exhibitors.

As many as 4,436 firms from some 80 countries displayed their products over an area of 205,000 square metres and attracted a record number of 140,000 world visitors.

GOVERNMENT ASKED TO GIVE MORE SUPPORT TO NAFCO

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 9 Nov 81 p 3

[Text]

THE government has been called upon to give more support to the National Agricultural and Food Corporation (NAFCO) to enable the corporation to successfully implement its food production programme.

The call was made in Tanga over the weekend by the Tanga Regional Party Chairman, Ndugu Daudi Semkiwa when closing the seven-day NAFCO managers conference at Mkonge Hotel.

Ndugu Semkiwa said despite NAFCO's performance in the production of food crops, it still needed government help to be able to produce enough food for the country.

He said if given the necessary assistance, NAFCO could greatly help to overcome the food deficit now experienced by the country.

The Party leader commended NAFCO for its good job and urged it to double its efforts to rid the country of food shortfalls.

He stressed the importance of better implementation of programmes by utilising the available resources and that NAFCO should always act as a catalyst to villages around its farms.

He also undelined the importance of irrigation farming in the produciton of food crops.

Speaking at the end of the conference, the NAFCO Manager, Ndugu A. Kaduri said participants to the conference had resolved to double their efforts in producing more food for the nations.

NAFCO last week announced plans to start three more large-scale farms and to expand its existing farms in a bid to increase food crop production.

Two of the three farms — Gawa in Arusha Region which will undertake wheat production and the Dakawa rice farm in Morogoro Region — are to start production this year.

The third farm will be started next year at Namtumbo in Ruvuma Region to undertake maize production.

The corporation also has plans to explore more areas in the country suitable for large-scale food crop irrigation farming.

NAFCO has also reported a steady increase in wheat and rice output over the past five years.

For example, between 1976 and this year, wheat production in NAFCO farms rose at an average rate of 2,963 tonnes or 16.6 per cent.

The Minister for Agriculture, Ndugu Joseph Mungai, on behalf of the government has hailed NAFCO for its exemplary successes, and has called for careful planning and control of its programmes so as to achieve further successes.

MINISTER HAILS NAFCO FOR FOOD PRODUCTION

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 5 Nov 81 p 3

[Article by Seth Kamuhanda]

[Text]

THE Minister for Agriculture, Ndugu Joseph Mungai, has commended the National Agricultural Food Corporation (NAFCO) for its performance in the production of food and has urged it, together with other farmers, to produce even more this season.

In a written speech to the ongoing NAFCO's managers conference, distributed to conference participants in Tanga, Ndugu Mungai said his ministry was quite impressed by NAFCO's production of cereal crops, particularly wheat and rice whose production has shown an upward trend during the past five years.

The minister paid special tribute to farm managers and workers of NAFCO farms for their good job.

He also urged the corporation and farmers in the country to grow more food this season to save the nation from food deficit.

Ndugu Mungai reiterated the call for every farmer to attain production targets by growing the right crops in their areas and following the necessary cultural practices as recommended by field agricultural staff.

"My ministry strongly believes that since every farmer grew the appropriate crops in appropriate areas, much more food would be produced", the minister noted.

He pointed out that the call for increased production of food crops should be taken seriously by all the farmers to set the country free from food crisis.

Referring to NAFCO in particular, Ndugu Mungai stressed the importance of careful planning and control of its programmes as the best way of achieving further success.

He said careful planning and control programmes would enable the corporation to reduce production costs while maximising on available output.

NAFCO LAUNCHES MAJOR FOOD PRODUCTION STRATEGY

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 6 Nov 81 p 1

[Article by Seth Kamuhanda]

[Text]

THE National Agricultural and Food Corporation (NAFCO) has launched a major food production strategy under the Five-Year Development Plan aimed at making the nation self sufficient in major food.

The NAFCO General Manager, Ndugu A.S. Kaduri, said here yesterday that under the strategy, it was envisaged that paddy production would increase from 27,000 tons in 1981/82 to 46,000 tons by 1985/86 or an annual growth rate of 14.3 per cent.

Wheat production, the annual growth rate of which is expected to reach 17 per cent during the next five years, would increase from 31,200 tons this season to 58,200 tons in 1985/86.

A considerable increase is, however, expected in maize production, which is to rise from 4,780 tons in 1981/82 to 26,350 tons by 1985/86 or an annual growth rate of over 54 per cent over the same period.

The General Manager said that althouth NAFCO production strategy was concentrated mainly in the three main food crops, plans to invest in soya bean production were underway. A 2,000 hectare farm is to be started at Kasulu in Kigoma region while the Nachingwea farm will be expanded, he added.

He explained that NAFCO is conducting appraisals of all its ailing farms with a view to phasing them out.

Ndugu Kaduri said under the five year strategy, three new projects would be started. These are Dakawa (2,000 hectares) whose implementation is to be ready by next year, Madibira (5,000 hectares) and Kapunga farm (2,700 hectares). Studies from Madibira have already been completed and the detailed design of the farm is to begin in six months' time, he explained.

On wheat production the General Manager said over the period NAFCO would implement five new wheat projects. During the period 12,000 new hectares would be put under wheat production at Basotu.

The Gawal and Loliondo farms each with 4,000 hectares of wheat would also be implemented. The Gawal farm is currently under implementation while pre-investment studies for Loliondo are to start in the near future, he noted.

The Manager added that three maize projects would be undertaken at Ndolela 2,000) Namutumbo (3,200) and Chita (2,000) hectares repsectively. Studies for Ndolela farm would be undertaken soon while Chita preliminary studies have already been done, he said.

Ndugu Kaduri said development investments for new rice projects during the period would amount to 92[illegible]m/- at 1980 prices and replacement investments for new and existing projects are expected to reach 56m/-.

Investment for new wheat development projects during the whole plan would be allowed 308m/- and replacement investments for both new and existing was estimated at the tune of 142 million shillings, he said.

Development investment for existing maize farms would amount to 34m/- and 195.5m/- for new projects, while some 35m/- would be required in form of replacement investments for maize projects, he added.

WFP TO PROVIDE FOOD RATIONS AT SUBSIDIZED PRICES TO TSA WORKERS

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 6 Nov 81 p 1

[Text]

THE World Food Programme has approved a 77,490,000/- assistance to Tanzania for the rehabilitation of the country's sisal estates. Part of the fund would also be used to improve workers' nutritional level as part of the Tanzania Sisal Authority's measures to provide incentives to sisal cutters.

WFP would provide food rations to be sold at subsidized prices to workers on TSA estates for a period of three years. The funds thus realized will be used to finance the construction of new housing units on selected estates.

The housing improvement programme proposed by TSA envisages the renovation and construction of units on all 33 productive estates. Of the total of 7,300 existing houses, TSA estimates indicate that over 4,000 units are beyond repair and in need of rebuilding. About 1,900 units are to be renovated.

A total of 600 houses would be built at Ngombezi, Morogoro and Kimamba sisal estates. The houses have been designed by the Ardhi Institute.

The programme was discussed during the visit of a WFP mission to Tanzania in September last year after two FAO-sponsored survey missions — in 1977 and in 1978 — had identified housing as one of the areas for investment in the rehabilitation of the sisal industry. A technical appraisal of TSA's housing improvement programme was carried out by the UN Centre for Human Settlements and Ardhi Institute.

The production and export of sisal continues to be of great importance to Tanzania. Up to the late sixties, the country was the world's largest producer and exporter of sisal, enjoying 40 per cent of the international market.

WORKSHOP TO DISCUSS REGIONAL PERSPECTIVES IN FOOD STRATEGY

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 10 Nov 81 p 3

[Text]

TECHNICAL experts from various ministries and regions on the mainland yesterday began a three-day workshop in Arusha to discuss regional perspectives in the proposed national food strategy, Shihata has reported.

The strategy, adopted last year by the Government, is intended to achieve a higher priority for inter-relating increased food production, improved food consumption and distribution and reducing malnutrition.

The strategy preparation, however, began in February this year. According to an official of the Ministry of Agriculture, several technical papers covering the necessary fields within the food sector were ready.

The Arusha workshop will involve all the regions in the country in discussing the important aspect of food production and consumption.

During the workshop, there will be technical exchange of views between the relevant ministries, institutions and experts assisting in drawing up the national food strategy.

The exchange involves presentation of regional reports outlining plans and problems related to food production, marketing and storage as well as regional potentialities.

The importance of a food strategy as a basis for defining the food sector within national development goals was initiated by the Food and Agriculture Organisation conference held here in 1979.

On a request from the Tanzania government, FAO and the Danish International Development Agency (DANIDA) agreed to provide technical and financial assistance respectively towards preparation of the national food strategy.

The workshop will conclude with a programme summary will be drawn up encompassing various issues which included farm inputs, adaptation technology, research and extension services, land use planning, storage, rural infrastructure and producer incentives.

TANSEED APPEALS TO REGIONS TO PLACE SEED ORDERS

Dar es Salaam SUNDAY NEWS in English 8 Nov 81 p 1

[Text]

THE Arusha-based Tanzania Seed Company (TANSEED) has appealed to regions to place their orders for seeds before the forthcoming farming season which starts later this month.

TANSEED General Manager Bakari Lusewa told Shihata in Tanga yesterday that although the farming season was already around the corner, some regions had not yet placed their orders or had ordered only a small amount of their requirements.

He pointed out for example that Iringa, Mbeya and Rukwa regions had together ordered only 200 tonnes of hybrid maize seeds up to September this year compared to 1,000 tonnes ordered by the three regions during the same period last year.

The General Manager urged regions not to wait until the start of the rain season because by then, it would be difficult to transport the seeds to peasants as some roads would be impassable.

Ndugu Lusewa said prompt orders will enable the company work out plans of how to transport the seeds from Arusha to the rest of the country.

On seed production he explained that the company will produce 500 tonnes of different seeds compared to 5,800 tonnes produced last year. Fifty per cent of this year's production would be hybrid maize, he added.

He said the demand for sorghum seeds this season had doubled from some 1,000 tonnes distributed last season to 2,000 tonnes.

The general manager attributed the increased demand to the government's call to peasants to grow drought-resistant crops in semi-arid areas.

On seed distribution plans, Ndugu Lusewa explained that TANSEED had this season increased the number of outlets for its seeds in the regions from eight to 25 to allow peasants have easy access to the seeds.

He said the company had opened retail shops at Arusha, Moshi, Iringa, Mbeya and Njombe where peasants would easily buy their seeds. In addition, two transit depots had been established at Songea and Sumbawanga, he added.

Apart from the retail shops, TANSEED had also opened store kits at Mafinga, Rombo, Sumbawanga, Hai, Same and Babati.

ZANZIBAR AIDING FISH PROJECT

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 10 Nov 81 p 1

[Article by Erastus Damas]

THE Zanzibar government has pledged to offer financial assistance for further marine research aimed at exploiting sea wealth.

Speaking before inaugurating the squaculture project, undertaken by marime scientists from the University of Dar es Salaam, the Zanzibar Minister for Natural Resources and Tourism, Ndugu Simai Mmanga, said the government was looking for funds to assist such projects.

"We can not embark on projects which need foreign exchange to purchase sophisticated equipment but we can have simple projects like these which even our people can undertake by using cheap materials.

As for Zanzibar, he said time had come to diversify its economy which largely depended on cloves by developing its potential fish industry.

Earlier the project leader who is also the Director of the Institute of Marine Sciences, Doctor Philip Bwathondi, said looking at Zanzibar apart from cloves the bulk of Isles economy hingers on fish production and hence the need to intensify marine research.

He said the intention of the project by the International Foundation for Sciences (IFS) is to demonstrate to the nation the feasibility of marine fish culture in Tanzania and later on devise means of introducing the practice to the peasants.

He said the people can establish fishing projects on co-operative basis using the methods recommended by the experts in the project.

The fish harvested yesterday which amounted to 1,000, were planted in cages last April and by yesterday had grown from 3.5cm to over 20 cm total length which is standard market size

The new prices are pan territorial except for soft drinks and cement. The prices of soft drinks would depend on the location of the bottling plants and those of cement have been fixed up to regional headquarters level.

An NPC statement attributed the price increases to the rise in the cost of industrial raw materials, high import costs of consumer goods and the rise in the costs of petroleum which is both used for industrial and transport purposes.

The statement further explained that the prices had been raised due to low capacity utilisation in industries caused by shortage of foreign exchange with which to acquire inputs.

NYERERE ASKS TRADING BODIES TO BUY COOPERATIVE PRODUCED GOODS

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 5 Nov 81 p 1

[Article by Mkumbwa Ally]

[Excerpt]

PRESIDENT Nyerere yesterday directed public trading institutions to buy commodities produced by co-operative ventures to alleviate the marketing problems facing the ventures.

Inaugurating the Tanzania Mechanical Engineering Co-operative Society (TAMECO) at Keko in Dar es Salaam, Mwalimu said productive co-operative groups would not thrive without reliable outlets for their products.

There are standing directives that public trading organisations should give preference to co-operative ventures, but these were not followed because some institutions favoured private enterprises offering "ten per cent" (commission), Mwalimu noted.

This, he said, contributed to the failure of many co-operative ventures. "The reluctance of trading organisations to market their products helps to kill them," he explained.

The President commended the Household Supplies Company (HOSCO) which, he was told, accepted to be the sole distributors of knives produced by TAMECO. "Other institutions should follow this example", he said.

Mwalimu said co-operative ventures were important because they were very few in the country as many had collapsed because of financial problems and maladministration.

He urged TAMECO members to identify with other co-operative societies in Dar es Salaam and exert common pressure on the Party and Government for more assistance. The ventures should also establish mutual operational relations betwen them, he added.

TAMECO was formed in 1972. It runs four cereal dehusking and milling machines and a five million/-knife-making factory built with financial assistance from a Dutch development aid organisation — HIVOS.

HIVOS also trained three Tanzanians in Holland and Britain. The factory has the capacity to produce 500,000 knives per year.

The inauguration ceremony was also attended by representatives from HIVOS in the Netherlands and the Dutch Ambassador to Tanzania, Van Willigen.

Mwalimu commended the Dutch aid and hoped that the organisation would assist more co-operative societies in the country.

He said the co-operation between TAMECO and HIVOS was a manifestation of the Dutch organisation's realisation of the development problems facing Tanzania.

TACOSHILI ASKS TRADING COMPANIES TO USE LAKE CARGO SERVICES

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 5 Nov 81 p 3

[Text]

THE Tanzania Coastal Shipping Line (TACOSHILI) has appealed to Iringa, Mbeya and Ruvuma Regional Trading Companies and other distribution organs in the three regions to effectively utilise the newly-introduced cargo ship services on Lake Nyasa between Itungi and Mbamba Bay ports.

In an interview with Shihata on Tuesday the TACOSHILI Acting General Manager, Ndugu M.S. Karani, noted that the villages between Itungi and Mbamba Bay, could only be saved from the acute shortage of essential commodities by a faster distribution system.

Ndugu Karani said the mv Songea which has been lying idle at the Itungi port since 1975 will soon start plying between Itungi, Manda, Liuli and Mbambabay.

After failing to reach Lake Nyasa shore villages by road, Iringa and Ruvuma RTCs have in the past handed goods to the Mbeya Regional Trading Company, robbing the Lake Nyasa villages of the quotas they deserved.

Ndugu Karani added that apart from improving transportation and delivery of essential commodities, crops and farm inputs, transportation costs would also be lowered.

Mv Songea, bought six years ago from Yugoslavia has since then not been able to operate because of a sandbar at the mouth of Itungi port.

According to Ndugu Karani, the sandbar has now been removed with the help of technicians from the Tanzania Harbours Authority.

PARTY OFFICIALS SEEK TO IMPROVE LAKE ZONE FUEL DISTRIBUTION

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 6 Nov 81 p 3

[Article by Nestas Kageuka]

[Text]

REGIONAL Party Secretaries from Mwanza, Musoma, Shinyanga and Kagera regions ended their two-day meeting here yesterday with a call to the government to consider increasing the daily supply of fuel to the Lake zone.

They agreed after discussing best ways of distributing fuel to the regions, that in order to ensure adequate supply of fuel to the lake zone, tank wagons for fuel transportation should be increased to 85 daily instead of 11.

They also urged the government to help the Tanzania Railways Corporation (TRC) maintain and repair broken down wagons to increase the corporation's capacity for fuel transportation.

Of the 403 tank wagons of the corporation, 305 were out of service.

The Regional Party Secretaries also said the "block-train" system introduced last week to boost fuel stocks in the four regions should be continued until such time when the fuel position in the zone was satisfactory.

They said that oil companies, the TRC, the Customs Department and the Tanzania Petroleum Development Corporation (TPDC) should be responsible for fast loading, transportation and off-loading the rail tanks to facilitate faster turn around of the wagons. The TPDC should also service its depot at Musoma and build another one at Shinyanga to stock enough fuel.

The leaders also requested the TRC to ferry its fuel supplies from Dar es Salaam to the neighbouring towns by road, leaving the tank wagons for transportation to distant places.

They also said that TPDC should give clear and proper fuel allocations to the four regions to avoid allegations that one region was using part of another region's stock.

In a move to avoid unfair fuel distribution, the leaders suggested that the TPDC representative in Mwanza should have powers to control its distribution in the zone.

They also said that major fuel consumers like factories and BIT industries should buy their own tankers to facilitate quick delivery. They further suggested that tenders for fuel transportation from the oil companies should be offered to all transporters in the four regions and not restricted to Mwanza only.

The Regional Party Secretaries also said the Ministry of Communications and Transport should review the present road fuel transportation charges.

The leaders who met here included the Mwanza Regional Party Secretary, Ndugu Daniel Machemba, the Mara Regional Party Secretary, Ndugu Stephen Wassira, and the Shinyanga Regional Party Secretary, Ndugu Gwasa Sebabili.

The Kagera Regional Party Secretary, Ndugu Nas Kaisi, did not attend but was represented by the Regional Development Director, Ndugu Edward Oluoch.

SISAL GROWERS CALL FOR TSGA'S REVIVAL

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 9 Nov 81 p 1

[Text]

SISAL growers have called for the revival of the Tanzania Sisal Growers Association (TSGA) to enable them formulate a collective strategy of rehabilitating the country's ailing sisal industry, Shihata reported yesterday.

Leaders and workers of sisal estates said during their week-long workshop, which ended in Tanga over the week-end, that the revival of the association would help sisal growers, both private and public formulate a uniform incentive scheme for workers.

This comes in the wake of last week's decision by the management of the Tanga-based Amboni Estates Ltd to launch an ambitious incentive-giving programme including monthly salary increase, generous gifts and prizes to its sisal cutters.

Other resolutions adopted by the workshop include a request to the Party and government to formulate a national guideline on better ways of employing workers in sisal estates.

Such ways, the participants said, should include a system whereby governments of villages near sisal estates should provide permanent labour to the estates.

The workshop which discussed the role of the Tanzania Sisal Authority (TSA), called on the TSA to assist its group companies in securing raw materials and other working equipment and facilities.

Participants charged that the TSA should stop the present practice of lending tractors and other equipment to her group companies. Instead, they said, the TSA should provide the equipment as services which she is entitled to provide.

The workshop also called on the government to assist the TSA group companies with huge capital investment to help them in their efforts to rehabilitate the sisal industry.

Last week the World Food Programme approved a 77,490,000/- assistance to TSA as part of efforts to rehabilitate Tanzania's sisal industry.

Part of the fund will also be used to improve workers' nutritional level and motivate them to raise productivity in the country's sisal estates.

Under the programme, workers on TSA's estates will be provided with food rations at subsidized prices. The fund will also finance construction of new housing units.

Tanzania's sisal industry, once among the country's leading foreign exchange earners, is facing a series of problems including shortage of sisal cutters partly due to deteriorating living conditions in sisal estates.

REOPENING OF BORDER MARKET--Dar-es-Salaam, October 27--The once famous market place of Mutukula on the Tanzanian-Ugandan border west of Lake Victoria, closed during the 1978 war against the forces of former Ugandan dictator Idi Amin, is functioning again, it was reported here. Mutukula is on the Tanzanian side of the border and was of great use to Ugandans who had no comparable facilities in the same region. It became a ghost town after Amin forces over-ran it and the residents fled. Reports reaching here said the re-opening ceremony was attended by hundreds of local residents who heard Ugandan and Tanzanian leaders appeal for support for Ugandan President Milton Obote by exposing smugglers and profit-mongers. (Smuggling over the border is rampant because of shortages of consumer goods in Uganda). Meanwhile, Tanzanian Home Affairs Minister Brigadier Muhiddin Kimario has urged the Armed Forces to join the fight against across-border crime and smuggling over the Kenya-Tanzania frontier. Arrested was Hermus Phillipus Steyn, who has run a hunting service and seed farming company in Northern Tanzania for 10 years. Mr Kilmario warned that stern action would be taken against anyone indulging in "economic sabotage". In July, Tanzanian police said they were investigating a case involving the smuggling of more than seven million shillings (one million dollars) in Tanzanian currency to neighbouring Kenya. At this time, Mr Steyn allegedly offered a bribe to a Kenyan policeman in attempts to have legal proceedings concerning currency smuggling to Kenya dropped. Shihata said that Mr Steyn, owner of the Rift Valley Seed Company, had a fleet of seven light aircraft and a private airstrip on his farm. REASONS FOR SENDING TROOPS TO CHAD INDICATED

AB131857 Kinshasa Domestic Service in French 1800 GMT 13 Nov 81

[Excerpt] The members of the Executive Council met this morning at Mont Ngaliema. It was the founding chairman himself who chaired the meeting. Here is a report on the meeting by citizen Elebe ma Ekonzo, state commissioner for information and government spokesman.

The founding chairman and president of the republic, who returned from Gbadolite yesterday after the conference of heads of state of Africa and France, convened the Executive Council this morning at Mont Ngaliema. It is evident that the head of state informed his associates on that meeting.

The state commissioner of foreign affairs and cooperation, who continued the report on the conference, developed for his colleagues the various aspects of the Paris conference. He stressed the important role played by the Zairian delegation and referred to the diplomatic success that our action incontestably scored in the Paris capital.

In fact, Zaire, the second Francophone country in the world, played an important role during the conference whose next session will be held in Kinshasa in 1982. Until then, while preoccupying ourselves with the problem of economic revival in the country, Zaire observes with interest the evolution of the new situation that her initiative has created in Chad.

In fact, one of the recommendations made by the founding chairman, that of stabilizing peace in Chad by the sending of a security force comprising troops from member African states was accepted unanimously. And although we lost a week because of certain diplomatic misunderstandings, 700 Zairian paratroopers will be sent to Ndjamena, the capital of Chad, by air on the morning of Sunday, 15 November.

While waiting for the decisions to be made by the OAU, all the costs involved in this operation--transportation of troops, welfare of the men, etc.--will be the total responsibility of the Republic of Zaire for 1 month. Evidently one would say that these expenses will eat into the state budget. In reply I will say that Zaire has a calling and a mission to accomplish in the heart of this continent. I will also say that as she cannot avoid the duties imposed on her by superior interests, Zaire must make sacrifices. This action constitutes such a sacrifice. Zaire will accept it in the name of honor and greatness.

KAUNDA URGES ZAMBIAN-MALAWIAN 'PEOPLES' RELATIONSHIP'

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 30 Oct 81 p 7

[Excerpt]

PRESIDENT Kaunda yesterday called for the establishment of "a peoples' relationship" between Zambia and Malawi.

He said such a relationship should be started at local government level.

The President said this at State House when a six-man civic delegation from Blantyre paid a courtesy call on him.

The delegation came for the 17th Independence anniversary celebrations at the invitation of the Ndola district council with which Blantyre is twinned.

He said Zambia and Malawi enjoyed close relations but these must now move beyond geographical and cultural considerations and become people-based.

He praised Ndola and Blantyre for working out technical exchange programmes for the benefit of the people.

He urged the two cities to explore new fields of cooperation so that more people could benefit from the twinning.

This was the only way African unity could become meaningful.

Dr Kaunda told the civic leaders that he owed the people of Malawi a visit as he had not been able to reciprocate one to Zambia by that country's president two years ago because of pressure of work.

He asked Blantrye mayor Mr Victor Likaku who led the civic delegation to inform President Kamuzu Banda that he would pay a state visit there soon.

In reply, Mr Likaku told the President that the twinning of Ndola and Blantyre could not have come about without political blessings from the leaders of Zambia and Malawi.

The achievements made in relations between the two nations were as a result of foresight by the two leaders.

During his delegation's tour of the country he had been impressed by the success recorded by farmers in the Southern Province.

'MAJOR DIPLOMATIC ROW' ERUPTS WITH NORWAY

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 3 Nov 81 p 1

[Text]

A MAJOR diplomatic row has erupted between Zambia and Norway over differences in figures of the money Norway contributed towards the bridges reconstruction fund.

According to the figures released by Finance Minister Mr Kebby Musokotwane, Norway donated K548,000 towards the fund.

However, Norway had disputed this saying they donated over K1.5 million and that the money was made in two instalments.

Norwegian Agency for International Development (NORAD) assistant resident in Zambia, Mr Leif Sauvik, said in Lusaka yesterday that the embassy had receipts issued by the Ministry of Finance to prove that they donated 10 million kroner which is equivalent to K1.5 million in two instalments.

The first instalment of 6.5 million kroner about K1 million was in December 1979 and a second of 3.5 million kroner about K547,000 in February last year.

"We have all the receipts, figures and all the information in our files. I was in the country at the time the donations were made and I know this is true," Mr Sauvik said.

The Government set up the bridges reconstruction fund in 1979 following the blowing up of several bridges and other economic installations by former rebel Rhodesian commandos.

The Government also asked for international help while locally, individuals and organisations were asked to donate generously to the fund.

People in the public sector from the rank of executive officer contributed five per cent of their monthly salary to the fund while leaders donated 10 per cent of their salaries.

In December 1979, a four-member UN Security Council Ad hoc committee led by Mr Per Aasen arrived in the country to assess the country's economic needs following the damage to its economic installations.

The committee reported before departure that Zambia needed K40 million to repair her vital economic installations and K18m specifically for bridges.

And early last year, Zambia's permanent representative at the United Nations, Mr Paul Lusaka, told a Press conference at the International Airport on arrival from New York that some UN member states had pledged to contribute K13m of the K18m needed to repair the bridges.

Mr Musokotwane however, said a total of K6.8 million was donated.

He denied that Zambia had received any money from the UN towards the fund in view of the numerous pledges made by some member states to donate generously.

He said: "I am aware of the pledges made by some member states at the UN but I am not aware of any money received from there."

He said he was only aware of the the five countries which donated towards the fund directly to the Government and not those which made pledges at the UN.

Giving a break down of the countries which donated towards the fund, Mr Musokotwane said the Netherlands donated K2 million, Norway K548,000, Denmark K685,000, Kuwait K193,000 and Austria K214,000.

The Minister said K2.5 million was collected from the public sector including parastatal organisations through the five per cent salary donations.

A substantial amount was also collected from individual and organisations which donated to the fund in all the provinces.

Top on the list was Copperbelt Province where K614,000 was collected followed by Lusaka and Southern Provinve with K101,000 each.

Others were Central Province K89,000, Northern K15,000, Luapula K13,000, Eastern K12,000, North Western K4,000 and Western Province K1,753.

The minister said the K2 million donated by the Netherlands was not sent directly to the Ministry of Finance but was being administered by their embassy.

First Secretary at the Netherlands embassy, Mr Fred Roos confirmed that the K2 million donated by his country had been spent on work carried out to repair Zambia's economic installation damaged by the former rebel commandos.

Mr Roos said the money was paid out through receipts from the Ministry of Works and Supply for any work carried out for the Government.

NATION MAINTAINS FAVORABLE TRADE BALANCE WITH YUGOSLAVIA

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 30 Oct 81 p 3

[Text] The balance of trade between Zambia and Yugoslavia now stands at K37 million in favour of Zambia.

Interexport Company managing director, Mr Mihajlo Popovic said in Lusaka yesterday that Zambia's exports to Yugoslavia at the moment amounted to K37m while imports from that country stood at only K17m.

"This is why we would like Zambia to get more goods from Yugoslavia so that we can narrow this wide gap", Mr Popovic said.

He said his country at the moment bought copper, lead and zinc from Zambia while Zambia imported mining equipment such as abrasives, sand paper, fire extinguishers and electrical appliances.

Mr Popovic said Zambia's imports from Yugoslavia in the manufacturing field had dropped drastically from K1.2 million in 1964 to only K400,000 at the moment.

He attributed this to the world wide economic slump which had also hit Zambia and the trade reorganisation by his company.

"We are now only dealing in goods and items which are of essential nature to Zambia such as the mining equipment", he said.

He said his company, which was an international trading concern, was able to assist Zambia in scouting for the export market.

"There are many countries interested in buying items from Zambia such as coffee, tobacco, sugar and cotton but the problem is that it is difficult to get quotations and other relevant information on these items here.

"Those who want to buy these items could like to know the quality and contents of these items but you cannot get this information", he said.

Mr Popovic suggested that Zambia should set up an export organisation which should act as a pool for all export items from Zambia.

He said in this way, it would be easy for anyone in need of information about goods available for export and where to get them.

He urged Zambians to go full blast in the agricultural industry in order to step up food production as this was the only way to challenge rich nations.

Since there was no way a developing country could hope to challenge developed countries in the field of industry, it was only advisable that developing countries produced more food to sell to rich countries.

Mr Popovic, however, complained bitterly about lack of foreign exchange saying that his company had been badly hit by the problem as some payments had been outstanding since 1979.

ARMY TO RECRUIT ONLY PAID-UP UNIP MEMBERS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 7 Nov 81 p 1

[Excerpt]

THE Zambia Army has changed its style of recruiting from ordinary members of the public to only paid-up UNIP members.

The revolutionary measures were announced in Kabwe yesterday by Zambia Army Commander Lieutenant-General Malimba Masheke during the passing-out parade.

Gen Masheke said the decision had been made because future soldiers ought to protect Party policies as they could not do so if they did not subscribe to or be part of the policies.

"I would like to state the obvious and only logical conclusion that with immediate effect, the army will not recruit anybody who is not proved to be a member of UNIP.

"In our one party participatory democracy, the defence force is entirely an instrument of the Party and its Government for defending the philosophy of the Party, its policies and socialist values. Whoever joins it commits himself to this principle."

Gen Masheke told Dr Kaunda who was accompanied by Secretary of State for Defence and Security Zulu; Defence Minister and Minister of State, Mr Wilson Chakulya and Mr Ottema Musuka respectively, Youth and Sport Minister General Kingsley Chinkuli, provincial Member of the Central Committee Mr Pius Kasutu and senior defence chiefs, that he would not allow any uniformed officer in the army to form an opposition from within "to tarnish our profession."

Coup

In what was seen as his toughest speech, Gen Masheke warned that "immediately we notice this, we shall send him out faster than he came in."

The commander assured President Kaunda that the Zambia Army, Zambia Air Force and Zambia National Service would continue with their defensive posture against the enemy.

He dissociated the three forces from the "uncalled for behaviour of a few indisciplined elements who were involved in the last year's attempted coup d'etat and the recent rescue attempt."

Officers who were involved in these incidents only wanted to tarnish the image and good name of Zambian security forces.

ZNS ASKS GOVERNMENT TO CURB DESERTIONS FROM CAMPS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 3 Nov 81 p 1

[Excerpt]

THE Zambia National Service has made recommendations to the Government to curb desertions from its camps and rural reconstruction centres, ZNS Commandant Brigadier-General Tom Fara said yesterday.

He could not reveal what the measures were but said they were necessary because the ZNS tracer-system had failed to "run down" deserters.

General Fara was reacting to revelations by Minister of State for Youth and Sport Miss Zeniah Ndhlovu that all but 3,000 recruits in 50 ZNS camps and rural reconstruction centres had deserted.

She was addressing the Eastern Province Party conference in Katete at the weekend.

Gen Fara said the ZNS had compiled a report on desertions and was awaiting directives from the Government which was studying it.

He agreed with Miss Ndhlovu that desertions in ZNS camps and rural reconstruction centres were rampant but the figures fluctuated all the time.

The tracer-system, he said, had failed because when a deserter was apprehended he ran away again as no one had been prosecuted as stipulated by law.

"It is an infringement of the law to desert and the culprits must be prosecuted."

Gen Fara could not give figures of deserters since most of his officers in various camps were away preparing for this year's agricultural season.

He said the ZNS had not made improvements to girls' camps which had been condemned because it had no funds.

Despite this, all girls eligible for national service this year had been enlisted and the ZNS sought Government guidance over the matter.

CHILUBA ON DETENTION

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 2 Nov 81 p 1

[Text]

ZAMBIA Congress of Trade Unions chairman Mr Frederick Chiluba said in Ndola yesterday that he had learnt much during the three months detention.

Mr Chiluba, who was released on October 28, after a successful habeas corpus application which was heard by Ndola High Court judge Mr Justice Mannival Moodley said "I still feel bound to my other colleagues who are in detention."

Asked if he was bitter with the Government, Mr Chiluba whom a Times reporter found preparing to go to church with his family read verses from Psalm 23 which say: The Lord is my shepherd. I lack nothing in meadows of green grass. To the waters of repose He leads me. He guides me by paths of virtue for the sake of His name.

Mr Chiluba said he could not say much on what had transpired until the other detained labour leaders Mr Newstead Zimba, the ZCTU general secretary, Mr Chitalu Sampa the assistant general secretary and the Mineworkers Union of Zambia deputy chairman Mr Timothy Walamba are released.

Mr Chiluba, who visited the trio at Kamfinsa prison on Saturday where they are being held, said, he could not say anything in the absence of his colleagues.

Mr Chiluba, Mr Zimba, Mr Sampa and Mr Walamba were detained on July 27 for allegedly plotting to overthrow the Government.

Judgment in Mr Zimba's application for a habeas corpus will be delivered on November 9, while that of Mr Sampa and Mr Walamba will be on November 13.

ZAMBIAN CHILDREN ABDUCTED BY ZAIRIANS REPORTEDLY 'TORTURED'

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 3 Nov 81 p 5

[Text]

TWO Zambian children abducted by Zaireans in Mufulira on October 24 were tortured, ill-fed and humiliated mentally by their captors at Mokambo border post, it was learnt yesterday.

And the brothers Crispin, ten, and Nsama Chibuta, eight, looking exhausted related a shocking story in Kitwe of their kidnap ordeal to a Times reporter.

The duo, accompanied by their mother Mrs Theresa Chifumbe Chibuta showed the healing shackle wounds inflicted on them during their captivity.

Mrs Chibuta said her two children were abducted last month after their father allegedly failed to settle K6.500 he owed Zairean businessmen.

The children were released by Zairean authorities after Zambia immigration and customs officers at Mokambo intervened.

Crispin said he and Nsama were at home in Mufulira's Chibolya township when they were approached by Zaireans who they knew as their father's business acquaintances. The men lured the children away to town when they discovered that their father was not at home.

"They said they would buy us sweets and give us money for a taxi back home. The time was about 13.00 hours."

At the main bus-stop in the second-class trading area they were put on a minibus for Mokambo.

At Mokambo, the children were led into Zaire at a point where immigration officials could not see them.

"If they did see them they thought the children belonged to the Zaireans," Mrs Chibuta said.

Mrs Chibuta learnt of her boys' abduction when she telephoned their schools to find out if their father had bought school shoes for them.

She was told by teachers at Ross Avenue Primary School where Nsama is in Grade One that her children had been "stolen" by Zaireans and were under house arrest at Mokambo.

The boys were shackled when they arrived in Mokambo and fed on cassava leaves.

The youngsters spoke of torture, hunger and humiliation at a house where they were held for more than five days before Zambian police and immigration officers secured their release.

The Zaireans told their father they had agreed to let them go on condition that he settles his debt in 30 days.

A spokesman for Mufulira police confirmed that officers had gone to Mokambo to negotiate the release of two children who were held captive by Zaireans.

The spokesman said police were accompanied by immigration officials from the Zambian side and the parents of the abducted children.

The spokesman said the children's father did not report the matter to them when he discovered the two boys were missing.

The report was made to Mokambo police two days after their kidnap by their grandfather in Kitwe.

Mufulira police were investigating the incident.

Mrs Chibuta and the two children are now living in Riverside in Kitwe with her parents.

Mrs Chibuta said she wept when she found her two sons in Mokambo ready to be "smuggled to Lubumbashi" where they would have been sold.

Zambian officials held three hours of talks with their Zairean counterparts before the children were released yesterday.

KAUNDA TAKES MEASURES TO CONTROL SMUGGLING TO ZAIRE

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 7 Nov 81 p 1

[Text]

PRESIDENT Kaunda has taken far-reaching measures aimed at controlling the smuggling of essential commodities into neighbouring Zaire.

He has ordered that with immediate effect any person having excess commodities must be arrested without warrant.

In a Statutory Instrument issued in the Government Gazette yesterday, Dr Kaunda said the penalty for offences against the control of goods (essential commodities) regulations is a maximum fine of K100,000 or imprisonment of five years or both.

The essential commodities affected and the specified amounts in brackets are: candles (one packet of six); cooking oil (2.5 litres); mealie meal (one 25 kg bag or less); paraffin (2.5 litres); bath soap (two tablets); washing soap (one packet), and sugar (two kg).

The new measures will be effective in the following districts: Kaputa, Nchelenge, Mwense, Mansa, Ndola, Mufulira, Chingola, Chililabombwe, Kitwe, Kalulushi, Solwezi, Mwinilunga, Kabompo and Zambezi.

Police, customs men, forest, immigration officers and district messengers have been given powers to arrest without warrant any person having essential commodities in excess of the specified amounts and whom they suspect to be preparing or attempting to export such essential goods.

Shortages

The measures come only three days after the meeting of the Zambia-Zaire Permanent Joint Commission in Lusaka.

They come in the wake of increasing incidences of smuggling resulting in shortages of commodities on the Copperbelt, Luapula and North-Western provinces which share borders with Zaire.

According to the Statutory Instrument, only shopkeepers and traders authorised by the minister of Commerce and Industry can sell essential consumer goods.

Special procedures affecting travellers carrying such essentials on the Pedicle Road have been outlined as follows:

● Completing a special triplicate export certificate;
● Declaring all essential commodities for inspection and;
● Retaining two copies of the export certificate duly signed and stamped by an officer of the Department of Customs and Excise.

The open general licence has been amended so that essential commodities can no longer be exported without a licence.

And in a statement yesterday, Prime Minister Mundia announced that from November 14, non-Zambians would be required to settle their hotel and lodges bills in foreign currency.

The Kwacha would only be accepted where proof was shown that the non-resident had exchanged some foreign currency into Kwacha.

To effect these measures, the Government has amended Regulations 20 (2) and 22 of the Exchange Control Regulations so that all travellers would now be subject to the same rules relating to bringing in or taking out Zambian or other currency by travellers.

The settlement of bills in advance by Zambians for visitors has been forbidden.

Residents in hotels and lodges have been given up to November 21 to settle their accounts in Kwacha.

The Prime Minister said visitors would be free to exchange the Kwacha into foreign currency provided they showed proof that they exchanged that currency into Kwacha. A special form for this purpose would be provided by the banks.

Hotels and lodges would be agents for foreign exchange transactions. "Inspectors shall be employed to check on this arrangement and special cases will require prior approval from the Bank of Zambia."

The measures were an implementation of the resolutions passed at the Livingstone symposium which were also debated in Ndola.

MBEWE ON SLANDER OF UNIONISTS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 30 Oct 81 p 4

[Excerpt]

PEOPLE in corridors of power want to give the labour movement a bad name, vice-chairman of the Civil Servants Union of Zambia Mr John Mbewe said yesterday.

He was proposing a vote of thanks to a speech delivered by President Kaunda at the official opening of the labour seminar.

"The role of the labour movement has been deliberately misunderstood by certain people in the corridors of power," Mr Mbewe said to shouts of "solidarity for ever" from the labour leaders in the hall.

He said adjectives had been used to describe the Zambia Congress of Trade Unions, (ZCTU) and its affiliated unions.

"This trend is designed to divide and weaken the labour movement and draw a wedge between it and the Party and its Government."

Amid cheers, Mr Mbewe said although labour leaders had been scandalised, there had never been a time when they were disrespectful or disloyal to the Party and its Government.

MINISTRIES DEEP IN DEBT TO GOVERNMENT STORES

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 3 Nov 81 p 5

[Excerpt]

GOVERNMENT ministries owe Government Stores about K13 million in goods and services, chief stores officer Mr Wonstone Mulenga said in Lusaka yesterday.

He said culprits were mainly Zambia Police, Zambia Army, Office of the President and the Public Works Department.

Mr Mulenga who was speaking in an interview in his office said some ministries owed Government Stores more than K4 million and appealed to departments concerned to pay back or have no services from Government Stores.

According to a circular from the Ministry of Finance dated July 18, some ministries did not honour their cheques and called on them to pay if Government Stores was to continue providing services.

Mr Mulenga said some ministries were sending untrusted people to Government Stores who ended up stealing ordered goods. He appealed to ministries and departments to send right people.

Mr Mulenga dismissed claims from certain rural areas that they were not being served by his department.

The Government Stores was for the whole nation and not for a few selected districts.

KAUNDA GIVES PRIVATE INDUSTRY TEN-YEAR DEVELOPMENT PLAN

President's Statement in Livingstone

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 6 Nov 81 p 1

[Excerpt]

PRESIDENT Kaunda has given Zimco and the whole private industrial sector a new ten-year development plan in which they should build on what has already been established to reduce the nation's dependence on imports.

He said in Livingstone yesterday that with proper planning, Zambia's industrial sector could, through diversification, be capable of producing from local raw materials a lot of goods that were at the moment being imported.

The President was speaking when he officially opened Zamtex Spinners plant which would save the country K1.2 million a year in foreign exchange. The firm is a sister company of Zambia Textiles, which is the nation's sole manufacturer of blankets.

Dr Kaunda said since 1968 when State participation in the economy started, until now, the nation had concentrated on establishing the basic industrial infrastructure.

That was why the State had entered into the private sector, to accelerate the process of establishing this industrial infrastructure.

"Now as from this year to 1990, the nation's objectives and target must be to make maximum use of this infrastructure for the diversification and restructuring of her economy," Dr Kaunda said.

There were many opportunities which presented themselves to the parastatal and private industries for this process. For instance the Zamtex plant which had just been established had been made possible by the existence of Kafue Textiles.

Many industries must now be created to service the factory at Kafue. One of these was a starch industry as there were ample raw materials for it.

The President said in the same spirit, the inauguration of the expansion at Nitrogen Chemicals of Zambia in Kafue should now be used fully to create feeder industries to service "this important infrastructure."

Equally, Kapiri Glass factory should, apart from bottles, look into the possibility of manufacturing other related products such as sheet glass, crystal and mirrors on which the company's future expansion should be based.

"I am therefore giving Zimco and all the private industrial concerns a new ten-year development plan in which they should build on what has been established to reduce the country's dependence on imports."

He appealed to industries to emulate what was happening in other developing countries where wastes were not thrown away, but utilised in one way or another.

Referring to the textile industry, the President said he would be sad to see the waste from spinning mills thrown away without any further utilisation.

"It is important that one or two mills are set up to produce yarn from the waste. Zamtex Spinners will be the first such enterprise in Zambia to use the cotton waste from Kafue Textile mills to produce blanket yarn, which in turn will be used by its holding company, Zambia Textiles, for producing blankets."

The Party and its Government encouraged the setting up of import substitution industries because such ventures used to the maximum possible extent local raw materials. By doing so, they cut down on foreign exchange spending.

In these days of scarce foreign exchange earnings everything possible should be done to avoid or limit the adverse effects on the operations of manufacturing enterprises, which reduce production.

The President said it was in this light that the Industrial Development Act provided incentives to those ventures which made maximum use of domestic raw materials and intermediate goods.

These incentives would be even more generous under the proposed revised version of the Act when it was finally amended.

President's Call 'Opportune'

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 6 Nov 81 p 1

[Editorial]

[Text]

PAINFULLY at last, pragmatic realism is winning the day in Zambia. An old English adage tells of necessity being the mother of inventions. In Zambia that would simply mean self-reliance.

That is precisely what President Kaunda laboured hard to explain in Livingstone yesterday when he called upon ZIMCO to devise a ten-year industrialisation programme based on the use of local raw materials.

The President's plea underlines the economic doldrums in which economy, and if we are not careful, our own hard won political freedom.

We are not earning as much foreign exchange now as we used to because of the recession that has hit the industrialised world. Copper prices are very low to be of any real value.

Cobalt prices too are far too low mainly because Zambia is going along too trustingly with "big-brother" Zaire instead of doing what works and behaving as the "little boy" in getting better prices for her cobalt.

But we should not just sit Zambia is presently engulfed. Unemployment is rising. Prices are spiralling. Business and industry are slowly grinding to a halt. Consequently redundancies and lay-offs are increasing.

All these economic ills stem from the agonising fact that most of our industries are largely dependent on imported raw materials, foreign machinery, and foreign expertise.

And worse still, all these are dependent on that big octopus — foreign exchange — which is gobbling up everything in its way — our there with folded arms and moan about it like helpless children. We should, instead, pluck up enough courage and determination to solve our economic problems on our own and not rely too much on foreign exchange cures.

That is what the President was driving at in his speech on the economy in Livingstone yesterday. Self-reliance is our only saviour if we are to survive.

This means that our businessmen and industrialists should henceforth be thinking of ways to set up new industries using locally produced raw materials.

That is how in fact the Rhodesians survived the dark days of UDI. They were forced by sheer necessity through the prevailing world animosity towards them to use their ingenuity in creating a lot of secondary industries for import substitution.

Zambians should be doing the same now that we are in a similar position where we just do not have the foreign exchange with which to import all our raw materials.

We should have faith in ourselves and make use of every possible raw material to generate local industrial growth which will in turn create more employment and more wealth.

The President's call is most opportune. It should seriously be taken up by the third and last Prime Minister's economic symposium to be held in Lusaka later this month.

After all, the theme of that symposium will be industrialisation.

GOVERNMENT SHOULD TAKE MEASURES TO MAKE INFORMAL SECTOR PRODUCTIVE

Lusaka SUNDAY TIMES in English 8 Nov 81 pp 1, 7

[Text]

UNEMPLOYMENT is one of the biggest scourges afflicting Zambia today. The streets are teeming with jobless Zambians with a bleak future staring in their hungry faces.

The Government is aware of this problem but is hamstrung to do anything about it because of the bad economic situation the country is in.

What makes the situation worse is that not only are there no more jobs available on the market, jobs are actually dwindling at an alarmingly fast rate — spilling into the already crowded streets more jobless people.

This is not a healthy situation for the nation. The side effects of unemployment can now be seen in the increasing crime rate, youth delinquency, broken homes and mental breakdowns as is evidenced by the increasing number of tramps on our streets.

As the economy continues to wobble in troubled waters, industries are finding it difficult to make ends meet and job creation has become a thing of the past. To stay afloat, they have to lay off hundreds of workers as their balance sheets change colour from black to red.

But what is of primary concern is the social and political upheaval the unemployment situation is likely to create. The recent riots in Britain were attributed to the increasing rate of unemployment in that country now standing at a staggering three million people.

Zambia cannot be naive to think that such things can only happen in industrialised countries. Each year, some 200,000 youths are dumped onto the streets to join the jobless as they fail to continue with their education.

Youth unemployment is adding to an already explosive situation. Discontent among the teeming masses of the unemployed is a phenomenon that cannot be ignored. There is therefore urgent need to do something about this problem.

Last week, a number of experts in the labour and related fields gathered in Lusaka to discuss one important but hitherto ignored sector of the labour market which would greatly contribute to improving the unemployment situation — the informal sector.

This two-day meeting was a result of the concern felt by the Ministry of Labour and Social Services with the serious problem of unemployment in Zambia.

The ministry felt that efforts be made to find viable practical ways of substantially increasing productive employment and income earning opportunities in the country within a tolerable period of time.

In this regard, the ministry requested the ILO Southern African Team for Employment Promotion (SATEP), which is based in Lusaka, to examine the prospects for substantially increasing employment opportunities through the development of the urban informal sector which was known to be under developed.

Representatives from Government ministries, parastatals, banks, private sector, informal sector, Unza and ILO-SATEP examined the findings of the study undertaken by SATEP on this issue. What came out of these deliberations was interesting.

The seminar came out with a clear call to the Government to formulate a policy on the informal sector which should express a positive attitude towards this sector.

This seems to indicate that at the moment there is no policy on the informal sector. This is true to some extent. But it can be argued that there does exist some kind of policy towards the informal sector. This policy indicates that for one to engage in this sector, it is criminal.

The jobless who try to be self-reliant or self-employed like the "mishanga" sellers and women vendors are a target of harassment by the police and Party militants.

These men and women, who are struggling to survive in their hand-to-mouth existence are subjected to all sorts of injustices for trying to help themselves.

With inflation stagnating economic growth, there is no hope in hell for most of these people to find employment in the formal sector.

According to statistics, growth in wage paid employment has been very slow in the last five years. In 1975, there were 393,490 persons in wage paid employment. This came down to 384,090 by the end of 1980 — representing a loss of 9,400 jobs. The labour force on the other hand increased by 279,810 from 1,479,000 to 1,758,810.

But these statistics are not very reliable as there is no comprehensive labour market statistics in Zambia. The number of the unemployed is therefore far greater than the 44,052 registered at labour offices. Most of these unemployed are below the age of 35, which means they are still in the prime of their youth.

The tragedy about this great majority of Zambia's future is that they are the hardest hit because they are the weakest candidates on the labour market. Most employers prefer to hire experienced or skilled labour and the youths lack these.

There is need for urgent measures to be taken to harness and make productive all this manpower now going to waste before it degenerates into other evils in society.

Condemning "mishanga" boys is not the answer as these youths are trying to fend for themselves. They need to be helped and this can only be done by promoting the informal sector.

The evolution of man is all based on man himself trying to improve his own lot by applying his energies and ingenuity to the solution of problems of development. They have to fight their misery and poverty to survive. This is all what those in the informal sector are striving to do.

The recommendations made by the seminar held in Lusaka therefore need not only close attention by the authorities, but immediate implementation to solve this great unemployment problem so that the majority of Zambians can positively contribute to the Gross National Product.

It is urgent that the colonial laws that restrict those who try to be in gainful employment through self-reliance such as peddlers should be done away with.

The Government can start by stopping the police from harassing these men, women and youths trying to survive in the informal sector.

The Government should encourage these self-employed persons to come together and form cooperatives to improve their own lot. This can be done by providing facilities and infrastructure where they can carry out their businesses from.

For example, basket makers in one city could be given a plot where they can put up their shelters in which they will make and sell their wares. So should those in other fields.

Tackling this problem with vigour will not only solve the unemployment problem but generate more jobs as well as contribute to the economic well being of the nation.

It would defuse the time bomb the nation is sitting on through the discontent masses who are jobless.

MUNDIA URGES PLANNERS TO DESIGN BUILDINGS USING SOLAR ENERGY

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 7 Nov 81 p 1

[Text]

PRIME Minister Mundia yesterday urged planners to design buildings that utilise solar energy to minimise dependency on oil.

He also took a swipe at public institutions which perpetually blame their shortcomings on the unfavourable economic situation.

Mr Mundia was speaking at the Evelyn Hone College in Lusaka where he officiated at the graduation of 261 students and the opening of a 250-bed solar-heated students' hostel. The hostel was constructed with a World Bank loan.

He said the country was spending more than K225 million on oil imports and it was in this light that any innovation to reduce dependence on oil must be encouraged.

"I wish to call upon our planners, architects and builders to copy this new innovetion so that in future houses built by public institutions such as the National Housing Authority and district councils use this cheap source of energy."

He called for sacrifice in resolving problems facing institutions instead of blaming the economic situation for all failures.

"For reasons I fail to understand, many public institutions including yours, Mr Principal, have blamed a number of their problems on the prevailing economic situation.

"In my view, using these problems as causes of failure is failing to understand the challenges of under-development."

What Zambia was going through was the process of development and it was only by resolving the problems that the country would develop.

He called on Zambians to exert more effort to meet the challenges before them and generate more financial resources to meet the increased demand for them.

"Lamenting about our economic situation will not resolve these problems. What is required is sacrifice, self-reliance and the scientific use of our available resources."

DECLINE IN CARGO TRAFFIC BETWEEN DAR ES SALAAM, ZAMBIA NOTED

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 30 Oct 81 p 4

[Excerpt]

CARGO traffic between Dar es Salaam and Zambia has dropped to more than 16 per cent compared to the same period last year.

The general situation remains fluid and cargo continues to be dispatched with less delays, however.

Despite clearance of port charges by the Bank of Zambia in May this year, pending payment from that period has built up considerably.

This is the overall review of the business by the Ndola and district chamber of commerce and industry, according to its newsletter published in Ndola yesterday.

From January to August this year Zambian imports via Dar by rail amounted to 147,214 tonnes compared with 158,779 tonnes to the corresponding period last year.

Imports by road amounted to 82,916 tonnes as against 115,186 tonnes last year.

"This represents an overall drop of 16 per cent in imports via this route. Exports up to the end of August this year amounted to 278,897 tonnes compared with 305,482 tonnes in 1980, a drop of more than eight per cent," the newsletter says.

Imports

Total imports via the southern route as at the end of August amounted to 222,965 tonnes, only 7,165 tonnes less than the total imports through Dar.

A large percentage of this cargo was of South African origin which proved to be cheaper with the added advantage of lower freight costs.

It adds that some importers are enjoying favourable credit terms for Far Eastern manufacturers with the majority of the carrying vessels calling at South African ports.

RAILWAY WORKERS STRIKE FOR FOURTH TIME THIS YEAR

Lusaka DAILY MAIL in English 4 Nov 81 p 1

[Text]

ABOUT 300 Mulobezi Railway workers have gone on strike for the fourth time this year demanding better conditions of service and increased salaries.

The workers downed tools on Monday this week after their demands for equal pay and equal conditions of service with Zambia Railways workers were allegedly ignored.

Southern Province Railway Workers Union of Zambia (RWUZ) regional secretary, Mr Francis Mwanachongo confirmed the strike in Livingstone yesterday.

The Mulobezi workers were excluded from salary increments awarded to unionised Zambia Railways workers recently. The Mulobezi railway line is run by Zambia Railways on behalf of the government.

Unionised ZR workers in the low grades were awarded K24 increments per month while those in the higher grades received K21.50 monthly increments. Tazara unionised members were also excluded.

Mr Mwanachongo and Livingstone RWUZ branch executive were yesterday locked up in a meeting at Livingstone Railway Station where hundreds of passengers to Mulobezi are stranded.

The strike by workers has paralysed passenger train services to Mulobezi. The route is also used by travellers to Sesheke and other parts of the Western Province.

Member of Parliament for Sesheke, Mr Yusiku Mukelabai, and Senior Chief Musokotwane have made repeated appeals to the Party and its Government to improve train services to Mulobezi.

Chief Musokotwane has also warned of a catastrophe unless the Party and its Government take urgent measures to repair the line and several bridges on the route.

He explained that the bridges were in a state of disrepair and that the line needed to be relaid to avoid serious accidents occurring on the route.

SATEP SEMINAR ON GROWTH PROSPECTS FOR URBAN INFORMAL SECTOR

Minister's Opening Speech

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 4 Nov 81 p 1

[Text]

THE Party and its Government has no definite policy on informal employment, it was learnt yesterday.

Minister of State for Labour and Social Services Mr John Chafwa said this in Lusaka yesterday when he opened a two-day seminar on the prospects for growth and employment promotion on urban informal sector.

The seminar is organised by the International Labour Organisation Southern African team for Employment Promotion (SATEP) in conjunction with the ministry.

Mr Chafwa said according to figures by the Central Statistics Office, Zambia has a labour force of 1,761,400 out of a population of six million in 1980.

"Of this labour force we know that presently 384,000 wage paid employees are employed in the formal sector, but we have left it to anybody's guess as to how many of the labour force are engaged in the informal sector of the economy."

He regretted that because of historical and structural factors development and transformation of the informal sector seemed to have been hindered and its capacity to generate employment and output not fully realised.

He hoped the seminar held at Nakatindi Hall which was studying results of SATEP's survey of the informal sector would come up with clear ideas on the size of Zambia's informal employment or unemployment which was the basis of the industrial set-up.

The industrial sector consisted of small foreign and parastatal enterprises and large ones using modern technology and applying capital intensive techniques.

There were small informal production units owned by Zambians which applied labour intensive techniques of production and among the most important activities were carpentry, tinsmithing and motor repair.

Mr Chafwa was impressed that SATEP's revival of interest in the role of the small-scale enterprises was as a result of concern for unemployment and basic needs satisfaction.

ILO expert Mr George Aryee called for the purchase of products made by self-employed people so as to increase employment.

This is contained in a paper he presented to the seminar.

Mr Aryee, an expert on the informal sector, said such a trend would increase employment.

Informal Sectors Role Must Be Examined

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 5 Nov 81 p 1

[Editorial]

[Text]

THE figures stand out starkly: Out of a country population of 5,834,000 (estimate for 1980) there are 1,761,400 economically active Zambians but only 384,000 are said to be in formal employment.

The Central Statistical Office doesn't seem to know what the 377,400 people do to earn a living or to contribute to the nation's economy.

Some of these are self-employed persons who are in the so-called informal sector, others are unemployed and are in the majority.

Given our pathetic economic climate the Party and its Government should not ignore the informal sector for without it the demand for jobs as shown by the number of redundancies and the queues at labour offices would be more frightening than now.

The position of employment opportunities in Zambia is already bad. There are statistically no new jobs being created; in fact the number of people in formal employment is dwindling.

For instance in 1975, there were 393,500 Zambians in employment out of whom 71,700 were engaged in the construction industry; but by December 1979 the total was 372,000 with the figure in construction falling to 40,100.

It must be worse by now when commercial and industrial activity is almost at a standstill. The building industry is the worst hit.

We have therefore to examine seriously the role of the informal sector and the papers being presented at the International Labour Organisation - sponsored seminar in Lusaka on the "prospects for growth and employment" in Zambia.

The Party and its Government should not rely on outside bodies to come and create jobs for us as the Minister of State for Labour and Social Services Mr John Chafwa implied in his opening remarks; it must address the subject with vigour.

The self-employed can contribute handsomely to national development and even to state coffers but do we know who they are, what they do and how much they earn? Yet they are so many.

In the urban areas are the marketeers, the curio sellers, tailors cobblers, charcoal burners, motor mechanics, carpenters, painters, second-hand goods peddlers and the money-lenders.

In the villages we have the mat and basket-makers, the blacksmiths, the fishermen, the hunters . . . the list is too long — all pursuing some form of employment.

The outstanding feature of the informal sector however is that it is mostly the elderly who enter it. It is not because there is little money in it that young Zambians don't go in. It is the attitude we have for it.

We have not given it encouragement. Our emphasis has been wrongly placed on white-collar education, training and employment.

As a result many Zambians tend to look down upon the elderly man who plies the townships with hand-made brooms on his shoulders or the elderly woman vending flower clay pots outside a shop.

It is high time therefore the Ministry of Labour and Social Services and the Central Statistical Office carried out a thorough survey which would lead to a formal policy being worked out on the informal sector.

JOINT ZAMBIAN-ZAIRIAN COMMUNIQUE ISSUED

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 4 Nov 81 p 1

[Text]

ZAMBIA and Zaire will now track down criminals who run away from either country after committing offences, leader of the Zairean delegation to the Zambia-Zaire Permanent Commission Mr Inonga Lokongo L'ome said yesterday.

He was speaking during a signing ceremony of a joint communique at the end of the three-day meeting in Lusaka which reviewed bilateral relations.

Mr Inonga said the tracking down of criminals would be made possible as a result of a legal matter on which both countries had agreed upon during the talks.

The agreement was necessitated by the need to guarantee security of the people against cross-border criminals.

"We have agreed to cooperate in legal matters to guarantee the security of our people against criminals who run away from the long arm of our laws after committing offences."

Speaking at the same function Foreign Affairs Minister Professor Lameck Goma, who signed for Zambia, said the excellent relations which exist between the heads of state of the two countries must be reflected at the grassroots level.

Dr Kaunda and President Mobutu Sese Seko were deeply committed to the promotion of healthy and close relations between people of the two countries.

"We should not let them down by lack of follow-up action on our part. The excellent relations that exist at the heads of state level must be reflected at the people's level," Prof Goma said.

In the joint communique, the two delegations said they exchanged views on border problems, security, trade, transport and telecommunications.

The commission recommended the speedy conclusion of the agreement on judicial matters, convention on social security and the financing of regional projects.

They noted that considerable progress had been made in their programmes.

On communication, they said this was essential to facilitate movement of people and goods.

On the South African and Namibian issues, the commission condemned the South African regime for its continued flagrant violation of the international opinion and legitimate aspirations of the people of Namibia.

ROP-ZIMBABWE BARTER AGREEMENT ANNOUNCED

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 4 Nov 81 p 2

[Text]

ROP (1975) Limited has entered into a barter agreement with Zimbabwe to sell cotton seed in return for cotton seed oil.

A company spokesman said yesterday that under the agreement, ROP would send 10,000 tonnes of cotton seed for three months to the United Refineries of Zimbabwe.

Oil pressed from the cotton seed will be sent to ROP while the oil seed cake will be retained as payment by the Zimbabwean company. Zambia expects about 2,500 tonnes of oil from Zimbabwe under this agreement.

The spokesman said the agreement was awaiting the Bank of Zambia approval.

This was a contingent measure pending the installation of machinery with bigger capacity to process seeds at the Ndola works of ROP, he said.

The new machinery, which will cost about K1 million will be bought out of an Indian loan granted to Zambia and is expected in the country in about eight months time.

It will greatly enhance the oil production capacity at the Ndola plant of ROP. The new equipment will be capable of processing 50 tonnes of cotton seed and soya beans a day.

The agreement with United Refinery will involve no foreign exchange. ROP will buy the seed from Lint Company of Zambia and pay for its transportation to Victoria Falls and hauling in Zimbabwe will be paid by United Refineries.

On the return journey, the Zimbabwean company will pay the cost of freight from Bulawayo to Victoria Falls and ROP will take over the cost of transporting the oil into Zambia.

IMPORTS FROM SOUTH AFRICA TO ZAMBIA 'SOARING'

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 3 Nov 81 p 2

[Text]

IMPORTS from South Africa to Zambia are soaring. Preliminary figures show that in the first seven months of 1980 we imported goods worth K79,836,000 — K15,186,000 more than in 1979.

These figures are contained in the monthly digest of statistics by the Central Statistical Office, whose latest issue, for October/December 1980, has only been published now.

The statistics, going back to 1970, when Zambia imported goods worth K59,097,000, from South Africa show that they fell to K31,476,000 in 1978 but more than doubled in 1979.

Exports from Zambia to South Africa which were K8,682,000 in 1970, reached an all-time low in 1978 when they dropped to K800,000, but quintupled in 1979 when they reached K4,171,000.

In order of import value we bought in 1979 most from Britian — goods worth K152,940,000. South Africa comes next with K64,650,000 followed by the USA — K55,357,000; West Germany, K46,032,000; Japan K24,392,000, East Africa K11,441,000.

China, with K12,283,000, is the seventh country in the list of imports in 1979; but in 1974 we imported goods worth K24,311,000 from China.

On the export side, our biggest buyer was Japan who bought goods worth K201,348,000 from us in 1979. Britain was second, with K145,395,000 and the United States were third with K111,624,000.

These countries were followed by West Germany, K100,338,000; China, K34,819,000; East African countries, K6,685,000 and South Africa.

The latest figures for the first seven months of 1980, which are preliminary, show that the import trend continues: Britain tops the list of goods we buy with K116,771,000 followed by South Africa, and the USA with K34,096,000 is third.

MINISTER DISCUSSES RISING COST OF PETROLEUM

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 2 Nov 81 p 2

[Text]

ZAMBIA's oil import bill rose from K76 million in 1977 to K225 million in 1980 said Finance Minister Mr Kebby Musokotwane.

In an interview on Radio Zambia's "face the nation programme," Mr Musokotwane said the cost of petroleum continues to rise and now makes up 22 per cent of the total import bill.

Mr Musokotwane said the rising oil costs were a danger and warned that Zambia would continue to be adversely affected by its import.

Zambia should use more of her electricity and coal to reduce reliance on petroleum. If this was not done, "we will continue to feel the pinch of escalating oil bills".

The minister explained that oil prices also hit other developing countries that spent as much as 50 per cent of their foreign exchange to pay for oil imports.

Mr Musokotwane confirmed that Zambia received the oil it was promised by Algeria but this had no effect on the oil import bills.

"While we are grateful for the oil, it is too little, it is consumed in a day."

On the economy in general, Mr Musokotwane said Zambia like other countries was experiencing hardships although there was improvement in agriculture and in the parastatal sector.

Lack of foreign exchange was still affecting companies which depended on imported raw materials. Some of them were operating below capacity.

This led to redundancies and higher prices of finished products as costs were spread over fewer goods.

The minister urged businessmen to be export-oriented instead of being mere importers. Lack of foreign exchange would not affect exporting companies.

'UNEXPLAINED DIFFERENCES' DELAY ZAIRIAN-ZAMBIAN COMMUNIQUE

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 3 Nov 81 p 1

[Text]

UNEXPLAINED differences between delegates to the Zambia-Zaire Joint Permanent Commission meeting which has been sitting for the past three days in Lusaka, led to several postponements of signing the official communique.

By late last night, both the Zairean and Zambian delegations were unable to sign the document because of certain unclarified issues which had to be ironed out.

Originally the communique was supposed to have been signed on Sunday evening. It was postponed to 12.30 hours yesterday but reporters assigned to the occasion were told to check around 15.00 hours.

This was again postponed to 18.00 hours and after waiting up to 20.15 hours last night, reporters were told it had been postponed to 09.00 hours today.

When Pressmen tried to seek an explanation from chairman of the Zambian side director for contingency planning Mr Nedson Nyoni, one of the Government lawyers interrupted and asked: "Do we really need to explain to the Press why there is a delay?"

Other officials attributed the delay to translation difficulties.

The officials said they had been sitting until 05.00 hours in the morning and were tired.

They claimed the Press had been fed with "wrong information by somebody in the system" regarding the time the communique was to be signed and promised to investigate.

They did not elaborate.

It was learnt at the Secretariat where the Zambian delegation was working from that the Zairean delegation was working from another place in town and that this might have contributed to the delay because amendments from either side took time to check.

Among the issues the commission was discussing were smuggling on the border, the continued existence of ex-Katangese gendarmes in Zambia and the harassment of Zambian travellers on the Pedicle road by Zairean security men.

When he opened the talks on Saturday, Prime Minister Mundia urged the commission to find permanent solutions to these problems.

Other issues the commission was expected to discuss included border security and debts by Zaire.

SWEDEN INCREASES 1982 FISCAL YEAR GRANTS FOR FARMING

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 4 Nov 81 p 5

[Text]

SWEDEN has given more than K14 million in grants to Zambia for the 1982 financial year under the agricultural sector support programme (ASSP), Agriculture and Water Development Minister Mr Unia Mwila said in Lusaka yesterday.

The 1982 grant is K3 million more than this year's K11.7 milliom.

Mr Mwila described Sweden as a friend indeed, as she was making the grant at a time when that country had economic problems like the devaluation of its currency, the kronor.

The grant, which is being made through the Swedish International Development Agency (SIDA), was part of the most important aspect of partnership in development aimed at redressing the imbalance between the urban and rural people.

Evolved

"We have over a period of years since Independence mutually evolved a development strategy which concentrates Swedish assistance to rural areas with the aim of alleviating the problems of the poorest — the peasant farmer."

Giving the breakdown of how the grant is to be used in rural areas, he said K3.65 million would be allocated to the integrated rural development programmes in Eastern, Northern and Luapula provinces.

Three million Kwacha would be spent on training and extension work.

The ministry is to set aside K4.7 million for the credit scheme to assist small-scale farmers, the Zambia Cooperative Federation, the Cooperative College and women's programmes.

The agricultural research and seed programme is to receive K1.65 million, part of which would be used to establish an institute which would certify the quality of seeds produced by the Zambia Seed Company.

Cover

Other fields the grant would cover include the Survey Department which will receive K1.19 million and the Price and Incomes Commission K300,000.

Since allocations were directed towards the rural people, Sweden had made a noble gesture as this was an area where efforts must not only be heard, but also seen to be concentrated, if the "go back to the land" call was to have credibility in the public eyes.

"I am happy to indicate with confidence that there is a great future because this development effort will have an impact on the rural people's capacity to sustain development even after the projects have come to an end. This is so since they are designed to ensure people's participation."

He assured the Swedish government that Zambia greatly valued the assistance.

EXPANDED TRANSPORT FLEET PERMITS HAULAGE OF MOST OF MAIZE HARVEST

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 30 Oct 81 p 7

[Excerpt]

ZAMBIA has been able to haul to safety the major part of this year's bumper maize harvest output because of increased transport fleet, Minister of Agriculture and Water Development Mr Unia Mwila said yesterday.

He said in the past, despite low output, it was not possible to bring in all the maize because of the economic constraints the country had been passing through.

Because of the cooperation and aid the country received from friendly countries and international organisations, Zambia had been able to beef up her fleet.

Mr Mwila was speaking at the Mechanical Services Department in Lusaka where 40 five-tonne Fiat trucks donated to the Government by the Food and Agricultural Organisation (FAO) were handed over to the ministry.

Recently he received a fleet of Mitsubishi lorries which have already been deployed in the haulage of maize and other agricultural inputs.

The ministry would ensure that the trucks were despatched to areas where they were needed.

So far 18 trucks had already been deployed in the Southern and Northern provinces.

The 40 trucks were part of 80 donated to Zambia by FAO using money donated by Italy to alleviate Third World agricultural problems.

FAO representative in Zambia Mr Owusu Agyemang assured the Government that the organisation would continue to help Zambia.

Zambia had been chosen for the donation because FAO was impressed by the commitment of the Government towards increasing the food production.

He announced that FAO was embarking on intensive training of Zambian mechanics at Turin in Italy to service and maintain the trucks.

Minister of State for Ministry of Works and Supply, Mr Edward Muonga thanked the international community for its positive response towards Zambia's operation food production programme.

'CRITICAL' SHORTAGE OF TRACTORS

Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 6 Nov 81 p 2

[Text]

A CRITICAL shortage of tractors has hit Zambia and the 1981/82 season crop production will be adversely affected.

Quick to admit this grim fact in Lusaka yesterday was AFE general manager Mr Phillimon Kapesebele, who said that his company had nothing in stock.

The company was expecting 66 tractors at the end of this month, but they would arrive too late to change the situation.

The shortage of tractors was caused by foreign exchange problems which made importation planning by dealers difficult.

Marketing manager for Trans-Continental, Mr Andrew Mears, said his company had had no tractors since the last planting season.

"The shortage is not confined to tractors alone, but includes other farming implements," said Mr Mears.

His company was expecting 50 tractors early next year through a privately negotiated loan. "But these will be too late for the coming planting season.

Through a barter agreement between Zambia and Swaziland, the company hoped to import implements from Swaziland.

Managing director for Tarrys, dealers in Leyland tractors, Mr John Lyons, said there had been no tractors since the last planting season.

His company has had no tractors for the past six months, but the situation was likely to improve next year.

"We have a few coming, but there are definitely no sales this year. We are optimistic that things will improve next year," he said.

BRIEFS

IMF GIANT--The International Monetary Fund (IMF) has given Zambia K59 million compensation to help the country ease its economic problems while waiting for the release of the K90 million from the K800 million negotiated early this year. Finance Minister Mr Kebby Musokotwane said in Lusaka yesterday the money had already been received and part of it was being used to reduce the balance of payments pipeline while the other was being channelled into various sectors of the economy. Although Zambia had met the conditions for releasing the K90 million, the board of directors of the IMF had not met to authorise release of the funds. At a Press conference three weeks ago, Mr Musokotwane assured the nation the IMF would release the money because certain conditions had been met. He said there was a possibility of making another K90 million draw for September. [Excerpt] [Lusaka TIMES OF ZAMBIA in English 9 Nov 81 p 1]

NAN INTERVIEWS PF LEADER JOSHUA NKOMO

AB160943 Lagos NAN in English 0815 GMT 16 Nov 81

[Text] Salisbury, 12 Nov (NAN)--The leader of the Patriotic Front (PF), Mr Joshua Nkomo, has dismissed the notion of a merger of his party with Prime Minister Robert Mugabe's Zimbabwe African National Union (ZANU-PF) to establish a one-party state in Zimbabwe.

In an interview with the southern Africa correspondent of the News Agency of Nigeria (NAN) in Salisbury today, Mr Nkomo said that ZANU-PF had backed out of a merger plan between the two parties after the Lancaster House talks in 1979.

The Patriotic Front leader said that his party had worked hard to bring about unity and negotiated the Patriotic Front alliance with ZANU-PF for that purpose.

They left us in London when we were discussing coming together so we cannot be chasing people who come into unity and jumped out of it, he told NAN.

But he emphasised that the Patriotic Front alliance under which the two parties had cooperated still existed, saying, this is why we have remained calling ourselves (his party) PF and not ZAPU.

It will be recalled that Prime Minister Mugabe spoke about unity between the two parties on the one-party issue during his recent tour of Matabeleland, Mr Nkomo's political stronghold.

Mr Nkomo expressed doubts about the introduction of a one-party state in Zimbabwe.

He emphatically said that it was impossible for any legislation for a referendum on the issue to go through Parliament.

A referendum comes out of legislation and such legislation will not leave Parliament.

I can assure you that, he stressed.

Under the Lancaster House agreement which gave Zimbabwe its constitution, all members of the 100-seat lower house (the House of Assembly) must vote in favour of any constitutional amendment in order to make it a law.

In the lower house, ZANU-PF has 57 members, PF 20, Republican Front 20 and Bishop Abel Muzorewa's United African National Council 8.

Mr Nkomo, minister without portfolio in Mr Mugabe's cabinet, declined to comment on the government's socialist policies.

He stated that his party would support any policy that promoted stability and economic progress in the country, not necessarily another party's policies.

He denied any knowledge of Zimbabweans who were alleged to be receiving military training in South Africa.

Even when I was the minister of home affairs I had no idea of any such business.

He also said that he was not aware of the arrests of some former auxilliaries of Bishop Abel Muzorewa.

Mr Nkomo told the NAN correspondent to wait for answers to some of his questions in about 3 weeks time when he hoped to comment on the situation in Zimbabwe generally.

CHALLENGE TO GOVERNMENT TAKEOVER OF CAPS SEEN POSSIBLE

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 12 Nov 81 p 1

[Text] The Government's $4 million acquisition of the controlling shares in CAPS Holdings Ltd in July could be effectively blocked if an application made in the High Court yesterday by another CAPS shareholder, Mr Maurice Kramer, is upheld.

Mr Justice Squires reserved judgment in the civil action brought by Mr Kramer against Mr Gerard Graham, whose family sold 42.6 percent of the firm's shares to the Government.

Mr Kramer made an application for an order restraining the sale of the shares unless his shares were included in the transaction under the same terms and conditions.

Mr Chris Andersen, SC, appearing for Mr Kramer, said the terms of an agreement reached before the sale gave Mr Kramer the right to include his shares in any sale concluded by the Graham group.

Mr Kramer was not kept informed about developments leading to the sale of the group's shares to the Government, he said.

Mr John Lazarus SC, for Mr Graham, argued that the terms and conditions that applied to the sale of the Graham group's shares did not apply to Mr Kramer because he was a resident, while Mr Graham was not.

Payment for the Graham shares would be made out of the country, whereas payment for Mr Kramer's shares could not because of exchange control regulations.

He accepted there was a breach in the agreement in that Mr Kramer was not informed of the sale, and conceded that he was entitled to claim damages from Mr Graham.

RAILWAY, AIRLINE REPORT FINANCIAL SITUATION

AB131255 Paris AFP in English 1153 GMT 13 Nov 81

[Text] Salisbury, 13 Nov (AFP)--Zimbabwe's national airline made a 36.170 Zimbabwe dollar (40,000 U.S.) profit last fiscal year, but the national railways incurred a $32.7 million deficit, according to their annual reports.

The railways deficit, which was slightly higher than in 1980, was due in part to repairs of wagons recovered from Mozambique after the independence war during which the border was closed, to war damage claims against the government absorbed by the railways, and to costs of training black personnel.

Railways Chairman J.M. Magowan said these items added more than 6 million Zimbabwe dollars (8.4 million U.S.) to the deficit, which expressed in U.S. dollars was 55 million in total.

Mr Magowan's report for the year ended in June confirmed earlier statements by government transport officials that increased economic activity coupled with shortages of rolling stock had caused bottle-necks on the railway system. This congestion was costing landlocked Zimbabwe millions of dollars in foreign currency it could have made on goods and raw materials that were produced but could not be moved expeditiously to markets abroad.

Transport Minister Josiah Chinamano has said the rail crisis should ease by June 1982. By then, 60 locomotives on order from the United States and Canada should have arrived, and the planned commissioning of a fuel pipeline from Mozambique should have taken a substantial load off the railways.

With the railway congestion, Air Zimbabwe showed a sharp rise in cargo carried--from 2.47 million tons/kilometers flown in fiscal 1980 to 5.14 million tons/kms in 1981. Revenue from cargo almost doubled to 2.8 million Zimbabwe dollars (3.9 million U.S.).

The report from General Manager Mervyn Eyett said the number of passengers flown increased from 365,771 to 402,274, representing a gain of 10.5 million Zimbabwe dollars revenue (14.1 million U.S.). Of these passengers, 25,000 used the airline's flights to Europe--serving London and Frankfurt.

Total turnover for the year was 40.6 million Zimbabwe dollars, up from 27.5 million in 1980, Mr Eyett said.

In another development, the Air Zimbabwe executive said the line's quarrel with Zambian airways over flight reservations in Lusaka had been settled after he flew to the Zambian capital to investigate.

Zimbabwean passengers had complained in June that Zambian airways booking agents--Air Zimbabwe does not yet have an office in Lusaka--were forcing them to take Zambian return flights to Salisbury, saying Air Zimbabwe's flights were fully booked. The passengers said they later learned this was not the case.

Mr Eyett said this week that after he called the practice to the attention of Zambian airways top management, it stopped.

TRADE AGREEMENT WITH INDIA NOW IN FORCE

Salisbury THE FINANCIAL GAZETTE in English 6 Nov 81 p 13

[Text]

THE trade agreement between Zimbabwe and India, signed in New Delhi earlier this year, came into force at the beginning of the month and may lead to the importation of, among other things, silk and woollen fabrics, coastal vessels and ships, car parts, surgical instruments and television sets.

The agreement was signed on May 22 by Dr Witness Mangwende, Zimbabwe's Minister of Foreign Affairs, and Mr Pranab Mukherjee, India's Minister of Commerce, and confers "most-favoured nation" trading status on the two countries. This will extend for an initial period of two years and renew automatically for a further two years unless either side decides to terminate the arrangement.

According to the terms of the agreement the countries will undertake to establish a joint committee to meet at convenient dates, alternating between the two capitals. All payments will be made in freely convertible currency through normal banking channels, and the partners agree to utilise, in as far as possible, only the respective national carriers to transport the goods indicated in the agreement.

ZUCCO AIMS HAMPERED BY LACK OF CASH

Salisbury BUSINESS HERALD in English 12 Nov 81 p 1

[Article by Tahnde Kapambwe]

[Text]

THE Zimbabwe United Chambers of Commerce have initiated a few self-help schemes in the rural areas but a major effort is being hampered by lack of funds.

Secretary-General Mr Chad Ndoro said the organition was still awaiting release of about $20 million promised by Government last May for the development of emergent businesses.

A bulk-buying scheme is continuing with success in the Chivu-Chilimanzi area where businessmen have pooled their money to buy goods in bulk.

The goods are sold on a rotation basis by members of the scheme.

ZUCCO is now trying to encourage the formation of wholesalers on this co-operative basis.

The organisation recently organised the collection of grain from Mrewa to depots because the transport available in the area could not cope.

A transport co-operative is something that ZUCCO would like to establish but it is limited by the availability of vehicles.

There is an ongoing training programme at Ranche House College which began last May and was made possible by a $250 000 grant from West Germany.

Mr Ndoro said the organisation has been offered about $80m. on loan by a British organisation for [illegible] by [illegible] emergent [illegible]bwe

The Government has yet to approve the offer which, if accepted, will be managed by one of the commercial banks.

Mr Ndoro urged Government to take prompt action on the release of funds promised to rural businesses and also those funds offered by Britain.

"We are not asking for handouts but for loans which we will repay," he said.

Commercial banks should also be directed to ease the terms for emergent businessmen to get loans, possibly using their buildings as security.

WFP PLANS ALTERNATE ROUTE FOR MAIZE SHIPMENT

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 11 Nov 81 p 1

[Article by Gareth Willard]

[Text]

THE World Food Programme is making alternative arrangements to move Zimbabwe's maize to the coast for shipment to other African states following the sabotage of the Pungwe River bridge in Mozambique.

At a Press conference yesterday in Salisbury, the deputy director of the WFP, Mr Dirk Sintobin, said he hoped the bridge would be repaired by early next month.

Once the Beira line was back in use the Mozambique Railways had promised to shift 520 tonnes of maize a day from the Zimbabwe border.

About 36 410 tonnes of Zimbabwean maize had already been shipped to Zambia, Mozambique, Kenya, Tanzania, Angola, Mali and Senegal. But more than 50 000 still had to be moved to those countries and Somalia.

Mr Sintobin said transport was the major problem in a unique WFP programme: Buying and moving maize from a landlocked country.

The blowing up of the Pungwe bridge more than a week ago had worsened an already difficult situation. The WFP was considering two alternative routes: A northern one via Tete and a southern one via Maputo.

In the northern alternative, maize would be trucked to Tete and then railed to the coast. He believed deliveries could continue to be made with these alternatives, but warned that other sources of maize would have to be found if that was the only way for the WFP to meet its commitments.

Appeal

Asked if he would consider appealing to Mozambique rebels to leave maize trains alone, he said that was a political decision, not for the WFP to make. "But perhaps the secretary-general of the United Nations would consider it."

The WFP wanted to keep buying Zimbabwean maize and saw its programme in this country as a challenge and an example of Africa feeding Africa.

"We are continuing our discussions with all concerned to find a solution to the transport problem."

Not only did the WFP want maize shipments maintained, but it wanted capacity on the rail system increased so larger quantities could be shipped to East and West Africa.

The programme would help Zimbabwe reduce her storage burden and earn Zimbabwe foreign exchange.

Mozambique would benefit with substantial foreign currency earnings from the use of her transport facilities.

So far 11 contracts had been signed with the Zimbabwe Grain Marketing Board for a total of 50 928 tonnes, worth about $6.7 million.

Further contracts were planned for 35 000 tonnes, worth $4,2 million. The total programme should benefit Mozambique by $2.2 million for transport and handling charges and another $300 000 would be paid to Zimbabwe road hauliers delivering maize to Zambia.

Mr Sintobin said, while the WFP would always be willing to help, he would like to see straight government to government regional food programmes in the future.

"Our role is a catalyst, to show a regional food programme can work. Zimbabwe is the only major inland country in the world with a surplus of grain, which does cause problems.

"But we are solving them. And using regional surpluses for our programmes in Africa has one great advantage besides the obvious ones. Your maize is white, while almost all the other supplies we can buy are yellow and less acceptable to the people of Africa."

Road transport could not be a viable alternative to rail because of its high cost, and funds had to be kept for food rather than used up in transport.

DDF PLAN FOR ROADS, WATER REPORTED

Salisbury BUSINESS HERALD in English 12 Nov 81 p 1

[Article by Angus Macmillan]

[Text] THE District Development Fund, one of the country's major recipients of foreign aid since independence, will receive about $16 million of new money in its current financial year.

Grant aid for the 1980/1 period came to about $23m. and accounted for more than 50 percent of its expenditure estimate of $40m.

Tasked with reconstruction and general development in the communal lands, the DDF is the successor to the African Development Fund and now falls under the Ministry of Local Government and Housing.

Roads and water supplies have received top priority with reconstruction progress for the period March 1980 to September 1981 being more than impressive.

Progressive totals include: 4 219 boreholes, 91 dams, nine pipe schemes, 9 829 km of roads, 153 bridges and causeways, 1 660 culverts and inverts, 1 114 dips and 71 salepens.

Many areas that were inaccessible after the war are now within reach.

Areas where water was scarce are now adequately supplied and salepens have been repaired and replaced all over the country.

"We not only provide access to areas but also provide them with the infrastructure that is needed to benefit rural communities," said Mr Malvern Bowen-Davies, acting director of the DDF.

Major donors include West Germany, the United Kingdom, Norway, Canada, Australia, Japan and the European Economic Community.

Much of this aid has been tied, to purchases from donors, but some has been left unspecified.

However, the fund has tried to persuade countries to concentrate their tied aid in particular areas.

Japan, for example, providing earth-moving machinery and Britain, funds for training.

Aid for this year is set at about $19m., of which only $3m. is not new money.

Negotiations are underway for more funds and new donors may be attracted.

Local funds are voted by a select parliamentary committee which meets to discuss estimates presented by DDF management.

Last year the Government contributed $4,5 million to its expenditure budget.

To accomplish its various programmes of reconstruction, new work and maintenance, the fund has a permanent staff of about 1 600 and employs more than 7 000 people on a part-time basis during the year.

It also has a vehicle fleet of 1 800, runs 13 aircraft and has its own radio network—to streamline activities in remote areas.

TRAINING

But training has been one of its most important tasks since independence with more than 1 000 trainees having attended courses.

In the past, the fund did most of its training at the Domboshawa Training Centre but recently built its own centres at Umtali, Makwe (near Gwanda) and Tjolotjo.

Another three are being built at Fort Victoria, Gwelo and near Chitungwiza outside Salisbury.

Trainees have built their own classrooms, workshops and accommodation facilities as part of their practical modular training.

Work will start on the 7,2 hectare Salisbury site — to be known as the Hunyani Skills Centre — at the end of this month.

Training is comprehensive and includes building, mechanics and various maintenance skills.

As Mr Bowen-Davies puts it: "Even if we lose the guys we have trained they are still benefiting the country through the skills we have taught them."

WORKSHOP

The proposed Fort Victoria centre may include heavy machine workshop facilities and will be financed by the United Kingdom and possibly the World Bank.

Trainees are made up of in-service employees, sponsored individuals from Government departments and private enterprise and a small percentage of unsponsored people.

The DDF concentrates on providing primary facilities and does not involve itself with major specialised projects.

These are the responsibility of individual ministries such as the Ministry of Roads and the Ministry of Water Development.

Two of its provincial mechanical advisers recently attended a Nissan-sponsored training course in Japan and another will attend a similar course next year.

There is a major DDF workshop in each of the country's eight provinces and 50 district workshops scattered around Zimbabwe.

ENERGY MINISTER CLAIMS FUEL CURBS EFFECTIVE

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 12 Nov 81 p 1

[Text] Fuel-saving measures are already benefiting Zimbabwe, the Minister of Industry and Energy Development, Dr Simba Makoni, said yesterday.

"But we shall need just a little more time, forebearance and understanding on the part of the motoring public for the full benefits to be realised."

Zimbabwe could be self-reliant in energy if its vast resources were well developed and exploited, the minister told members of the Zimbabwe Staff College at KG VI Barracks in Salisbury.

Dr Makoni repeated appeals to the public and especially large consumers, like the national army, for continued co-operation.

Meanwhile, his ministry and the Ministry of Mines were about to launch a joint study into the feasibility of oil and fertilisers from coal projects.

So far, the only exploited coal field, at Wankie, was producing 3 million tonnes but the country had 30 billion tonnes of coal in reserve in more than 23 fields.

Yet, Dr Makoni said, the country had no petroleum and had to import all its supplies — 12.5 percent of the total energy consumed.

These imports accounted for 20 percent of the country's foreign exchange allocations.

"However, a significant saving was achieved by the introduction of the ethanol/petrol blend for use in spark ignition engines since July 1980."

Plans to increase the ethanol content from 15 to 20 percent were almost complete. Research aimed at raising it to a maximum of 25 percent was being pursued "vigorously".

Planned thermal power stations at Wankie, Kariba and other parts of the country would have to be authorised soon to avoid possible power shortages in the mid-1980s.

MINING MINISTER: 'WE WILL KICK OUT RACISTS'

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 12 Nov 81 p 1

[Text]

WANKIE.

THE Government will now interfere with the private sector — even if it means a breakdown in economic development — in an effort to get rid of racial die-hards, the Minister of Mines, Mr Maurice Nyagumbo, said yesterday.

In a stern warning to all mining companies in Zimbabwe, Mr Nyagumbo said that although the Government's policy was not to interfere with the privat sector, it was being forced to act by "certain individuals" who ignored the realities of change.

"We are now going to interfere in the private sector to ensure that certain individuals, who have not changed their attitudes, leave the country irrespective of whether they are skilled," Mr Nyagumbo said at a meeting at Wankie Colliery.

The minister added that although the Government needed skilled workers to assist in the industrial and economic growth of the country, anyone who was a racist had to choose between changing his attitudes and leaving the country.

"Such people would rather leave the country with their skills and leave us without skills. If it means a breakdown in our economic development, let it happen," the minister declared.

Telling all racists to leave the country immediately, Mr Nyagumbo hit out at all those who still referred to blacks as "kaffirs".

The minister, who had earlier toured the company's residential areas, condemned several of the old houses — some of which were built in the 1920s — and demanded that they be updated immediately.

RENTS

He also ordered the management to suspend payment of rents on a number of houses, which he described as "cheaply built".

"If you, the management, cannot stay in some of those appalling houses, why should you expect any other human beings to live there?" the minister asked.

Earlier, the acting general manager of Wankie Colliery Mr Don Biddle said that large sums of money had been set aside for the construction of more new houses for company employees.

Mr Biddle said that most of the old houses would be demolished as soon as the housing backlog, now approaching 300, had been met. Ziana.

RAPID GROWTH OF SCHOOL OF MINES REPORTED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 11 Nov 81 p 3

[Text]

BULAWAYO.

EXTENSIONS to the School of Mines at the Bulawayo Technical College are expected to be completed about the middle of next year, the college principal, Mr John Bowman, said yesterday.

The extensions — being built at a cost of $495 000 — will almost double the mining complex of the school.

On the staffing of the School of Mines, Mr Banfield said there was at present a shortage of four lecturers and it was feared this would affect the school's teaching ability.

"There has been a recruiting campaign overseas, and we are waiting for some applicants to accept offers made to them," said Mr Banfield.

He added that shortage of mining engineers was the most serious.

The school was being kept "barely afloat" by employing part-time lecturers, most of whom were being brought out of retirement.

Mr Banfield said the situation was so serious that the school's permanent staff comprised people who were either over 60 or had been brought back from retirement.

The School of Mining, which caters for the whole country and has been offering courses since 1962, provides a three-year diploma course, the first year of which must be spent training in an appropriate field in the mining industry.

Mr Bowman said the establishment of a mining degree course at the University of Zimbabwe was at present under active Government consideration.

The course would provide badly-needed engineers to train technicians to keep the wheels of the industry turning, he said.

CHINESE LINKS--Light industrial products which are cheap by world standards may be imported from China if the negotiations of a Chinese trade delegation are successful, says the head of the delegation, Mr Kang Yuzhou. Mr Yuzhou is the deputy manager of the export department of the China national light industrial cooperative. On display at the Chinese commercial attache's office in Salisbury yesterday were pens, glassware, decorative lights, kitchenware, shoes, office equipment, electrical appliances and other goods. The delegation was concerned about the allocation of import licences for their goods. But Mr Yuzhou said the thousands of tonnes of tobacco imported from Zimbabwe this year was the beginning of trade links between the two countries. "We have come to Zimbabwe to see whether our light industrial products can be exported here. We will talk to the Government and the private sector to find out what they need from us," he said. The delegation has also visited Kenya and Tanzania. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 11 Nov 81 p 7]

ACTING HEALTH MINISTER--The Minister of Lands, Resettlement and Rural Development, Dr Sydney Sekeramayi, is to act as Minister of Health, President Banana announced yesterday. The move was made after the death of the Minister of Health, Dr Simon Mazorodze, last Thursday. As a result of the absence of several ministers accompanying the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, on his tour of Eastern Europe, the Deputy Prime Minister, Mr Simon Muzenda, who is Acting Prime Minister, was also appointed as Acting Minister of Finance. The Minister of Information and Tourism, Dr Nathan Shamuyarira, will act as Minister of Foreign Affairs. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 11 Nov 81 p 1]

HOSPITAL STAFF SHORTAGE--The opening of a new wing at the Parirenyatwa hospital has been delayed by a shortage of skilled theatre and intensive care staff, the Secretary for Health, Dr Office Chidede, said yesterday. He said in an interview that if the new wing was commissioned there would be a general staff shortage in the hospital. It had been decided to delay the opening to preserve present staffing levels. He added that Parirenyatwa was the best staffed and equipped hospital in the country, and rumours that it was suffering a critical staff shortage were untrue. However, some of the staff were inexperienced, and "it is possible that some people working there may complain because not all the nurses are up to intensive care standard yet." But the staff should realise they are the most fortunate in the country, and for a hospital in the Third World, Parirenyatwa offers incredibly high standards--for staff and patients." MEDIA CONFERENCE--Bulawayo--Zimbabwe will take part in the third biennial meeting of the African Council on Communication Education to be held in Arusha, Tanzania next month. The ACCE is an umbrella organisation of 25 member institutions, founded in 1976 to coordinate the training of journalists on the continent. Its last meeting was held in Dakar in 1979. TRADE DELEGATION SCHEDULED--Prince Albert (above), brother of King Baudouin of the Belgians, and the Minister of Foreign Trade, Mr Robert Urban, heads a 40-man delegation of top businessmen from Belgium due to arrive in Zimbabwe at the end of the month. The Belgian Government, according to its Charge d'Affaires in Salisbury, Mr Dominique Struye, attaches great importance to this visit. Zimbabwe, he said, is the only country in Central and Southern Africa with any great potential, hence the interest of Belgian businessmen in the visit. "Zimbabwe is still an unknown quantity in Belgium because of the 15 years of isolation. So these businessmen are coming to see things for themselves," said Mr Struye. In the delegation are representatives of six leading banks--Banque Bruxelles Lambert, Banque Commerciale Zairoise, Banque de Paris et des Pays-Bas Belgique, Banque Belgo-Zairoise, Kredietbank, and Societe Generale de Banque. Consultants, electrical contractors, shipping agents, engineers, civil engineers, metal manufacturers, textile manufacturers are also represented, as is Union Miniere. Union Miniere has a 5 percent interest in the Wankie Colliery Company Ltd and is part of the Societe Generale Group which in turn recently took control of Tanks Consolidated Investments Ltd. Tanks also has property and industrial interests in Zimbabwe. The delegation arrives in Salisbury on November 28 and leaves on December 2. [Text] [Salisbury BUSINESS HERALD in English 12 Nov 81 p 1]

RATIONING OF CHICKENS--The poultry industry is slowly grinding to a halt because the Government will not allow an increase in the retail price of products says the general manager of Arbor Acres, Mr Peter Gaffee. The price of maize has gone up 54 percent since the beginning of the year and this constitutes about 70 percent of chicken feed. Mr Gaffee said all poultry producers are losing money and the industry will not survive unless the authorities see fit to grant an increase in the price of products. "There are not enough chickens available to sustain the market and they are being rationed," he said. Meanwhile, African butchers continue to be worried about the shortage of beef which has severely affected their businesses. The manager of Highfield "Take Your Pick Butchery", Mr Wilfred Chigumira, said that for three weeks now they had not been supplied with liver. However, he described the situation as not being too bad. Mr C. Mataure of Mwayera Bazaar, also of Highfield preferred to be uncommittal at this stage since the Government had reduced supplies of meat by another 10 percent last week. When the effects of this are felt it will determine the road butchers are taking, he said. A spokesman for Pfugari Butchery in Angwa Street said it was up to the Government to do something about their plight of which they are very much aware. None of the butchers interviewed had laid off any workers, but all complained they were losing money. [Text[[Salisbury BUSINESS HERALD in English 12 Nov 81 p 1]

FORESTRY TEAM--A forestry delegation left Salisbury on Monday on a familiarisation visit to Sweden. Mr Phillip Hayter, manager of the Timber Promotion Council, said the five-man delegation will be touring the Swedish forestry industry, for two weeks. "We hope to strengthen the links between the industry in our two countries," he said. Mr Bo Heineback, Sweden's ambassador to Zimbabwe, said the delegation had been invited by various Swedish forestry caompanies and the Swedish Trade Council. He added that forests covered nearly 60 percent of his country and the industry was highly developed. Considerable interest had been expressed in developing co-operation in the forestry industry, and the delegation would not only look at potential equipment but also Swedish research and training facilities. Mr Heineback said Zimbabwe was aware of the danger of depleting its forests and the need for replanting, and in this area Swedish techniques could be of assistance. STATE BUYS FARMLAND--Bulawayo. More than 20,000 ha of farming land in the Inyanga district has been acquired by the Ministry of Lands, Resettlement and Rural Development. A spokesman for Inyanga Rural Council confirmed yesterday the Government's acquisition of five estates. A spokesman for the ministry said yesterday: "The land at Inyanga has been acquired for resettlement purposes although it will not be used for such as yet." The arms purchased are the Rathbeg estate (1,342 ha); Rattray estate (1,767 ha); Emsworth estate (1,536 ha). All are registered in the name of Southfields Estates (Pvt.) Ltd. Two further pieces involved are Bannockburn North (14,466 ha), registered in the name of Mr Wessel Johannes Oosthuizen and the remaining extent of Aberdeen (1,185 ha), registered in the name of Samarani Estates (Pvt.) Ltd. All the farm acquisitions were gazetted two weeks ago under the Rural Land Act. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 12 Nov 81 p 3]

ILO TRAINING PLAN--A major training programme for labour officers and trade union leaders is to be launched by the International Labour Organisation in Zimbabwe next year. In an interview in Salisbury yesterday, the organisation's Lusaka-based regional labour and education adviser, Mr Morris Mulima, said the training programme would be for three years and would involve a series of training courses organised in the six major Zimbabwean towns and cities. "It will probably be the biggest programme we have undertaken in Africa," Mr Mulima said. The Ministry of Labour and Social Services, with whose co-operation the programme would be undertaken, was already working on identifying areas of training, he said. "However, I cannot tell you at this time who is going to fund the programme and how much it is going to cost, but we have talked to a number of possible agencies that might give some assistance and as they have all shown a very great deal of interest, I am quite sure we'll get the money," Mr Mulima said. Since his arrival in Zimbabwe, Mr Mulima has held discussions with Government officials, labour leaders and employers' organisations to familiarise himself with local labour problems and thinking and has also briefed them on what the ILO is doing in other countries. Mr Mulima leaves Salisbury today for Bulawayo. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 12 Nov 81 p 11]

RAIL COMPUTER MODERNISED--Bulawayo--The National Railways of Zimbabwe is to spend $600,000 updating its computer. A spokesman for the railways said yesterday: "The money will come from the budget account (capital) and the up-dated machine should be completed by June next year." [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 12 Nov 81 p 3]

COMPUTER DEVELOPMENT--The Zambian computer industry is ahead of Zimbabwe's because it has the advantage of free trade which was not available here, according to market support manager Mr Alan Cockle of ICL Central Africa Ltd. Mr Cockle, who recently returned from a week's business visit to Zambia, said there was a lot more logical flow of computer development in that country. However, Zimbabwe's computers were more evenly spread out because there are many small companies using them, while in Zambia, there is a sharp difference between the big companies which dominate the computer industry, and the small ones which hardly use any at all. Mr Cockle was in Zambia to advise ICL there on improving communications with the public, commerce and industry. He found the business environment in the two countries similar where subsidiary businesses outside Salisbury and Lusaka felt cut-off from the main centres because of a lack of communication. AID REQUIREMENTS--As the prime minister, Comrade Mugabe, continues his visit to Romania reports so far received indicate that Zimbabwe and Romania have moved closer to each other. During [words indistinct] since he started a visit on Friday morning Comrade Mugabe has called for the implementation of a cooperation accord signed by representatives of the two countries in September last year. Comrade Mugabe told Romanian officials that the Zimbabwe Government needs assistance from Romania to enable it to carry out development projects. He suggested the formation of a joint commission to explore specific areas and implement an economic cooperation agreement between the two nations. Romania, which supported Zimbabwe's liberation struggle, is training a number of Zimbabweans in a number of fields, particularly in agriculture. The prime minister said he is pleased to have such assistance. Comrade Mugabe, who has already been to Yugoslavia, is expected to visit Bulgaria as well as Greece. The prime minister has also used the visit to spell out his views on a number of international issues. He told newsmen in Romania that developing nations need substantial aid from developed nations. Together with the Romanian leader, Comrade Ceausescu, Comrade Mugabe called for the withdrawal of medium-range missiles from both East and West Europe. WRAP-UP, RESULTS OF DOS SANTOS' EUROPEAN, EASTERN VISITS

Praia VOZ DI POVO in Portuguese 24 Oct 81 pp 1, 11

[Text] The trip made by the chairman of the MPLA-Labor Party and president of the RPA [People's Republic of Angola] Comrade Jose Eduardo dos Santos between 30 September and 20 October to various countries throughout the world opened up broad prospects for economic and technical-scientific cooperation between Angola, which is fighting to build socialism, and other peoples of the world on the basis of reciprocal advantages.

According to a review presented yesterday by Secretary of State for Cooperation Paulino Pinto Joao, the various agreements signed between Angolan officials and those in the countries visited, with the exception of France, where no agreement was signed, will contribute to speeding up Angola's social-economic growth.

In Libya, the first stop on the presidential trip, there was a review of cooperation already existing between the two countries and it was furthermore agreed to develop bilateral cooperation in the field of agriculture, culminating in the establishment of mixed Angolan-Libyan enterprises, whose opening is scheduled for next year. These enterprises will during the first phase give priority to supplying the domestic market in Angola and, thereafter, they will also be able to produce goods for export and that will help finance a portion of the investment projects.

The two parties also agreed to cooperate in the industrial area, specifically, the production of paper pulp, and in the mining industry, in the production of phosphates. Libyan experts will shortly come to Angola in order, together with Angolan officials, to study the various projects contemplated by the two countries.

The training of Angolan cadres in Libya was also one of the aspects agreed upon between the two countries during the visit of the Angolan president to that Arab country, along with great financial possibilities coming primarily from the petroleum industry.

In Bulgaria

Important agreements were also signed between the RPA and the People's Republic of Bulgaria where the Angolan chief of state made an official and friendship visit in response to an invitation from his opposite number Todor Zhivkov. Agriculture, industry, energy, and the merchant marine were the sectors in which a need was admitted for bilateral Angolan-Bulgarian Cooperation in the context of traditional relations existing between the two countries.

In agriculture it was agreed to establish two mixed enterprises, with one of them for the production of soybeans and the other one for the production of tobacco. These enterprises, which will be managed jointly by Angolans and Bulgarians, will progressively be developed into agribusiness complexes or in other words, during a subsequent phase, they will turn out agricultural products that will also be processed into industrial consumer products. At the end of a certain period of time, which can go as long as 5 years, these enterprises will be completely managed by the RPA.

In the industrial field, Bulgaria will continue the exploration of phosphates in Soyo where it is already operating and it will create a fertilizer complex somewhere in Angola. This vast undertaking might possibly be carried out with the participation of other countries through competitive bidding. The two parties also agreed to set up a forklift factory in Angola.

Angola and Bulgaria also signed an accord in the energy field. The document, effective for a period of 5 years, outlines a vast electrification program in the province of Uige, in view of the great economic potential of the area.

Regarding the merchant marine, a general agreement was signed, granting facilities to the vessels and shipping companies of Angola and Bulgaria.

In Hungary

In Hungary, one of the four socialist countries visited by the Angolan chief executive, the possibility was analyzed as to the further development of cooperation between the two countries in the mass transportation field. Officials studied the possibility of creating a unit in Angola for the recovery of wrecked vehicles. In time, that unit could become an assembly line.

They also discussed the possibility of expanding an Angolan factory unit which would produce various rubber articles, especially for household use, and they studied the possibility of installing a lamp factory in the RPA.

Concerning agriculture and animal husbandry, an agreement was signed between Angola and Hungary in the field of poultry cultivation and hog raising and in the construction of slaughterhouses for poultry and a food ration production complex.

The technical-professional training of Angolan cadres in Hungary, as well as the possibilities of training middle-level and higher-level technicians, were also agreed upon between the Angolan and Hungarian officials.

Results of visit to Czechoslovakia

On the other hand, a memorandum was signed between Angola and Czechoslovakia, the fourth country visited by the president, calling for the construction of a shoe factory in Angola and the expansion of an Angola beer brewery as well as cooperation in the field of forest exploitation.

As for energy, Czechoslovakia will participate in the study and preparation of electrification projects throughout the territory of the RPA. In the field of information, agreements were signed between ANGOP (Angolan Press Agency) and TPA (People's Television of Angola) on the one hand, and corresponding Czechoslovak organizations. The agreements call for the exchange of information and documents as well as the training of cadres; they will make it possible to bring the Angolan and Czechoslovak peoples even closer together as they work side by side to establish a new worldwide information system.

In the meantime, important agreements were signed in the areas of industry, agriculture, energy, and planning in the GDR, one of the socialist countries with the largest cooperation volume with Angola.

In the industrial field, the GDR will install a textile complex in the province of Malanje. Plans also call for the construction, by the Germans, of a chhlorine and caustic soda plant, as well as an industrial unit for the production of books and other school materials, possibly in the province of Benguela.

In the energy field, a general cooperation agreement was signed between the two countries calling for the professional training of Angolan cadres and studies by the Germans regarding electrification projects in rural areas in the RPA.

Concerning agriculture, Angola and the GDR signed an agricultural cooperation program which is to run for 5 years and which calls for managing agricultural and livestock production enterprises (beef cattle) and the training of cadres, primarily in management.

An accord was also signed, calling for bilateral cooperation in the field of construction and another one in planning whose objectives will be to spell out common tasks to be included in the national plans of the two countries, their further development, and the exchange of experiences as well as cadre training.

Korea

The Democratic and People's Republic of Korea was the last leg in the historical trip made by President Jose Eduardo dos Santos; Korea will immediately establish a model unit for the production of rice and corn in one of the Angolan provinces under the terms of an agreement signed in the field of agriculture. Angolan agricultural specialists will also be trained in that unit.

In addition to a general technical and scientific cooperation agreement, the Koreans are prepared to rehabilitate some Angolan construction facilities and will teach classes in Angolan schools, from primary to middle and higher-level schools. The arrival of Korean professors in Angola will depend on their learning the Portuguese language (which is the official language of Angola).

On the basis of the review presented by the secretary of state for cooperation one can conclude that the trip by President Jose Eduardo dos Santos opened up broad prospects for speeding up Angolan economic development and for the creation of the technical and material conditions for the construction of the RPA.

It is obvious that, to materialize the various agreements signed, we are going to have to work hard. The Angolan people will have to make use of the experiences of the more advanced countries to the benefit of its own national reconstruction and the conquest of its economic independence.

WESTERN COUNTRIES HAVE 'HISTORICAL RESPONSIBILITY' IN NAMIBIA

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 27 Oct 81 p 1

[Article by Joao Miranda: "The 'Secret' of the Five"]

[Text] The five Western countries which are members of the so-called "Contact Group" on the Namibian issue several days ago undertook a new "trip" through Africa for the purpose of informing some African governments which are directly or indirectly involved in the decolonization process on the content of the proposed amendments to Resolution 435/78 of the UN Security Council on independence for Namibia. Yesterday afternoon, Luanda received a delegation from the "five" Western countries (the United States of America, Canada, France, West Germany, and Great Britain) which is to start conversations with SWAPO and with authorities in the People's Republic of Angola. Although the content of these famous amendments is as yet not known officially, the practical situation deriving from the ambiguous positions of the member countries of the "Contact Group," regarding the mechanisms planned in an effort to bring the Namibian decolonization process to a happy conclusion, does not dispel our skepticism. This mission, which in Western political circles is considered decisive for the solution of the problem of Namibia, within the context of the 29 September 1978 Security Council Resolution, runs the risk of once again ending in failure if the so-called amendment proposals drafted by the "five" do not take into account the fundamental aspirations of the black majority in Namibia.

There is as a matter of fact one basic condition in Namibia for a negotiable solution capable of guaranteeing the continuity of the process of profound social and political changes and that is unconditional recognition, by the government in Pretoria, which illegally occupies the country, of the sole legitimacy of SWAPO over the entire territory of Namibia, including Walvis Bay. This recognition must be implicit also regarding the legitimacy of the puppets of DTA [Democratic Turnhalle Alliance] as a valid political force in the Namibian decolonization process.

The Western countries have a historical responsibility on the Namibian issue which goes back to the defeat of Germany during World War I. When the League of Nations assigned the mandate over what was then the African Southwest, that is, Namibia and South Africa, the people of Namibia had a certain degree of hope in the humanism of the Allies due to their critical position and attacks upon German colonialism at the time. If it had not been for the false promises of what was then the South African Unity, in its capacity as a charter member of the League of Nations, and the encouraging words of the Allies, the people of Namibia would have been able to reconquer their land to institute a political system which would be in line with their desires. The Western countries, especially the members of the Contact Group, in their capacity as members of the Security Council, are more than anybody else responsible for the continuation of the policy of apartheid in Namibia and the subsequent cruel subjugation of the country's black majority because it is they who make sure the UN decisions and resolutions on Namibia become dead letters due to the fabulous interest which they have in that sister nation. In the light of the procedures already demonstrated by the "five" in relation to the problem, it is believed that any change in Resolution 435/78 would be improper; a military presence of the United States of America during the transition period in Namibia would not be acceptable.

The fact that the headquarters of the UN is on United States territory does not give Washington any power to decide as to the dispatch of its troops in order to guarantee the power transfer process in Namibia.

The front-line countries, we are convinced, will with open arms receive the delegation of the "five" if it brings good news on the date of independence, on the sequence of the scrupulous implementation of the provisions of Resolution 435/78 of the UN Security Council.

INTERVIEWEES EXPRESS DISSATISFACTION WITH WORKERS' STORES

Praia VOZ DI POVO in Portuguese 25 Oct 81 p 2

[Text] The Domestic Trade Ministry recently opened several stores for the purpose of selling industrial commodities to the workers. These workers nevertheless continue to face enormous difficulties in the procurement of certain articles since these stores have little or nothing. If the articles are available, the prices at which they are sold are not always the kind which can be afforded by the majority of those who in fact are engaged in production, in the light of the current cost of living in the country. In the following we present the statements made by some workers who talked to us about the operation of these stores.

Alfredo Manuel, 26, vulcanizer:

"I think that the decision to open industrial commodity sales stores for the workers was a good one because it enables us to procure some items which are indispensable in our life. But I must say quite frankly that I have put in my application quite some time ago but have so far not been able to buy anything because those stores continue to have enormous lines in front of them.

"On the other hand, I went to those stores several times and I was not even able to find a pair of socks or a handkerchief, not to mention badly made shirts selling at exorbitant prices.

"I think that the system of supplying the stores should be improved in order to meet the needs of all workers."

Fernando Damiao, 27, machine operator:

"Generally speaking, the workers are finding themselves in a critical situation regarding supplies of both industrial commodities and foods. We know that the country is in a wartime situation forced upon us by the South African racists and that they have inflicted great material and human damage upon us. But I think that this situation cannot serve as an excuse for the fact that we do not have anything to eat or anything to wear because Comrade President Agostinho Neto himself said that the revolution cannot be made on an empty stomach.

"In addition to the lack of products, we must also mention the disorganization in those stores where everybody prefers to take care of his friends because 'everybody thinks he is running the business.'

"Right now, when you go to the supermarket, the only thing you see there is beans and oil. We went to one of those recently established stores and we found nothing in the way of clothing to buy for our children. I think that it is necessary to supply the people and to organize the system of running these stores better."

Maria Augusta, 24, clerical employee:

"I can say that the operation of the stores established for the workers is abnormal because these stores do not satisfactorily meet the needs of the workers.

"Some times people want time off to go to the shop to make purchases and they come back with empty hands because there was nothing to sell or because what little was available had been sold to the friends of the people running the store; on the other hand, we have to wait in long lines also. I think that these stores were established for the purpose of putting an end to those long lines and preventing the loafers from gaining access to them. But this is not happening in reality because we are continuing to have long lines and because the unemployed continue to be the most privileged."

Carvalho Luis, 17, student:

"The establishment of the worker stores was a good idea because, according to the initial plan, this was supposed to take care of some of the biggest problems we have been having until now. But the fact is that is not happening because there are no products and there is no organization and because we continue to have enormous lines. In this context I think that it is necessary to work out better ways of preventing anarchy."

WORLD FOOD PROGRAM PROVIDES SCHOOL LUNCH ASSISTANCE

Praia VOZ DI POVO in Portuguese 14 Oct 81 p 3

[Text] Cape Verde and the World Food Program (WFP) last week signed an agreement providing assistance for a school lunch program that will cost an estimated $2 million.

The agreement on the project, which will cover the islands of Sao Nicolau, Santo Antao, Boavista, Sal, and Sao Vicente, was initialed by Adao Rocha, director general of cooperation, and Robin Kinloch, permanent representative of the UNDP [UN Development Program] and the WFP in our country.

The WFP began cooperating with the Cape Verdian Government in a school lunch program on Sao Nicolau Island in 1978. The experiment having been judged successful, the WFP has continued the program by providing the government with food for distribution during the 1981-1982 and 1982-1983 school years. A hot lunch will therefore be distributed to all pupils in schools on Sao Nicolau, Santo Antao, and Boavista islands, and the program will be extended to pupils in Sal and Sao Vicente beginning with the second year of the project.

The program will begin in Sao Nicolau with the 1981-1982 school year and gradually be extended to Santo Antao and Boavista in schools that already have some degree of infrastructure for handling food and preparing meals. Under this program, the WFP will provide the following quantities of food:

Rice: 1,400 tons.
Canned meat: 280 tons.
Oil: 140 tons.
Powdered milk: 375 tons.
CSM (cornmeal, soybeans, and milk): 470 tons.
Sugar: 95 tons.
Dried fruit: 95 tons.

The WFP's cost, including transportation to Cape Verde, is estimated at $2,235,000. As was true with the pilot project in Sao Nicolau (for which the WFP received assistance from Denmark), the outfitting of the canteens and kitchens on the islands now benefiting from the program is being financed through the fund made available to the WFP by the Norwegian Government. The WFP is also providing the government with transportation to facilitate distribution on the islands. The WFP is contributing to internal transportation at the rate of $25 per ton of food (with money given by the U.S. Government). Part of the government's contribution is being financed with a French grant of $100,000.

The social action committees are sponsoring training courses in nutrition and food hygiene and demonstrations in food preparation. A consultant from the Nutritional Division of the FAO has been assigned to Cape Verde for a limited time and will assist the authorities in that area.

The JAAC-CV delegation was given a very friendly reception and in the course of the conversations, the two delegations agreed to develop relations between the two youth organizations, especially through a continuation of the exchange of delegations and cooperation in the cultural and sports fields. PRESIDENT TOURS KOMBO NORTH CONSTITUENCY

Banjul THE GAMBIA TIMES in English 29 Oct 81 pp 3-5

[Excerpts] The Presidential tour continued with having its venue in Sukuta, the Kombo North Constituency, on Saturday 24th October 1981, attracting several hundreds of inhabitants and drawing very many people from diverse areas. There were also distinguished personalities namely, the Commissioner Western Division, who was the coordinator, the Vice President, the Ministers of Health, Works, and Water Resources, Hon. H.R. Monday, Hon. Alhaji M.M. Taal, Hon. Alhaji J.L.B. Daffeh, Hon. K.N. Leigh, Hon. Alhaji A.B. Njie, the Constituent Member of Parliament, Hon. Mrs. L.A. Njie, Hon. Alhaji Yaya Ceesay, Hon. Alhaji D.A.B.S. Jatta, the Inspector General of Police, the Deputy Inspector General of Police and many others in attendance.

The route to the venue was lined by 1340 Sukuta Primary School Children drawn from Boy Scouts, Red Cross, [words illegible] and a detachment of scholars from the Sukuta Secondary Technical School.

His Excellency the President arrived at about 1620 hours and immediately thereafter the Opening Prayers were said followed by the Schools singing the National Anthem.

There were many placards which read 'P.P.P. FOR ALL', 'SPEED UP SENEGAMBIA CONFEDERATION', 'D.K. JAWARA THE MAN OF THE YEAR 1981' and 'VICTORY FOR DEMOCRACY-DOWN WITH ALL EVIL FORCES'. On approaching the venue on either side is placed across the road banners bearing the words 'P.P.P. JAWARA, ALLAH'S FAVOURITE'.

The coordinator of the Presidential tour called forth the following to express their experiences of the past events to His Excellency the President:-

ALHAJI BRIMA CHAM: ALKALI PF SUKUTA.

"It is a pleasure to sit with the President on the same platform and in a formal meeting I told the people that His Excellency the President was a Holy man as he bore the characters of all devine graces, and that grudge harboured against him was prevailing. It has been lately discovered that Presidents Jawara and Diouf share everything in common. All the mishaps had been caused by Sheriff Dibba and not any Revolution. Sheriff Dibba had been the pet of the President Jawara, but then he became haughty and sought equality with Jawara. The activities of the N.C.P. makes us feel that they engineered the attempted coup".

BRIMA SANOH: ALKALI BRUFUT:

"I am satisfied with seeing the President as I never expected to see him again in view of the statements and actions which followed the events of Thursday 30th July to Monday 6th August the day fixed for slaughtering us as listed by the N.C.P. members in Brufut, Sukuta and Bakau. The heads of the N.C.P. still at large are Harley Jammeh, Nyansu Tuti, Bully Sanneh and also Solo Cham; they are people who took guns and came to molest us. The N.C.P. actively engaged itself in the events for having sheltered the rebels for there could be found no stranger without a landlord and in this case the landlord and host was Sheriff Dibba, and the N.C.P. supporters."

AJA JUNKUNDA BOJANG:

"It is now a well-known fact that Jawara with the help of President Abdou Diouf has become a true President, as he was in the United Kingdom where the news reached him and he promised to come here, which he did. We saw the discipline maintained by the Senegalese troops under Colonel Ngum; in Sukuta Teacher Fowlis hosted them and their laundry was cared for by us, in view of their comportment. The activities of Thursday 30th July was most remarkable in the Gambia having been inspired by the N.C.P. as they were drunk and were ready to kill at all times. I greet the loyal forces of the Police that were indeed limited but they saved the country until the arrival of Colonel Ngum and his troops. The Inspector of Police need be held in esteem because of his fortification of the City of Banjul from being overcome by the rebels."

FATOU BOJANG: SUKUTA.

"Our President is alike a bushy forest that shields us and the words of Abdou Joof being his bounds. For 18 years the PPP preached unity among its members together with hard work but by the advent of Sheriff Dibba the teachings of the PPP had been over turned in the whole country. Sheriff Dibba had caused wanton destructions on all peace loving and progressive persons. Sheriff Dibba caused elderly people to be molested. Kukoi is free to do what ever he likes and we blame those who supported him: those who supported him are those who care less for parental obligations as Kukoi himself. On the day the events commenced, I was arrested for abusing Kukoi and my mother tried to intervene but I insisted on my course even if it leads to death. Jawara had arrested the peoples' enemy, I mean Sheriff Mustapha Dibba: the man who created enmity between relatives in the Gambia. The Field Force assisted Kukoi to set up the plans drawn by Sheriff Dibba."

SHERIFF JAMMEH: SUKUTA.

"I had a fervent belief that Jawara would come back to the Gambia, despite the ultimatum given by the rebels. Kukoi is insignificant for he cannot tell the names of all that had surrounded him in the rebellion. Every body knows Sheriff Dibba. What then can we addice to save him? Is he worthy of being saved? Mr President why have you released some of the detainees? They should not have been released; the Akali should have been asked as to their behaviours on the days of the rebellion. I heard that some detainees had been released by 1000 hours today; those released were seated in cars holding guns and roaming everywhere--why should they be released?"

ALHAJI AMADOU CHAM: SUKUTA:

"When the events started, I was at work in P.W.D. and I heard that Kikalla Bandeh was killed in a coup. I told them that no coup was possible in the Gambia. I heard the announcements over Radio Gambia and it was applauded by all the N.C.P. members in the Public Works Department. I took to return to Sukuta when we reached mile II, I saw Mustapha Danso in the company of soldiers. We returned to Banjul as the road was blocked and with seeing looting of properties in Maurel Prom, Chellarams etc. The Gambia's image abroad made me assured that the President even though in U.K. was sure to return home. We all know that the President is extremely tolerant therefore being silent as abuses were hailed upon him, this was because he was a form believer of the teachings of the Holy Koran. God caused his enemies to make plans which only destroyed the makers. There is not a single PPP member that died in the rebellion. God had ridded the Gambia of the evil doers. We heard and saw that the rebels in Sukuta were all N.C.P. members who took guns roaming from place to place molesting us."

REASONS FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF PARTY NEWSPAPER GIVEN

Banjul THE GAMBIA TIMES in English 29 Oct 81 pp 1, 2

/Editorials: "Our Opinion." "Why a Party Newspaper?"/

[Text] Thomas Jefferson characterises the press as the fourth estate of the state as an indispensable pillar of the free and democratic society. In the considered view of the 3rd president of the United States a free society is unimaginable without a free press. That was valid as much for the United States of Jefferson's day as it is for any society in the latter part of the 20th Century, and the Gambia is no exception.

As life gets more and more complicated under the continuing impact of advanced technology, the role played by the press becomes increasingly important. It is an unsuperseded medium of communication linking the various elements of society. As the purveyor of ideas it plays a unique role in forming opinion and indeed in moulding society. In the complex mechanism of the diffusion of information and ideas the share of the written press, the newspapers, is of special significance. The newspaper has the advantage over other components of the mass media in that it has a wider scope in both time and space: the newspaper's influence is not limited to here and now.

The relevance of a newspaper as organ of a political Party has always been taken for granted. The paper provides a forum for the discussion of the party's ideas, and serves as a medium for the transmission of its thinking on matters of concern to it. Mos important of all, it is an instrument of persuasion, through which the party endeavours to win adherents and sympathisers.

For a national party like the Peoples Progressive Party the publishing of a newspaper as the party organ is of crucial importance. The P.P.P's role is unique among political parties in the Gambia, for it is the party that has been ordained by history to take the country to independent statehood 17 years ago and lead it ever since in peace and progress. The party has a basic commitment to the principle of dialogue, and through dialogue persuasion to its ideals of freedom and democracy.

The decision then at the latter part of 1980 to revive a party newspaper "THE GAMBIA TIMES" was a logical outcome of the party's strategy. The sad thing is, the decision could not materialise much earlier.

The first issue of The Gambia Times saw light of day early in January 1981. The paper appeared more or less regularly on a bi-weekly basis. It had serious technical and seemingly insurmountable, difficulties to grapple with. The party had no printing press and limitation of funds ruled out the appointment of a full-time Editorial team, and the paper had to make do with one full-time Editor, in the person of Mr. S. A. Bakarr, aided by an editorial board of volunteers working on part-time basis. But after some stock taking by the party leadership, it became obvious that there was general concern over the state of the Gambia Times. The paper was considered to be unsatisfactory in many ways and something had to be done.

As the result of a meeting on the issue convened on 16th October 1981, by the General Secretary of the Party His Excellency President Jawara, in his office, to which Mr Bakarr and some members of the practically defunct editorial board were invited, a new editorial Sub-Committee was appointed.

This Committee, which is under the Chairmanship of His Excellency the Vice President, Assan Musa Camara, and includes Dr. Momodou Manneh, Minister of Economic Planning and Industrial Development Mr. Ba Tarawally, Alhaji I.A.S. Burang-John, Mr. Jay Saidy, Mr. Bai Koro Sillah and Mr. S. A. Bakarr, was directed to address itself to the urgent task of improving the paper. Mr. Jay Saidy was appointed to be the Editor-in-Chief.

The struggle for the production of a good party newspaper will continue under the guidance of the Vice President, for it is a measure of the seriousness attached to the paper by the party that a man of his calibre has been assigned to oversee it.

With the commitment and selfless dedication of the members of the Committee and the constant support of all party members and sympathisers, The Gambia Times is bound to be a success. (NOTIONS CONCEIVED BY THE EDITORIAL SUB-COMMITTEE)

Serious National Reflections

The general public views all detainees in the Bakau Depot as being members of the rebellion; but who are the members of the Secret Underground Movement? Who were the contributors to the Underground newspaper? Who were the damaging factors of the Gambia Government which aroused world wide attention to inconsistencies in Government circles? Who is an honest and faithful a servant? Have all faithful men been able to discharge their tasks honourably for which they are being paid without causing any leakage of informations in their Officialdom? Is it not better to leave sleeping dogs to remain sleeping? Could a brass shinning plate be ever deemed Gold?....Editor

PNP'S WIDE POLITICAL SPECTRUM THREAT TO OPPOSITION

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3351, 19 Oct 81 p 2432

[Text]

WHAT IS HAPPENING to the political parties in Ghana other than the ruling People's National Party? The question has become pertinent in view of the big noise made in recent months over a merger of five opposition parties whose union would hope to sweep the PNP out of power at the next general elections. Instead, there has been a crumbling of any semblance of a united opposition that now threatens to turn into a landslide of sorts.

First, the Action Congress Party pulled out, leaving the Popular Front Party, the United National Convention, the Social Democratic Front, and the Third Force Party in the new All People's Party. Now leading members of the PFP such as Dr. Kwame Safo-Adu and Mr. Kwesi Lamptey have left, the former to front a New Ghana Party, and the latter to front an as yet unnamed formation. Then, the Ashiedu-Keteke branch of the United National Convention has broken away in protest at the undemocratic manner in which the APP was formed and its leadership elected. The reported departure of Professor Kofi Awoonor, formerly general secretary of the Action Congress Party, has in turn revealed a disaffection with Colonel Bernasko's leadership paralleled by events within the Popular Front Party.

But whatever the problems of inner-party democracy in the UNC, ACP or the PFP, the most important fact remains to be examined. That is the suggestion that in electoral terms there will be no credible opposition to the PNP until another political party can succeed in occupying as broad a spectrum of opinion as the ruling party does. In other words, the PNP, in its political practice as well as in the composition of its membership, occupies all the ground from the extreme right to somewhere left of centre, which includes some of the Ghanaian species of socialist and Marxists. No other party at present has the organisation and financial backing to operate on this scope. Therefore, while the members of the other parties fritter away their time watching the combat of leaders who suffer from varying degrees of delusions of grandeur, they might do well to ponder the problems of ideology and electoral strategy — the two are always linked, whatever the protagonists may claim.

READER EXPRESSES ADMIRATION FOR TSIKATA

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3351, 19 Oct 81 p 2463

[Text]

SIR: Plodding through the confused first half of Mr. Nana Appiah Kufuor's letter (West Africa, September 21) I can't say for sure that I understand what he is on about concerning what Mr. Tsatsu Tsikata said or didn't say, or whether he was for the dehumanising methods the American system is pursuing in order to make money no matter how foul. What I found pathetic is his mud-slinging Mr. Tsatsu Tsikata, which is very very sad. It is sad because there are many like Mr. Kufour who do not know who is good for the welfare of our country. Tsatsu certainly is a gem in a rough-house but it will not do to throw stupid phrases at him for the following reasons. He is a very selfless young man who strains himself to the limits in the service of others. He takes on many cases for which he charges little or mostly nothing. His door is open to all. He is a very duty-conscious man who keeps his promises and practises what he preaches, unlike a lot of other lawyers, writers, doctors, directors and politicians in Ghana who use people just so that they can climb to the top, and while they are there regularly shove around those who have helped consolidate their positions. Tsatsu is not fussy about his food: as he says "I eat street food. No time to go and collect food from my mother". In the matter of dressing he is just like any ordinary Ghanaian male: he wares casual clothes and wears his suits only when it comes to going to the courts.

Even though Tsatsu's parents have spent most of the time outside the Anlo area they are the most down to earth pair of people I have known, and no one should make the mistake of supposing that just because Tsatsu was brought up in a fairly well-off family all the Tsikatas are lawyers and lecturers and politicians. There are many more Tsikatas who are fishermen, shallot farmers and petty-traders, and in visiting home for funerals and occasional holidays I am sure that Tsatsu has learnt what it is like to be poor, and since he has many friends amongst Gas and Akans he must know how others live apart from his own people.

I believe people of Tsatsu's calibre are the pillars of Ghana's healthy life, and he and those who think like him will be the last to wish to endanger our cultural heritage. Reading Marx and Engels does not necessarily mean that the reader will apply what he reads to the letter if he finds that parts of the material do not suit his own society. After all most of our way of life was more of caring and sharing till we got it all mucked up by apeing Western modes. I am not sure if Mr. Kufour has made Tsatsu's acquaintance. If Tsatsu's book-bedraggled, cloth-strewn beds and an old gas cooker in the university flat where he lives are what make an ivory tower, Mr. Kufour has to rethink his phrases. As my husband said on reading Mr. Kufour's letter; "Tsatsu is a most practical man", and indeed he is and more.

LOWER AIR FARES--Yamoussoukro, Ivory Coast, October 24--A drastic reduction in air fares from Europe is essential to promote tourism in the Ivory Coast, a seminar here decided this week. The seminar, chaired by Tourism Minister Duon Sadia, found that the country was losing in competition with its neighbours, especially since the introduction of package tours between France and Upper Volta. Ivory Coast, which has relatively good hotel facilities, is also being overtaken by Togo and Cameroun in the organisation of international congresses and seminars. The meeting here recommended that the current return air fare to European centres of around 1,500 dollars be cut by 75 percent, and the costs of services within the country be reduced by some 20 or 30 percent to bring them into line with neighbouring states. ARMY OFFICER DENOUNCES SOUTH AFRICAN AGGRESSION

[Report on interview with Comdr Estevao Nhaveni, army unit commander in Doeroi, by the DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE; date and place not specified]

[Text] "The armed gangs operating in Manica are supported by the South Africans. There is no longer any doubt," says Comdr Estevao Nhaveni, who commands an FPLM [Popular Forces for the Liberation of Mozambique] unit stationed in Doeroi. In an interview published in the DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE, Comdr Estevao Nhaveni said: "This is not the first time that we have seen them in our territory. They are the ones who tell the bandits what to do."

Recalling the clash between the FPLM and counterrevolutionary troops on the 14th, Commander Nhaveni said: "At the time, the South Africans and their proteges were trying to sabotage the Doeroi rail line, which is in our patrol area." According to Nhaveni, the same enemy group had been routed 2 days earlier after it had burned and plundered property belonging to the inhabitants of the communal village of Janaque in Manica Province.

In their flight, the counterrevolutionaries abandoned the goods they had stolen and some of their weapons and documents before heading for Doeroi (in the Gondola District), 97 kilometers from the frontier with Zimbabwe.

In that locality, they were engaged in sabotaging the Beira-Machipanda railway when they were attacked by the Mozambican Armed Forces.

Commander Nhaveni recalled: "Before they had finished laying the mines, they were surprised by one of our patrol groups. Our comrades did not hesitate. They opened fire with bazookas and hit one of the racists as he was placing the third antitank mine reinforced with an explosive charge."

Estevao Nhaveni continued: "The South African who was hit let go of what he had in his hands. The bullets continued to rain down. The explosive charge that he was placing on the railway was hit, and there was a violent explosion. The saboteurs nearby were shaken and dispersed."

Pointing to the gruesome remains scattered all around, Commander Nhaveni said: "As you can see, there are still remains of their uniforms and hair and fragments of their bodies shattered by the bazooka fire and their own explosives."

The commander of the Doeroi garrison explained that after the explosion, the survivors in the enemy group took flight, taking their wounded with them. Because of the late hour and the danger of exchanges of fire among the Mozambican forces, a group was organized to begin pursuit the following morning.

"The platoon in question began its search. In the forest it found a trail that the fleeing enemy had taken. There were clear signs of blood from some of the enemy's wounded and traces left by someone passing through with a stretcher."

The counterrevolutionaries left a lot of equipment in the field in addition to the shattered bodies of their men killed in Doeroi. On a map of Manica left behind by the saboteurs, the objectives to be destroyed had been clearly marked in red. The said targets of the racists included economic enterprises that are important to Mozambique's development and that of the other members of the SADCC [expansion unknown]. The Beira-Machipanda railway and the Mozambique-Zimbabwe oil pipeline are among the objectives of the counterrevolution.

Comdr Estevao Nhaveni said: "In some bases destroyed by us, we have found several signs of the racists. Just a few days ago, we saw a South African plane flying through our airspace."

PRIOR CENSORSHIP OF PRESS MEDIA REJECTED

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 26 Oct 81 p 1

[Commentary by Migueis Lopes Junior]

[Excerpts] Something tells me that the mission of a reporter and any other worker in this country is to be permanently dissatisfied with the bit of reality or society with which he operates.

I mean constructive dissatisfaction that is directed toward the struggle for the permanent progress of a people and, through that people, of all peoples.

In a newspaper, that dissatisfaction is reflected in the detection, interpretation, and publicizing of the major and minor obstacles--more or less near at hand--to progress and improvement.

It is relatively easy for a generalized habit of criticizing the newspaper to develop, since a newspaper is palpable and concrete and appears daily in the form of a finished industrial product.

And that is in fact what happens. From A to Z and from sector to sector, "everybody" who has access to a newspaper has something to say about it.

Most of the criticism comprised in that "something" is in fact in the form of "constructive dissatisfaction."

Underlying other kinds of criticism, however, is the desire to silence the weapon of information and reduce it to impotence.

Some people claim that reporters are trained cadres--competent and incapable of making a mistake--forgetting the very simple fact that the "cadre crisis"--if indeed it exists in the People's Republic of Mozambique--does not stop at a newspaper's doors.

The media do make mistakes, just as people in all sectors necessarily do at this stage--and that includes the critics and the sectors to which they belong.

The thing is that in the case of the structures to which the "critics" belong, the mistakes are not detected at birth, nor do they appear in print on the same day they are made. By the time they become visible, they have grown and gotten fat during the months on end that have passed while they were resulting in disaster or a disastrous problem at the economic, social, political, or ideological level.

Other "critics" go even farther, to the point of saying, no more and no less, that prior censorship of the media is needed "to prevent mistakes."

I overlook the fact that such a thing represents a frontal assault on one of the people's gains--freedom of the press.

I overlook the nostalgia for the time--a traumatic one for many reporters, including me--of colonial-fascism's stamp saying "censored" or "approved," which is what such a political project involves.

I simply imagine the kind of paralyzed, bureaucratic, and police society that we would have if a similar system of prior censorship were also established for each of the other sectors.

As a reporter, I feel that regular criticism by those to whom I address myself is an indispensable condition for the development and efficiency of my work.

As far as other "criticisms" and "critics" and the class positions they reflect are concerned, I as a reporter and a Mozambican worker will denounce them and draw attention to them as obstacles and objective attempts to sabotage the advance of the revolution.

NEW AIR FLIGHTS ANNOUNCED--On 1 November 1981, the TTA (Air Transport and Work) will begin regular flights between provincial and district capitals throughout the country from one end to the other. The network includes the main tourist centers (specifically Inhaca, Vilanculos, and Santa Carolina) and will speed up the socioeconomic and tourist development of the regions. The flights will depart from Maputo, Beira, Quelimane, Nampula, and Pemba, with connections for Inhaca, Chokwe, Xai-Xai, Inhambane, Vilanculos, Santa Carolina, and other economic centers in the country. The greater frequency of flights in the central-north region is due to the lack of communications between the various localities in that region, since the roads, in addition to being inadequate, are practically impassable in the rainy season. DEVALUATION OF FRENCH FRANC EXPECTED TO HAVE BAD EFFECT ON ECONOMY

Dakar LE POLITICIEN in French No 71, Oct 81 p 16

[Commentary by Mamadou Wade: "Is Mitterrand Making Fun of Us?"]

[Text] The recent devaluation (or decline in value) of the French franc in the course of readjusting monetary parities within the European Monetary System (EMS) once again poses the problem of France's economic relations (or "cooperation") with countries in the Franc Zone.

With this issue we are starting an investigation into those relations. Rather than waste time on ultra-hackneyed aspects of those relations, we thought it more useful to dwell on the prospects and directions that should stamp relations between Mitterrand's France and the Franc Zone countries, especially Senegal.

The views of the PSF [French Socialist Party] (currently in power) on Third World countries and North-South relations have received a generally warm welcome in our country. These views, very pro-Third World, were the subject of several publications and public statements by leaders and the "brain-trust" of the PS before coming to power, and at the present time they seem to promise substantial changes in relations between France and the Franc Zone countries which will be beneficial for our economies.

To cite one striking example: at an editorial meeting at LE SOLEIL last week the managing editor of the newspaper "asked if France under socialist leadership was really making fundamental changes in its Third World Policy." The journalists present answered in the affirmative, and Mr. Ibrahima Gaye, as reported in the article by Aliou Barry (cf. "Editorial Meeting at LE SOLEIL" in LE SOLEIL of 8 Oct 81), went so far as to claim that "Francois Mitterrand is one of those few heads of state who is actually carrying out everything he promised during his campaign, both in domestic and foreign policy...."

More concretely, looking at Senegal or the other countries of the Franc Zone in particular, we can already point to actions and initiatives by the current French Government which could concretely substantiate or confirm the preemptory judgment of the journalists at LE SOLEIL? As for ourselves, we think those statements are, to say the least, premature, and should be qualified somewhat, at least until those "from the hip" judgments have received some concrete proof. When will people realize once and for all that the facts alone are decisive, and that speeches alone--no matter how spellbinding or charismatic--cannot by themselves change objective reality?

Without second-guessing the future, it seems for the time being that the socialist government of France is reducing the problem of the developing countries to a problem of aid: increasing the latter and improving and relaxing the conditions of its disbursement. If that view of things persists, Mitterrand's government will have completely missed the mark, at least in terms of France's economic relations with the Franc Zone countries.

Senegal and its counterparts in the UMOA [West African Monetary Union] should be working and fighting for their French "big brother" to implement an economic policy which undercuts the structures now in place or supported by longstanding French domination, rather than working for a policy of assistance to the mendicant or philanthropy toward underdeveloped countries such as our own.

Pertinent questions could be asked here and now. In the monetary field, for example, one might ask what modifications, what options the French socialist government sees as an alternative to France's so-called monetary guarantee to the African states in the Franc Zone? In the event the UMOA is kept, and the Franc Zone remains a regional monetary sphere, will the notorious "transactions account" be replaced by other mechanisms that do not have such neocolonial implications, or will it be kept in force with all the advantages which up to now it has procured for France without any real and evident compensation for our associated states? The monetary system presently in force in the Franc Zone is such, for example, that the French economy is protected from the disturbances and economic imbalances that occur in the UMOA countries, while the reverse is not the case. What is the position of socialist France on this problem? What is its position on the fact that the African recipient states cannot derive the financial resources needed for their policies of economic development from the UMOA monetary system?

In a more general way, will our economies continue to be merely complementary to the French economy, "private preserves" for French enterprises which have retained their neocolonial ties to us? In plain words, will Frence continue to milk benefits and economic, political, social profits from our countries...in the same way it has been extorting from them since the colonial era?

These are some points regarding which a clear-cut position on the part of France--something that has not yet been seen--will make it easier to formulate a definitive and defensible assessment of the French socialist government and its relations with the Franc Zone countries in general, and with our own country in particular.

We will try, as time goes on, to analyze these various points and publish the observations and suggestions which occur to us. Initially we will provide our readers with some thoughts on the effects of the recent devaluation of the French franc on the Senegalese economy. A priori, those effects must be harmful to the Senegalese economy, considering the present condition and structure of our foreign trade. But the phenomenon of which one might well take note, in the meantime, is unquestionably the unspeakable behavior of the French socialist government toward the Franc Zone countries when making a decision with such serious implications as devaluation has for their economies.

France's African partners were not given more than one day's notice of the devaluation. Does that mean that Mitterrand, like his predecessors, does not take us seriously? Should we continue, like overgrown children, to subject ourselves to "French cooperation" and to underwrite the costs of policies which, at bottom, are deliberately designed and carried out solely in the interests of France?

MAPUTO EQUIPMENT FAILURE HITS COAL SHIPMENTS

Mbabane THE TIMES OF SWAZILAND in English 3 Nov 81 p 1

[Text] Swaziland stands to lose hundreds of thousands of Emalangeni because of a breakdown of coal loading equipment in Maputo.

Unless the services can be restored, the Swaziland Collieries at Mpaka and the Swaziland Railway will suffer heavy losses.

It is understood the government is considering finding an alternative route for emergency purposes. Minister for Works, Power and Communications, Dr Victor Leibrandt, is holding urgent consultations with the two organisations to work out a solution.

Dr Leibrand said the Swaziland Railways alone stands to lose E50,000 a year if the situation at the Maputo port remains "chaotic" for too long.

The question of the breakdown was high on the agenda during discussions between a delegation led by Dr Leibrandt to Maputo last week.

The delegation tried to identify ways in which Swaziland could offer assistance to the Mozambican government to restore the services.

"Unfortunately very little progress was made," Dr Leibrandt said yesterday. "You see, the port facilities belong to Mozambique and there is very little we can do. It is quite difficult. We will have to find an urgent solution because of the loss in revenue to the coal mines and the railways.

"The Swaziland Railway stands to lose E50,000 a year while the coal is not transported to the importing countries. This means that they are at a standstill," he added.

"We are working as hard as we can and are looking into all the possibilities," he said.

The coal-loading facilities broke down three weeks ago after an accident. Before that 4,000 tonnes of coal were Maputo every day from different countries including Swaziland. The Mozambique government is estimated to be losing E20,000 a day through the stoppage. /para as published/

Matters discussed included arrangements on posts and telecommunications, roads, civil aviation, water resources and improved common services between both countries.

ANC MAN TESTIFIES ON ARMS CHARGE

Mbabane THE TIMES OF SWAZILAND in English 10 Nov 81 p 1

[Article by James Dlamini]

[Text]

A SOUTH African refugee, who is facing charges of unlawful possession of arms of war and threatening to blow up a group of policemen, told a High Court Judge yesterday that he was a member of the African National Congress, but was not involved in military activities and did not know how to use hand grenades.

Giving evidence in his defence, Sipho James Mazibuko, who is charged jointly with George Sipho Nene, said the van in which the grenades were found belonged to the African National Congress of South Africa.

Explaining the circumstances in which the truck came to his possession, Mazibuko told Mr. Justice D.D. Will that he had been asked to drive a group of five A.N.C. officials to the Mozambique border and then return the car to Manzini.

He said he had been visited by a senior official of the ANC, Mr. Edward Ndiyane, "who is a top man in the region."

"He came to my flat in Mabele Heights in Manzini and found me with my friend (Nene). He asked me to drive him to Lomahasha and drop him near the border so that I could rive back with the organisation's truck," he said.

"I asked my friend to accompany me because I did not want to be alone when I drove back," he said. "My friend is a refugee, but he is not a member of the ANC,' he said. Mazibuko said the truck collided with an animal 300 metres from the border.

It was 8 p.m. The ordered me to pick the grenade up, but when I examined it closely he panicked. I heard him shout; 'what is he doing' and they scattered around. also panicked and ran away," he said.

"I ran and skipped the border into Mozambique, where I was arrested by soldiers. I did not know about the existence of the grenades, but I feared I might be held responsible," he said. "But I came back and was collected by the station commander at the border gate."

Defence attorney, Mr. Victor Dlamini, said the police decided to make up a story about the accused threatening to blow them up in order to justify their running away for no good reason.

"They are ashamed about the fact that they ran away," he said.

The case continues on Thursday.

Mozambique-bound team proceeded on foot, while the two remained to seek help to fix the truck.

"We went to the police station in Lomahasha to see if we could get a replacement of a fanbelt which had been broken in the accident. This could help us drive to Manzini," he said. But at the police station, one constable asked them if they were members of the ANC and started searching their truck.

Mazibuko said he was surprised when the station commander mentioned hand-grenades. "Another policeman asked me where the "mother" of a revolver chamber which was in his hand was hidden. "By its mother he was referring to the revolver," Mazibuko told the court.

He denied that he threatened to blow up the station commander and his men with a hand-grenade.

PROGRESS OF NEW NATIONAL HOUSING POLICY BILL REPORTED

Mbabane THE TIMES OF SWAZILAND in English 10 Nov 81 p 1

[Text]

A NEW national housing policy for Swaziland is in its final draft stage, according to a spokesman for housing branch of the Ministry of Works, Power and Communications.

Reacting to an editorial in last Friday's Times, he said the question of a national housing policy was in the minds of many people in Swaziland - from the man in the street to the rural dweller.

Beginning with the first self-housing scheme in Msunduza One, he said an outline for a housing policy was being worked out.

He conceded that many problems had been encountered in the development of Msunduza One. The problems he said had been experienced from the planning stages of the unit there right up to their completion.

Initially, Msunduza One was an area that was uroccupied almost uninhabitable, but the levelling of the area turned it into an ideal spot. He said this self-help scheme was the first of its kind in the Kingdom, and with the aid of various government agencies working closely together may become the prototype of future housing trends in Swaziland.

The problems inherent in policies formulated by the colonial administration concerning housing were not geared to mass exodus of rural people moving into urban centres. The urbanisation of Swaziland put tremendous pressure on existing facilities, town councils were over their heads in attempting to provide municipal services and town planning was almost non-existent. After independence, the Swaziland government were given the gigantic task of providing housing for its urban populations.

With the sprawling urban townships that surround Mbabane, the government was over taxed in providing housing, and municipal services. But other attempts on varius housing schemes, such as the now defunct National Housing Corporation, proved a dismal failure. The national Housing Corporation is now just a small office that exists only for the collection of rents and not providing much else.

Msunduza is an area that needed housing desperately, so the government set up its first low housing scheme in that area. After the successful competition of Msunduza, the idea for another housing self help housing scheme was developed.

However, unlike Msunduza One, which was completely unoccupied land, Msunduza Two was inhabited by squatters.

This situation called for a unique way in which a low cost housing scheme could be developed. First, the Housing Branch of Ministry of Works Power and Communications had to resolve the problems of relocating large groups of people to clear the area for development. But this met with stiff resistance from inhabitants, who had been given a one year temporary land lease by the Hhohho District Commissioner.

The Housing Branch went into the area and surveyed existing houses and amount of land that surrounded each house and beginning breaking the area into plots. Once that is done, planning of roads and water and sewerage lines could be done. He said the residents were shown the plot plan and people whose houses fell on the planned roadways had to be removed. These families were relocated to Sidwashini North, the project that is now underway. In this way, the Housing Branch and squatters from Msunduza were equally satisfied.

LEGAL WRANGLE ENDS DUBE CASE

Mbabane THE TIMES OF SWAZILAND in English 10 Nov 81 p 1

[Text]

THE trial of former crimebuster Jeremiah Dube, who is facing a ritual murder charge with three others, ended yesterday with a legal wrangle betweeen the prosecution and the defence.

When Crown Counsel, Mr. Adrinka Donkoh, closed the case, advocate Vernon Berrange asked Mr. Justice C.J.M. Nathan to discharge the accused. Mr. Berrange said the two key Crown witnesses Ndodenye Simelane and Elliot Masuku had been "contradictory and lying throughout the trial."

Mr. Berrange argued that, in all material respects, the two witnesses evidence had been discredited.

Mr. Menzi Phuphuma, appearing for the "inyanga", Mampembe Simelane, who is alleged to have co-ordinated the conspiracy said there had been a great effort to get the evidence of Masuku to tally with that of Simelane (the witness).

He asked the judge to take this into account in assessing the credibility of the witnesses. "None can corroborate the other," Mr. Phuphuma said.

Mr. Peter Dunseith, appearing for George Chibi, who is alleged to have struck the fatal blow on the head of the deceased with a blunt iron bar pointed out as an illustration of the inconsistency in the crown case that: Masuku said Dube arrived at the scene of the murder before the blow was struck but turned round later and said he arrived after the killing. A third version was given by Simelane, who said Dube actually arrived after the body had also been mutilated.

To refute an argument by Mr. Berrange, that Dube, who was chief of the district crime investigation branch in Siteki at the time could not have been as foolish as to commit a murder in the presence of 10 potential witnesses, Mr. Donkoh pointed out that it was almost a tradition to involve many people in this type of crime. "A situation must be created where the victim will not suspect anything," Mr. Donkoh said.

"More people have to be around so that it looks normal. The other women whom she trusted helped to lure her to deviate her normal path," he said.

Mr. Donkoh alleged that in 1977 there was an attempt to prevent the case coming to court. "Threats were made and a white policeman is alleged to have threatened one of the witnesses with drowning in the Usutu River if he said anything," he said.

The decision whether the accused have a case to answer will be delivered on November 19.

Dube, Mampembe Simelane, Idah Sihlongonyane and George Chibi are alleged to have murdered 60-year-old Rhodesiah Nxumalo in 1975.

SWAZIS LIVING IN SOUTH AFRICA SEND GREETINGS TO KING

Mbabane THE TIMES OF SWAZILAND in English 9 Nov 81 p 1

[Text]

KING Sobhuza II received loyal greetings from hundreds of Swazis living in South Africa.

The greetings were conveyed to the King by 15 Swazi Chiefs whose domains became South African territory when international boundaries were drawn many years ago.

The chiefs and their subjects still pay their allegiance to Swazi Kings.

The King had a long meeting with the chiefs, accompanied by some of their subjects at Lozitha Palace on Saturday. Most of the chiefs came from the Eastern-Transvaal and the rest from Kwa-Zulu. Some chiefs who did not attend were represented by their "tindvuna".

The chiefs paid tribute to the King and congratulated him on his Diamond Jubilee, among other subjects discussed at the meeting.

Meanwhile, several thousand teachers milled about at Masundvini Royal residence waiting for the King to come and address them. The teachers responded overwhelmingly to a Royal summons for a mass meeting in Masundvwini, but the King was unable to come because of the meeting with the chiefs.

Explaining to the teachers later, the Prime Minister, Prince Mabandla, explained that the King wanted to meet the chiefs first, not because they were more important than the teachers, but because they came from far away.

Prince Mabandla explained that the King had hoped that the meeting with the chiefs would not take as long as it did. He was hoping to address the teachers at 4p.m. on Saturday.

"You must regard these people (the chiefs) as some of us, who were unfortunately separated from us by the boundaries," he said. "Many more Swazis from South Africa intended to come and the meeting might have been bigger, but they were turned back at the border because they either had no passports or had not had a cholera inoculation in time," Prince Mabandla told the teachers.

Prince Mabandla told the teachers that the King was eager to meet them in person. "He got up early in the morning because he wanted to complete th scheduled meetings, be other people didn't come i time," Prince Mabandla said.

Prince Mabandla also announced that the King would be going into seclusion soon after next week for the pending "Incwala ceremony." During this period of seclusion, the King does not engage in any official duties. He will meet the teachers at a date to be announced.

RAILWAY EXCHANGE YARD--The new railway exchange yard at Siweni, near the Mozambique border, has "stabilised" the movement of sugar exports to Maputo, commercial manager of the Swaziland Sugar Association, Mr W. Murray said yesterday. The new exchange yard started operating last month. "It's a wonderful engineering achievement," he said. The yard, which is on the Mbuluzi gauge, 10 kilometres from Mlawula, has relieved the Mozambican authorities of the burden of handling loads from Swaziland. "It's all handled by the Swaziland Railways now," he said. "The situation was a bit chaotic in July and we had to divert two loads to Durban to avoid a pile-up and to avoid letting our customers down overseas," he said. "But that was a temporary measure." The problem was created by a shortage of locomotives. "All the Mozambicans have to do is to take a 74-kilometre drive to the yard, leave the empty trucks to be loaded while they drive the loaded ones to the port," Mr Murray said. This was disclosed by the King himself during his meeting with about 40 chief and some 550 Swazis from South Africa at Lozitha Royal Palace on Saturday. IMPORTANCE OF POLITICAL EDUCATION OF TROOPS STRESSED

[Article by Achille Lollo]

[Excerpts] Lubango, 13 October 1981--During our stay in Cunene with the FAPLA [People's Armed Forces for the Liberation of Angola] fighters, we considered it our duty to meet with the political leadership authorities of the Fifth Political-Military Region with whom we had a positive relationship which helped us to understand the political situation of the Fifth Region. This was very helpful to us in the trips we were able to make to the front battle lines.

The political leadership, as a matter of fact, is the basic structure of a people's army, of an army that is defending the conquests of the revolution, a new army which, recently emerging from guerrilla warfare, is about to become a modern army. It is on this context that we met with the political leadership authorities of the Fifth Political-Military Region.

Before starting the recorded interview with the deputy political commissioner, Victor Enaculo (1st Lieutenant) and Daniel Dala (1st Lieutenant), the Cahama political commissioner, it is necessary to point out that the contribution of the members of the political leadership of this political-military region in carrying out the operational tasks at this stage of the war has been quite high, considering that in addition to defending the fatherland, threatened by the "carcamanos" [derogatory epithet] of Pretoria, members of the political leadership have been quite concerned with increasing even more the political engagement of the fighters for the counteroffersive and on the operational ground that of the people's resistance.

As a matter of fact, all this is a political and organizational situation, present only in revolutionary armies such as the FAPLA, while in capitalist countries "politics" is taboo for soldiers and officers.

In these capitalist societies, they are peons trained for killing or being killed, according to the political games the ruling class in power decides to play, and for which the army is used. Its ranks, made up of soldiers, noncommissioned officers and officers, are not at all engaged or motivated by the wars they have to wage against other peoples.

For this reason, in the capitalist army politics--understood as a method of analysis of military and civilian phenomena of society--is forbidden. There is a priest, the military chaplain who, in addition to taking letters to the families, cannot do anything and is not willing to do anything.

The Angolan army, the FAPLA, is just the opposite of all this, and the national political leadership is the result of the implementation of the revolutionary program of the MPLA-Labor Party at the level of the people's army.

As a matter of fact, the creation of the "new man" which is a part of the process of construction of socialist society, goes beyond the organization of a new type of army, a revolutionary army which politically knows, from top to bottom, the political contents, party motivations and political-military goals that the entire body of fighters has to attain, and this army must fight to strengthen these triumphs.

All this explains why the soldiers, sergeants and officers of the FAPLA continue to fight the South African invader even when the numbers are in favor of the enemy. This also indicates why the FAPLA in Xangongo, Mongua and Ondgiva fought to the edge of survival and still continues to fight. All this is a lesson for South Africans and for the internal enemies of the revolution, because the FAPLA will never raise the white flag, because this army was trained to maintain high the red banner of the revolution. In conclusion, we can say that the maintenance of the troops in counter-offensive for the past 50 days is determined and motivated by the political option of the fighters who, guided by the officials of the national political leadership, carry out the mission to defend the Angolan revolution, to defend the MPLA-Labor Party and the government of the RPA [People's Republic of Angola]--threatened, as always, by imperialism--to defend the native soil invaded by the regular army of the racism Pretoria government and to defend the strong trenches of revolution in Africa.

[Question] In this war situation, what is the action of the political leadership of the Fifth Political-Military Region? What are its tasks, what are its duties and what were the results already reached?

[Answer] During the invasion of South African troops against our young People's Republic of Angola, mainly in this region, the political leadership of the Fifth Region--with its representatives, members of the party and the party youth--strongly acted together with all the officers, sergeants and soldiers to make prevail, in the fighting masses, the policy of our party and government. This was done to raise, in a constant manner, the fighting morale and therefore instill hatred against the enemies of the revolution, be they external or internal.

Within the functional duties of the Fifth Region political leadership, the most worthy of attention was the organization of political work aimed at the increase of fighting readiness of the troops, the fulfillment of tasks of fighting preparation, operational service, military discipline and political and moral study. I want to stress that when we speak of moral and political study we are referring to the study of political and moral state of our personnel, of their education. All this is within the spirit of boundless loyalty to the MPLA-Labor Party, the RPA Government, the spirit of proletarian internationalism and, in sum, the strict observance of the demands of military regulations orders and oaths.

I can say that the political leadership of this region has carried out considerable propaganda activity and especially political study of the situation of this political-military region. On the other hand, continuous contacts have been established with the local organizations of the party and government in order to actively participate in all the activities they carry out and also contribute to the solution of social problems of the entire population of the region, logically within our material possibilities. I can say that the political leadership of the Fifth Region has made every effort to implement the organization of political work of officers, sergeants and soldiers. Thus, we can consider as positive the part of the educational work carried out among the troops before and during the invasion. In spite of some difficulties that persist in the application of all the functional duties of the political leadership due to specific conditions of the region, I want to stress that political and fighting morale of the troops is very good.

[Question] How many members and candidates are there at the present time in the party organization here, in the Fifth Region?

[Answer] According to the count made in our region, in the stage we are now, in the period of reorganization of the units which actively participated in the battles against the enemy. I can say that we have 131 party members and 41 candidates, organized in 61 cells, and 1,664 members of party youth, organized in 154 groups and 16 committees, up to the company level.

[Question] Deputy Commissioner, we would like for you to talk of the party structures within the units and especially of the role they play in those units, which at the present time are engaged in battles against the racist army of South Africa.

[Answer] The basic structures of our party operate according to the provisions of the statutes of MPLA-Labor Party, although with some characteristics proper of the military situation, due to some practical principles.

However, nevertheless they operate with the purpose of raising the fighting and political ability of our troops, instilling patriotic spirit in them and informing them of all the guidelines of our party, of the Commander of Chief Comrade President Jose Eduardo dos Santos, the instructions coming from the Ministry of Defense and the National Political Leadership for the Education of Troops, thus enabling them to actively participate in the fight against the enemies of the Angolan revolution.

[Question] Now that we are living in a war situation, with all its negative aspects, in what way does this political leadership make its presence felt at the front?

[Answer] Immediately after the invasion of the racists, considered to be one of the largest invasions of our country, the political leadership, in line with instructions from high authority and those of the commander of this region, distributed part of its personnel, among them officers, in various units, especially in Cahama.

These, together with political workers who were already there, carried out a specific task for heightening the fighting preparation, instilling in our troops the spirit of attack against the invading racists. I can say that the participation of the officials of this political leadership, and that of various units, was a good and effective participation. We verified that in various units the work carried out, especially in this war situation, was positive.

The agreement also envisages an increase of Cuban cooperation in 1982, with special attention to the sectors of cement, construction of industrial projects and equipment maintenance. There are also plans for the establishment of a joint Angolan-Cuban enterprise for paving and earthworks, as well as greater Cuban assistance to the provincial building enterprise. AUSTERITY MEASURES--Bangui, November 2--Central African Republic head of state General Andre Kolingba announced here Sunday that his Government would take drastic austerity measures to pull the country out of economic "catastrophe" and its humiliating dependence on foreign aid. Civil service wages would be frozen all next year and top priority would be given in the private sector to creating new jobs, he said in a nationwide broadcast two months to the day before coming to power. Other measures are expected to be announced in the next few weeks. General Kolingba said the nation's gross domestic product had fallen by five per cent every year for the past four years and it was expected to fall by even more next year. Already-high unemployment had risen 20 per cent since 1979. More than a third of the budget was financed by foreign aid, a situation which he said "seriously harms our dignity and compromises national independence" as well as any attempt to revive the economy. The Government intended to restore confidence and there would be no attempt to nationalise companies, he said. (A.F.P.) [Text] [Paris AFRICA AFP in English 3 Nov 81 p 23]

GOUKOUNI SAID TO REMAIN PRISONER OF LIBYANS

Paris LE MONDE in French 30 Oct 81 pp 1, 6

/Article by J. C. Pomonti: "The Chadian Crisis"/

/Text/ On the evening of Wednesday, 28 October, a new development occurred in the Chadian crisis, in circumstances that are still not clearly explained, increasing the tension between Paris and Tripoli. Movements by Libyan troops, or troops supporting Libya, were noted in Ndjamena, where it had been believed at one point that President Goukouni Oueddei was in difficulties. However, this Thursday morning the capital was once again calm. Major Jallud, second in command in Libya, indirectly confirmed the existence of a development in the crisis, by suddenly, after meeting with the head of state twice, accusing France of "interference in Chadian affairs" for having wanted to "impose" on Chad an inter-African peace force. Paris had, these last few days, begun to supply logistical aid to Goukouni Oueddei's government.

Can one speak of a "legal" show of force by Colonel Qadhdhafi in order to thwart a French initiative which had the advantage of relying on OAU resolutions? One can ask the question, especially since President Goukouni Oueddei, particularly since his reception at the Palais de l'Elysee in September, had given the impression of standing aloof from Tripoli. Apparently, two tete-a-tetes in Ndjamena with the Chadian president were sufficient for Major Jallud to dissipate the very grave differences between Tripoli and the Chadian chief of state.

At this stage of the test of strength, a "reconciliation" between Libya and Goukouni Oueddei would be even less surprising, since Goukouni Oueddei does not even control the majority of the factions of a noncohesive GUNT /Transitional National Union Government/, while Tripoli has several thousand soldiers at its disposal over a large part of the Chadian territory. Paris' "logistical support"--especially since it is only a question of 25 tons of light weapons and ammunition--is even less able to reestablish any kind of equilibrium since the new members--the people's armed forces of Goukouni Oueddei--are groups of youths, often undisciplined.

In short, Goukouni Oueddei could not resist in the event the Libyans decided--which they apparently have done--to force upon him the solution of their choice. In these circumstances, the French initiatives could have no object other than to force Colonel Qadhahfi to yield to the pressures of the OAU for intervention by an inter-African force.

Tripoli is henceforth not content with accusing Paris of "interference in domestic Chadian affairs" but is also accusing of the same "crime" Khartoum, which is offering hospitality to Hissene Habre's rebels. This was the tone of the message sent on Wednesday by Colonel Qadhdhafi to Arap Moi, acting president of the OAU.

One might wonder if Colonel Qadhdhafi, who should succeed the Kenyan president next year as the head of the pan-African organization, is not taking a serious risk in accusing, almost openly, the OAU of being a party to what it considers a French maneuver. In doing this, he is no doubt counting on the inconsistency shown by the OAU in the past. The Libyan leader knows, moreover, that French military intervention seems to be out of the question. Finally, perhaps he has deemed that by acting quickly he would present France's African partners, who are meeting in Paris next week, with a fait accompli.

Mr Mitterrand, since his accession to the presidency, has not spared any efforts to help Chad to exist. He has even taken certain risks, obviously counting on winning a good number of African nations to his cause, with the hope that Colonel Qadhahfi would be progressively forced to withdraw his troops from Chad. But did he have the means to do this? As usual, the Libyan leader has chosen the law of the strongest, even if he has to listen to the vehement protests of several African capitals.

President Goukouni Oueddei has remained in effect the "prisoner" of the Libyans who, after all, in other circumstances, could probably put up with having a few platoons of Senegalese and Nigerians, sponsored by the OAU, settle on the banks of the Chari, by way of guaranteeing the presence of their troops throughout the rest of Chad.

CALM REPORTEDLY RESTORED TO NDJAMENA

Paris LE MONDE in French 30 Oct 81 p 6

/Article: "Calm Appears Restored to Ndjamena"/

/Text/ In a speech broadcast by Chadian national radio on the morning of 29 October, Major Jallud, the Libyan "number two", called Paris' decision to "impose" an inter-African "peace maintenance" force on Chad an "interference in Chadian domestic affairs". Major Jallud, who spoke on Tuesday and Wednesday with President Goukouni Oueddei, added: "We are in Chad through the wishes of the Chadian government. The day it tells us to leave, we will depart."

The special correspondent of AFP reported that there was complete calm in Ndjamena on Thursday morning. President Goukouni Oueddei was to meet there during the day with the weekly council of GUNT /Transitional National Union Government/ ministers. There was no sign of any Libyan military presence in the Chadian capital.

The Chadian conflict, brought back to the center of the news last week with an appeal by Mr Mitterrand for an "emergency" inter-African force and the beginning of "logistical support" for Goukouni Oueddei, was on Wednesday the subject of somewhat confused reports which tended to lend support to the thesis according to which the Libyans were supposed to have enlisted their local allies, in particular Acyl Ahmat, the Chadian minister of foreign affairs, who returned to Ndjamena in Major Jallud's plane, against President Goukouni Oueddei, who was reported to have disappeared, wrongly, it seems.

We learned, in effect, during the day, that a column of armed supporters of Acyl Ahmat that had arrived from Mongo, in the center of Chad, and which was supported by Libyan armored vehicles, had reached Ndjamena, where the Libyan military presence was in fact strengthened. Also on Wednesday, the French Ministry of Defense stated that the commander of the French contingent stationed at Bouar (Central African Republic), not far from the Chadian border, had, on its own authority, placed its troops in a state of alert "as a preventive measure."

Finally, several witnesses noted the serious tensions in the Chadian capital, particularly between the Libyan soldiers on the one hand and, on the other, the armed supporters of President Goukouni Oueddei as well as those of Vice President Kamougue, generally considered to be the head of the "southern" faction.

AFP reported this Thursday morning that the people of Ndjamena were going about their business normally and that the guard at Goukouni Oueddei's residence had not been reinforced. This news agrees with that broadcast the day before by the Libyan press agency Jana, which denied the "alleged deterioration ot the situation in Chad."

GOUKOUNI REPORTEDLY CONVINCED LIBYAN TROOPS WILL WITHDRAW

Paris LE MONDE in French 4 Nov 81 p 3

/Article: "Goukouni Oueddei Reaffirms That Libyan Troops Will Withdraw From Chad Before Year End"/

/Excerpts/ Upon his arrival in Paris in the late afternoon of Monday, 2 November, Goukouni Oueddei reiterated his conviction that the Libyan forces will leave Chad before the end of the year. "Colonel Qadhdhafi has given his word on this subject," stated the president of the GUNT /Transitional National Union Government/. He refused to comment on the remarks made that very morning in Ndjamena by his minister of foreign affairs, Acyl Ahmat, who stated that he was "against the departure of Libyan soldiers," as he thought "the conditions for this departure have not been met, since Chad has not obtained, on its side, the necessary guarantees to assure the maintenance of safety throughout the land.."

Finally, the Association of Friends of Chad* came out, in a communique, against "a method of informing which does not have information as its only goal," following the unfounded rumors of a coup d'etat in Chad which were circulating in Paris last week. The Friends of Chad think it "important" that light be shed on this subject.

MAIN LINES OF THREE NEW BILLS BEFORE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

Djibouti LA NATION DE DJIBOUTI in French 22 Oct 81 pp 1, 14

[Text] Following the special Cabinet meeting held the evening before and at the request of the president of the republic, the National Assembly met in a special session on Monday, 19 October, to pass three bills that will have important repercussions on the country's social and political future because they provide a very precise definition of national political activity for the coming months: on the one hand, by spelling out the method of electing deputies to the National Assembly, to be done at the latest by the beginning of July 1982, as well as the conditions for granting Djiboutian nationality, and on the other hand, by instituting a "general mobilization of all citizens, both men and women," for the task of building the nation.

In our coming issues, we shall go into detail about these new laws, whose texts are too long to be published in their entirety in this edition, but we can already give their main lines and principal points.

General Mobilization

"Preventing the political effort of the fight against underdevelopment to be rendered sterile by useless controversies."

The above phrase, taken from the justifications for the bill on the general mobilization, seems to us to clearly give the meaning of the law which could be translated into everyday language as "enough talk; let's get to work and discuss it later." In fact, while the salient feature of this law is the (provisional) ban on political parties, one should nevertheless emphasize the spirit revealed in the last sentence of the exposition of motives:

"The government of the republic hopes that with the passage of this law, it will have created a veritable boost of the national energy and that a true process of self-development will begin, through the unity of all sons of our nation."

Let there be no mistake about it: This desire is not a mere statement of intention and the reading of the first three articles (especially the third) of the bill proves it:

Article 1. The National Assembly hereby resolves the national mobilization of all citizens, men and women, in order to promote the economic and social transformation of the nation, the strengthening of its sovereignty and unity and the democratic construction of its institutions.

Article 2. A program will be set up to develop jobs, a reliable food supply, literacy training and economic independence, within the framework of international and regional cooperation and respect for the neutrality of the republic, as well as the traditions of the national community.

Article 3. All powers are hereby conferred on the government for the implementation of the national mobilization.

In particular, it will be able to order the requisition of persons and their assignment to tasks and jobs in any place appointed for them.

It will therefore be noted that through this law passed by the National Assembly, the government endows itself with the material means to involve the entire population in the task of national construction.

As for democratic debate, it is in no way banned, as stipulated by this law, which states that "no one may be prosecuted or harassed because of his opinions." Freedom of association as well as freedom of opinion is respected, but in order that no one might "engage in propaganda contrary to national unity, sovereignty and the neutrality of the Republic of Djibouti," the organization of this democratic debate is entrusted to the People's Rally for Progress (RPP), which is no longer a political party, but "an institutional place in which the necessary democratic debate takes place, while ensuring the peaceful mobilization of all the people in order to overcome poverty and underdevelopment."

The role of the RPP is defined in Article 4:

"It ensures within itself a democratic debate between the different social, cultural, economic and regional groups of the national community, as well as their fair representation, free expression and the right to make proposals."

Code on Djiboutian Nationality

"Preventing too great of an influx of immigrants, which could destabilize (the) country or safeguard the interests (of the) nationals."

The presentation of the reasons for the proposed "code on Djiboutian nationality" unambiguously classifies our country, with its "over 10 percent immigrants," among those which..."in order to prevent too great of an influx of immigrants," are forced to apply "restrictive measures."

The Republic of Djibouti, "considered by immigrants as a haven of peace and prosperity" (even if this prosperity is completely relative), is, in fact, threatened by an invasion that could lead the country to anarchy. As the country's authorities have declared repeatedly before international organizations (see the speech by Minister of Interior Idriss Farah Abaneh to the committee of the HCR [High Commission on Refugees]), our own country is sufficiently concerned with its own problems and cannot take on the tens of thousands of people who are not only poverty-stricken, but who are unproductive most of the time and without education or professional training. Granting them Djiboutian nationality would be to commit the country's responsibility to them and agree to take on a task that is quite obviously beyond us, one that belongs to the international community.

Whence the need for this law that defines the possibilities of acquiring Djiboutian nationality, without failing, naturally, to recognize the status of those who have it, either through birth or because of their situation before or at the time of independence (inhabitants of neighboring countries, soldiers in the national army, and so on).

The law is not intended to be a door that will be systematically closed in the faces of all foreigners, because in addition to the rights granted to married persons or children, it foresees the possibility of granting Djiboutian nationality to "individuals who, by virtue of their ability or talent, have rendered or can render important services to the Republic of Djibouti."

Election of Deputies

"Avoiding any risk of confrontations between ethnic groups making up the republic."

No one will be astonished at the appearance of this law, which was to organize the coming legislative elections, since the end of the current deputies' term is approaching. It is more instructive to go into detail about this law, which "maintains the special nature of the single electoral district for the entire territory of the republic." In fact, if the ways of electing the members of the National Assembly do not change, this new law provides us with an opportunity to understand the reasons for the methods, particularly the reason for the "single electoral district." The presentation of reasons in the bill explains the need to "prevent the creation of any election stronghold based on ethnic groups."

It is here that one must emphasize the importance of the role that has fallen to the People's Rally for Progress (it will be surprising to see the bill use the expression "political party," banished by the law on the general mobilization). The presentation of reasons stipulates the electoral mission of the RPP: "...so that there may be no confrontation harmful to the very life of our young republic, only the People's Rally for Progress will present a complete list of candidates, after consulting all appendices.

"The natives of different districts, naturally, but elected out of a single list and in a single district, appointed by the same political movement, the deputies will therefore be able to work together in the country's general interest. Each one must realize that he represents much more and much better than a fraction of the people, but the nation as a whole."

On a purely practical level, it will be noted that "the Assembly is made up of 65 members elected by direct universal suffrage for 5 years" (Article 1), and that "except in the case of dissolution, general elections take place within the 60 days following the expiration of powers....") (Article 2), which means that since the current deputies were elected on 8 May 1977, elections must take place before 8 July 1982. Article 8 stipulates that "the order to summon the voters must come at least 40 days before the day of the elections" and we must therefore remember the date of the next legislative elections before the end of the month of May.

'AFP' CORRESPONDENT DESCRIBES SITUATION IN ERITREA

NC130813 Paris AFP in English 1120 GMT 12 Nov 81

[By Marie-Therese Delboulbes]

[Text] Asmara, Northern Ethiopia, 12 Nov (AFP)--Africa's longest guerrilla war is still going on after 20 years, in the view of the rebels fighting to win independence for Ethiopia's Province of Eritrea.

But for the Ethiopian authorities the fighting is virtually over.

"The big problem right now is not fighting the rebels, because there are only a few pockets of resistance, and this will continue for some time, but reconstruction and rehabilitation," according to Major Dawit Wolde-Giorgis, the leading government official in Eritrea.

However, local security measures are still strict, and in Asmara itself all public buildings are heavily guarded, especially the villas hidden among Bougainvillea trees where the Soviet advisers live.

Two months ago the 7:00 PM curfew, which had been in effect for seven years, was changed to 11:00 PM, and the Port of Mitsiwa, Ethiopia's second maritime outlet after Aseb, is active late into the night.

Local markets are also busy, and no notable military activity serves as a reminder that fierce fighting took place not so long ago around Nafka, in the mountainous desert north of Asmara.

Nafka was the "last battle," according to a leader of the popular front for the liberation of Eritrea (PFLE), which claimed to have killed or wounded 500 Ethiopian troops there at the beginning of October.

But at the hospital of nearby Keren the military wing is almost empty, and one doctor said the two field-surgery units supplied by East Germany had been virtually unused for 2 years.

Major Dawit insisted the area had been "liberated" by Ethiopia, and though there might be a concentration of guerrillas in one part they had no strength in Nafka.

The major, who left the army 13 years ago, represents the commission to organise the party of the working people of Ethiopia (COPWE). He thought that in time the rebels would give up their struggle, and asserted, "they are trying to exterminate each other."

According to authorities, 1,000 rebels surrendered in October, most of them members of the Eritrean Liberation Front (ELF), which is more conservative and Muslim than the PFLE.

Government and diplomatic sources say the two movements have spent most of the year fighting each other, and many ELF members fled to Sudan, where they were disarmed.

The rebels are winning over no further recruits and the secessionist movement is "a dying force" in Major Dawit's opinion.

But he admits that there are "small bands of guerrillas moving around, specially in the rural areas, planting mines and bombs, destroying schools and bridges."

Traffic still only moves in convoys on Eritrean roads and the security measures give the impression that authorities still fear terrorist acts. But most military activity is now in the south, in the Tigray and Wello regions astride the Addis Ababa-Asmara Road.

Last month the Ethiopian 21st division was moved into this area to deal with a resurgence of activity by rebels of the Tigray Liberation Front, and the administrator of the Province of Yeju, in Welo, was killed along with several members of his staff.

Special units trained in mountain warfare were sent to back up the local garrison.

But in Eritrea the fighting has given way to a massive propaganda campaign which is now apparently beginning to bear fruit, "the conflict cannot be militarily solved. We are working on building the confidence of the people," said COPWE's specialist in ideology Girmai Ghebreyesus.

A radio station started broadcasting in Tigrigna, the Eritrean language, last Sunday and will publicise widely the government's amnesty proposals. However Mr Girmai stressed there was no question of a referendum or special privileges for Eritrea.

The recent strengthening of ties between Addis Ababa and Khartoum has also borne fruit. Khartoum has taken "a very firm position" and Sudan "is no longer a base area," Major Dawit asserted, adding, "we cannot blame the Sudanese if guerrillas are going in and out."

Ethiopia's weak point is not having enough jobs to attract Eritrean refugees back from Sudan, Major Dawit said. "We need millions and millions of dollars," he added in an appeal for rapid assistance from "friendly" countries from both East and West, including the United States.

In Asmara itself, Ethiopia's second city, industries are operating, and last year one of the largest textile factories--once Italian owned but now nationalised--started exporting tee-shirts to West Germany. But at Keren, war damage is still plainly visible and the suburbs of Massawa look as if they were hit by an earthquake, more than three years after a PFLE siege of the port was lifted.

'AFP' CORRESPONDENT TALKS WITH FORMER ERITREAN REBELS

Paris AFP in English 2116 GMT 12 Nov 81

[By Marie-Therese Delboulbes]

[Text] Asmara, 12 Nov (AFP)--About 4,000 Eritrean guerrillas laid down their arms in the 12 months to September, according to Ethiopian officials in this region, and about 1,000 more gave themselves up in October.

Last month some 2,000 former nationalist fighters were released from detention after varying periods of political re-education.

Girmai Ghebreyesus, the man in charge of ideological matters in Eritrea, said that the former guerrillas were "joining increasingly, not only because of our propaganda but because they hear the word from their villages and they trust their relatives."

In theory the Ertireans spend three months in a "shelter" and then go home to their villages.

Three weeks ago Romana Ibrahim, 19, arrived in the women's shelter in Asmara after fighting for four years in the 52d battalion of the Eritrean Liberation Front (ELF). For the past year she had been fighting not only the Ethiopian army but the rival Eritrean Peoples Liberation Front (EPLF).

She said that the "elf is so weak it is almost not existing."

It must be pointed out that virtually all the guerrillas interviewed--through an interpreter--belonged to the elf, and almost all of them said the same thing.

There were 35 women in Romana's 350-strong group.

She marched for 3 days to get to Tesseney, 300 kms (180 miles) west of here near the Sudanese border, where she handed in her Kalashnikov.

Hidaat Berkhe, who seems a lot younger then her 19 years, also spent four years with the elf, as a nurse. Three months ago she took refuge in Sudan after a clash with the EPLF, and says that her brigade was disarmed by the Sudanese.

According to Hidaat she was fighting for socialism in the first place, and after that for an independent Eritrea. But then, she says, she discovered that the Ethiopian revolution was also fighting for socialism. She declined to reply when asked whether she wanted a referendum, or regional autonomy for Eritrea, but perhaps she did not understand the question.

None of the former guerrillas we met had completed more than primary education.

While the girls live in town in a modestly furnished house, the larger group of men are camped in old warehouses in the Asmara suburbs where security is strict--for their own safety, our guide said.

But some of them were outside the compound, talking to members of their family. Many of them still wore the camouflage dress they had in the bush, and they all sleep on mats. At the moment there are 318 of them, but we were told there had been as many as 800.

One of the newest arrivals was Berhane Negasi, a 33-year-old villager who said he had been forced to join the elf. He was the oldest in the group.

"From the Sahel (to the North of Asmara) up to the border of Sudan it was fighting all year round," he said. On and off his unit clashed with the EPLF.

During his last encounter with the EPLF, in July, he was wounded in the stomach--he had previously been wounded by the Ethiopians--and was treated in the Sudanese frontier village of Kasdsale.

He is married and has two children whom he has not seen for 4 years. He wants to go home and join the militia being set up by the Ethiopians, known as the revolutionary guards in Asmara and elsewhere as the peoples' army.

Ghebre Tensae Haile, 23, would prefer to join the army. He is one of the rare former members of the EPLF in the camp, where he has been for six months now.

He wants to fight, he says. When asked if he had friends on the other side the replied: "Many died, others went to Sudan. I hope the others will change sides. If they are against my principles they cannot be my friends."

All those we spoke to said that they had been mistaken. But none of them seemed to have deep motivations.

FIGHTING IN ERITREA--Khartoum, 10 Nov (MENA)--Fierce fighting is taking place between the Ethiopia forces, backed by bombers and fighter planes, tanks and armored cars, with the forces of the Eritrean Peoples Liberation Front of Eritrea in the Carcabat area. The director of the front's office in Khartoum, Muhammad Sa'id, has stated that the Ethiopian forces mounted a wide-scale attack at the beginning of last week with the object of destroying the forces of the popular front for the liberation of Eritrea but that the front's forces repulsed the Ethiopian forces' attack and launched a counterattack last Sunday. The front's forces, Sa'id added, shot down an Ethiopian Soviet-made Mig-23 near Asmara and killed 500 Ethiopian soldiers, wounded 650 and arrested 23 others. In a statement to the Mena correspondent, Sa'id declared that the purpose of the Ethiopian forces, which consisted of 23,000 soldiers helped by Soviet and Cuban experts, was to open a new battlefront, but that the Eritrean fighters foiled the attempt, destroyed four tanks and seized a Soviet-made truck, four transmitting sets and large quantities of light- and medium-caliber weapons. MOVEMENT AGAINST 'DISSIDENTS' GAINS MOMENTUM

Nairobi THE WEEKLY REVIEW in English 30 Oct 81 pp 6-7

[Text] A POLITICAL campaign appears to be gathering momentum against so-called dissidents in Kenya. It had its most forceful expression last week at a fund raising ceremony in Kikuyu at which 20 MPs, including four cabinet ministers, condemned what they termed anti-government elements and warned that attempts to disturb the peace would be "crushed". As is usual at public meetings of this nature, no names were named, so it is not clear exactly who the elements that will be crushed are, but a general guide to the probable cause of the meeting's indignation was the condemnation of authors of the seditious, clandestine, leaflet which was distributed in some parts of Nairobi a few weeks attacking the government and in particular the minister for constitutional and home affairs, Mr. Charles Njonjo. (See WR October 9). One of the ministers at the meeting, Mr. Stanley Oloitipitip, defended Njonjo against his detractors who, he said, were jealous of Njonjo's enormous contribution to Kikuyu constituency and to the country as a whole in the short time in which he has been an MP.

The campaign against dissidents was not confined to Kikuyu politics. At the harambee meeting were guests from all over the country. There was Mr. Joseph Kamotho, minister for higher education and MP for Kangema in Murang'a District; there was Mr. Elijah Mwangale, minister for tourism and MP for Bungoma East; there was Mr. Juma Boy, secretary-general of Cotu and MP for Kwale Central; the chief whip, Mr. Said Hemed, and leaders from many districts outside Central Province. It is most likely that the number of MPs and non-parliamentary leaders who will join in the anti-dissident campaign, which for the time being seems to have as one of its aims the defence of Njonjo against his detractors, will swell in numbers, and it is quite probable that the momentum of the campaign could have far reaching implications for both parliamentary and Kanu party politics.

Most campaigns of this nature have in the past served many purposes. Not all leaders agree on who is a dissident and who is not. Traditionally, national campaigns against dissidents in Kenya have been reflected in political tugs of war at the constituency or local council levels which are usually at their most acrimonious during election campaign periods. As far as the government is concerned, dissidents are those who have been critical of government policy, but for individual political leaders, dissidents may simply be those who threaten their respective parliamentary or local government elective posts.

'DAILY OBSERVER' BANNED--Monrovia, November 4--The Military Government of Liberia today suppressed the independent newspaper DAILY OBSERVER for the second time in a year for what it called "not working in the interests of our revolution and country." The move follows a report today by the newspaper about a group of exiles from Guinea in Liberia and elsewhere, in which the exiles called for immediate abolition of the one-party state in Guinea, Liberia's northern neighbour. Liberian Head of State Samuel K. Doe told the paper's proprietor, Kenneth Best, that he was closing down the OBSERVER until it produced the man who had been identified as spokesman for the group. The OBSERVER report quoted teacher and journalist Sheik Mohamed Kone, who spoke of 200 members of "Concerned Citizens of Guinea in Exile." Mr. Doe said in a letter to the OBSERVER's owner that after "repeated warnings to be responsible in dealing with issues in your paper, you have failed to take my advice." He added that "in view of the Guinea-Liberia relationship, to which I attach great importance, your paper will remain closed until such time I deem necessary to remove the ban." The DAILY OBSERVER was closed temporarily in July after it published a statement from students in support of a national student leader who had been declared banned. (A.F.P.) FISEMA CONGRESS: STATEMENT ON ECONOMY, POLITICS REPORTED

[Text] "For trade union collaboration to regroup worker strength around the revolution so that they can develop the economy and social matters."

From 25 to 27 September last, FISEMA [Malagasy Federation of Trade Unions] held its 6th congress, which was associated with the celebration of its own 25th anniversary and the 45th anniversary of the French CGT [General Labor Confederation] from which it sprang.

In addition, this congress is situated in a difficult context, from the national point of view (unemployment, reduced buying power, disorganization of food supply....) as well as from the international viewpoint (crisis of the great capitalist powers "which is accentuating the financial crisis and the worldwide crisis in means of production").

Thus, during this congress FISEMA studied these problems particularly closely, especially the acts of economic sabotage perpetrated to dishearten the workers. To quote a few of these acts of sabotage: the flight abroad of owners of enterprises, delay in ordering raw materials and the spare parts needed for proper functioning of the factories, so as to bring about worker lay-offs and a decrease in production; making expenditures larger than income to avoid paying the workers; disregard of laws concerning workers' rights (unwarranted dismissal of union chairmen and personnel delegates); provocation of conflicts among workers in various trade union or political organizations to create a tense atmosphere within enterprises, which cannot but have an impact on production; personnel changes, sudden switches in work methods....

"All these acts of sabotage," affirms the 6th FISEMA Congress, "prove that the imperialists are aiming at the destruction of the Malagasy economy, the foundation for success of the revolution."

After this preliminary study, FISEMA tackles various topics in connection with the National Front for the Defense of the Revolution: "It is time to redetermine who should be members and what the responsibilities of the Front should be"; on national unity: "The politicians and the people must know that it is not easy to rectify the situation of unbalanced development in the regions, which results from colonization." The Front has a great duty to perform in seeking for the means of strengthening national unity and the oneness of the Malagasy state; on democratic and trade union rights and dialogue: "FISEMA insists that all trade union organizations be given the rights and privileges granted to unions affiliated with the Front's organizers; representation of Malagasy workers in the ILO, the OAU, CNAPS [National Social Welfare Fund], OSTIE [expansion unknown], in union retraining programs, the possibility of using RTM [Malagasy Radio and Television]...."

The 6th FISEMA Congress also makes various suggestions for the economic and social recovery of Madagascar.

LIBYA DONATES LANGUAGE LABORATORY TO UNIVERSITY

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 16 Oct 81 pp 1,2

[Text] A complete modern languages laboratory was delivered yesterday morning to the University of Madagascar (Department of Letters) by the Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriya (JALPS). It happened at the end of a quiet ceremony in which Ministers Ignace Rakoto (Higher Education and Scientific Research) and Said Ali Koussay (Youth and Sports) and the president of the Madagascar/Libya Association took part.

The delivery of this contemporary modern language laboratory, costing over 35 million Malagasy francs, falls within the framework of the cultural accord signed in 1976 between Libya and Madagascar. Two Libyan Arab teachers will soon arrive in Antananarivo [Tananarive] to teach Arabic, which as some people know has become an international language officially used in all the big international conferences including those of the United Nations. Saleh Ramadan, member of the People's Bureau, in charge of information, and Mr Mahadi, member of the People's Bureau in charge of cultural affairs, explained on this occasion the reasons why Libya placed such equipment at the disposal of the University of Madagascar: the cultural accords in question indeed provide for the establishment in Madagascar of a Libyan Arab cultural center, an Islamic center, and some form of technical assistance in the teaching of Arabic.

We note that Malagasy of Arab origin are estimated at 1 million.

The various speakers at the end of this event expressed pleasure at the present development of closer Libyan-Malagasy relations. It is expected, incidentally, that President Didier Ratsiraka's recent official visit to Tripoli will contribute to its furtherance as well.

The laboratory in question, planned to accommodate about 40 students, is installed in a rather comfortable room. With carpeting, if you please!

THIRD FIRE REPORTED IN PORT OF TOAMASINA

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 17 Oct 81 p 1

[Report by Paul Manjakavelo: "Fire in the Port of Toamasina"]

[Text] For the third time, a fire broke out at the Toamasina Port Exploitation Company (SEPT). If memory serves, the settings for the three fires were pier A twice and pier C once.

The first fire claimed as victim one of the three warehouses on pier A. On that occasion, no information was revealed as to the contents of the warehouse. And neither RTM [Malagasy Radio and Television] nor the newspapers gave any hint of it.

A few years later, a twin warehouse situated on the east side of pier C fell prey to the flames. As before, nothing was revealed and rumors abounded.

And last 8 October, around 1300 hours, another fire targeted the pier A warehouse. Some time ago, this warehouse was fitted up for banana loading. Then it was remodeled as offices, reportedly to accommodate administrative and commercial management, which had begun to put in various pieces of furniture and documents last 7 October. The fire, which broke out on the upper floor reportedly destroyed all the contents. It was thanks to the tugboat "Vaventy" that the fire did not spread to other buildings.

We note that it is not known what became of the 112 tons of sugar and the 1,353 tons of salt that were on the ground floor of the warehouse.

TOTAL COLORED BUDGET OF R21,88 MILLION PROPOSED

Windhoek WINDHOEK OBSERVER in English 12 Nov 81 pp 1-2

[Article by David Pieters: "Barnes Tables R21,88m Budget"]

[Text] THE COLOURED Opposition Liberal Party of Mr Andrew Kloppers suffered a second round defeat in its present confrontation with Mr Barney Barnes's ruling Labour Party in the Coloured Legislative Assembly in Khomasdal yesterday.

Two motions tabled by the Liberals earlier in the current session lapsed yesterday when the Opposition was not present in the House to put its motions and Mr Barnes tabled an Additional Appropriation Budget which countered allegations of incompetence against his Party's Administration.

A motion calling for a judicial commission of inquiry into the affairs of the Barnes Administration tabled by Mr Kloppers on Tuesday, lapsed at the end of yesterday's sitting when it came up on the order of the day, but after the Liberals had staged a walkout at the commencement of the debate on the Additional Appropriation Budget of R1,8 m for the current financial year.

An opposition motion tabled by Mr Any Kloppers Junior last week urging the House to call upon the AG Mr Danie Hough, the Ministers' Council and the SA Government to speed up a final settlement for SWA also lapsed for the same reason.

Mr Barnes tabled an Additional Appropriation from the Coloured Administration's own savings of R1,8m bringing the total Coloured Budget to R21,88 m for the current financial year.

LARGEST EVER

This is the largest annual amount ever to be expended on SWA's Coloureds in any one year.

Mr Barnes, as well as Mr Harry Booysen, MEC for Education, remarked that it was a fine achievement for the Labour Administration to have managed a saving from own sources in its first independent Budget since the inception of a Coloured second-tier Authority, which was presented in the form of an Additional Appropriation yesterday.

"This is a fine achievement for the Coloured Administration", Mr Barnes said considering that these savings were effected during conditions of economic growth in adversity for SWA as a whole."

The Coloured Administration was the only second-tier Authority to have achieved a saving from own funds, Mr Barnes said, and as far as he knew it was therefore not necessary to seek additional funds from the Central Revenue Fund as many other ethnic administrations had done.

The savings of R1,8 m are to be applied for administration, works, education and agricultural expenses.

Under the Head Administration, members of the Legislative Assembly and the Opposition members, provision has been made for increased allowances in the form of accommodation, transport and entertainment, while four sums of R65 000 each have been set aside for houses for four members of the Executive Committee, with additional sums for furniture.

Mr Barnes pointed out that a Coloured MLA still received a smaller salary and allowance than his counterpart in the White Legislative Assembly.

"Whereas the Chairman of the White Executive Committee receives a salary of R28 000, I receive R22 000 because I am Coloured, my hair has some curl, my nose is not as high, and my eyes are not blue", Mr Barnes said.

Time for Parity

"The time for parity and the final correction of all the wrongs has arrived, if we are ever to defeat Swapo at the polls during an election", Mr Barnes said.

Ordinary MLA's and other Executive Committee members in the Coloured Administration each scored less favourably than their White counterparts, Mr Barnes said.

R10 000 of the additional appropriation is to be used to implement a transport scheme for Coloured school children in the rural areas, announced Mr Barnes.

This was necessary because children living at small places such as Ariamsvlei, Koës, and Aranos had inadequate bus transport to get to school or to go home for weekends, according to Mr Barnes.

Additional funds are also to be used to make more bursaries available to aspirant Coloured teachers, in view of the serious shortage of teachers.

It was envisaged to recruit an additional 150 Coloured students in SA to study for a career as teachers in SWA, said Mr Barnes.

R10 000 is to be used for subsidies on the purchase of emergency stock feed and transport for drought-affected Coloured farmers.

As a result of increased building costs, an additional R1,338m has been allocated to Works for the completion of building programmes started in the previous financial year.

BARNES RECOMMENDS MONTHLY HITS AT SWAPO

Windhoek THE WINDHOEK ADVERTISER in English 12 Nov 81 p 2

[Text]

SA SECURITY Forces should hit Swapo bases in Angola on a monthly basis, according to Mr Barney Barnes, leader of the ruling Coloured Labour Party.

Mr Barnes was addressing the Assembly during the debate on the Additional Appropriation Budget tabled in this week.

"I call upon SA to hit Swapo bases in Angola every month, in order to root out what little remains of this communist cancer", he said.

Mr Barnes also spoke out strongly against the present Western Five initiative for a settlement in SWA, saying that the UN was not to be trusted.

"The UN has proved itself to be a total international failure as far as keeping the peace is concerned", said Mr Barnes.

"The Coloureds, as an integral part of the Territory's 11 population groups would not be forced into an internationally-sponsored settlement without adequate guarantees on several aspects of the independence process", he added.

These included a guarantee by the Western Five that they would recognise an independent SWA if Swapo should lose an internationally-supervised election.

The UN should also clarify the position of Untag troops in SWA immediately after an election.

"No-one, not even SA, will force anything down our throats", said Mr Barnes.

He went on to say that he would rather choose SA, as the devil he knows, than the Un which could be an unknown hell.

OIL PRODUCTION FIGURES--Lagos, 6 Nov (AFP)--Nigeria produced 1.25 million barrels of oil a day in the month of October, it was learned Friday from reliable sources in Laos. This production, which is still quite insufficient in comparison with production estimates for this year, however, marks a very clear resumption of sales following the price cuts granted by Nigeria to its customers ($36 per barrel payable in 120 days or $34.5 per barrel payable in 30 days), and the decisions reached at the last OPEC summit. The lowest production volume was last August with 708,000 barrels a day. A slight upward trend started in the month of September, with production at 1.064 million barrels a day. There might be a return to the normal production level for Nigeria (approximately 2 million barrels a day) at the beginning of 1982, say informed sources. Nigeria's domestic consumption is about 250,000 barrels a day. [Text] [AB062043 Paris AFP in French 1326 GMT 6 Nov 81]

PCR COMMITMENT TO UNION OF LEFT EXAMINED

New Sign of Change

Saint Denis TEMOIGNAGES in French 12, 13 Oct 81

[12 Oct 81 p 3]

[Text] On Saturday evening, a new sign of change appeared on FR3: For the first time in 23 years, the secretary general of the PCR [Reunionese Communist Party] was interviewed in that capacity on a televised news program. With respect to the head of the island's leading political party, it should be admitted that this is a landmark. Moreover, Paul Verges did not fail to point this out.

During the interview with Sulliman Banian, which could be called historic, Verges essentially developed the same themes as on "Meet the Press" on radio Thursday: the importance of the first social measures taken by the leftist government and other early signs of change, PCR proposals for decentralization, the need for the broadest possible union of leftist forces to get Reunion on the path to development, and so on.

All viewers were struck by the calmness and optimism exhibited by Verges before the camera.

The assurance of future victories for the left could be read on his lips as well as in his clear and determined remarks.

[13 Oct 81 p 3]

[Text] The following are excerpts taken from the end of Sulliman Banian's interview with Paul Verges on television Saturday evening:

[Question] To conclude, Mr Verges, and to get back to the leftist structures in Reunion, I was just saying that the Socialist Federation meets in a congress tomorrow in Tampon. Are you in the Reunionese Communist Party ready to support a joint program with the Socialist Party?

[Answer] We asked that immediately after 10 May and have repeated it. We say that the political platform is clear. It is fought by the right. It was ratified by a majority of the voters. It is Point 58 of candidate Mitterrand in his run for the presidency.

Now that he has been elected, he has to apply these 101 proposals and among the 101 is Proposal 58. It is extremely clear.

That is the political platform and I believe that our socialist comrades cannot fail to agree with us in seeing that the point is carried out.

Insofar as, in the concern of everyone, development is involved, the discussion can only have to do with the methods of development, the speed of development, ways of development, but the economic platform has been found. Moving toward the country's development, not toward an extension of assistance, with the economic imbalances that we have in the country, with a declining production and a growing service sector.

I will give you an example: The two countries in the world which have the most developed tertiary sector are Sweden and California. Reunion exceeds both of them in the percentage of its gross national product. We exceed 80 percent, while Sweden and California are behind us. It is a situation that is totally upside down and that we must right.

Concerning this economic platform, one can discuss methods, but the underlying agreement exists.

This economic platform and this political platform that exists objectively are, in my opinion, the two poles on which we can base a very broad union of the left that will bring along other persons, that will involve, not only organizations as such: the Socialist Federation, the Communist Party, the leftist radicals, but persons who are waiting and who do not want to belong to the Communist Party or the Socialist Party, but who want to play their part in the development of Reunion.

We are only at the beginning of major political changes in Reunion. We shall know them in 1982 or 1983 and I am convinced that these changes will be as decisive as those that came about in the French National Assembly in June.

[Question] Mr Verges, your analysis still leads me to ask a related question, if I may call it that: It is perhaps a "sea serpent" that keeps coming back: What about the watchword "autonomy"? Is it still used in the PCR?

[Answer] A watchword always corresponds to a political situation. The right has never wanted to hear us. The right has always excommunicated us. Facing it, we had to prepare an overall plan that we called "autonomy." That right was beaten in May and June, but above all, it was beaten for 7 years and we believe in our analysis that the left is in power for more than 7 years and without a doubt for 15 or 20 years.

Consequently, the entire strategy of a party is brought into question. We no longer have before us an intransigent government that wants to hear nothing. We have a government open to dialog, one that is ready to discuss, which respects the difference, which respects the cultural identity of the peoples of the overseas departments and territories and says to us: Let us build together for 7 or 15 years, a new society of freedom, dignity, democracy. Let us develop Reunion.

From that time on, that responds to our most profound aspirations, those for which we have fought for over 30 years.

Henceforth, we are not going to let ourselves be taken in by words, a question of semantics. We shall let our adversaries play with words, particularly when they are getting old.

[Question] You have no wild schemes?

[Answer] None. I have my feet on the ground and it is with our feet on the ground that we say that we are moving toward success and victory if our socialist comrades decide tomorrow, decide here, to have that union that already exists in mainland France, in the Antilles or elsewhere.

Change for Development

Saint Denis TEMOIGNAGES in French 13 Oct 81 p 3

[Text] The Reunionese Communist Party has always said that it refused to manage alone the establishment of a new Reunion on the path of development. We have always said that such an undertaking requires the aid of all the forces of progress that want to turn the page of the colonial regime in our country, rehabilitate the Reunionese economy and create conditions for development in all fields.

That has been a constant in our party's line since its founding. We have tirelessly issued appeals for such a union.

In particular, as early as 10 May, immediately after the victory of the left, the PCR laid out the path to follow in order to arrive at real change in Reunion: the union of all forces of the left on the bases of the proposals of the new president of the republic for the overseas departments.

In several major meetings, particularly in Riviere Saint-Louis, Paul Verges has developed these themes on behalf of the PCR. That was also the case in the televised debate on decentralization or on "Meet the Press" with Verges on the radio Thursday.

In short, one would never finish citing the constant appeals for the unity of the people's forces issued by the PCR for years and in the most recent period.

Positive Elements

Within such a context, it goes without saying that the two motions adopted Sunday in Tampon by the congress of the Socialist Federation on decentralization and on the rallying of the people's forces contain positive elements. We have already outlined the essential ones yesterday, particularly when the congress stated:

1 -- In Reunion, "decentralization must be preceded by the election of a single assembly (...) by universal suffrage and with proportional voting from a list (that must have) political means for development."

2 -- "The implementation of proposed development for Reunion implies the support of the largest number (...). It is therefore fitting to create the conditions encouraging unity of action for the accomplishment of major economic, social and cultural objectives. The local federation of the Socialist Party states that it will seek this unity within the Reunionese left and progressive circles. The congress gives a mandate to the Executive Committee to engage in discussions with the representatives of other leftist organizations and forces of progress so as to find conditions making it possible to arrive, based on specific projects from the parties in question, at a real development program and study the best strategy for the emergency of a broad majority capable of carrying it out."

Everyone observes that these remarks are along the same line as the positions developed by the PCR and particularly Paul Verges in the televised debate on decentralization. There is consequently a valid basis for a coming together, discussion and a search for unity among the leftist forces, unity that should be extended and developed at the level of officials or others far beyond the leftist parties, the PCR and the PS.

Concerning the third motion passed by the socialist congress on the splitting of communes, districts, and so on, discussion and concertation between Reunionese are necessary in order to find better solutions with respect to the priority aim of development.

Criticism

Having said that much, we cannot fail to refute a certain number of criticisms (always the same) made by certain socialists with respect to the basic orientations of the PCR and its strategy. We believe that it would be negative to continue along this path and that we must have an end to the accusations from the right.

A leftist party has better things to do than to engage in controversies and condemnations aimed at another leftist party. Facing a right that feels beaten and says it is ready to do anything to defend its privileges, the left must show a spirit of responsibility.

It is not a matter of confusing people, but on the contrary, of doing everything to rally those who want development and social progress. More than ever, this watchword is essential: "No adversaries on the left!"

Dangerous Games

One must say that the right seems to be rather disconcerted by the evolution of the political situation, at least if one is to judge by its initial reactions. It is swimming in absurdity.

Yves Barau says anything: "A departmental assembly elected by proportional representation would (...) outside the legislative norm (...). The single assembly would soon mean a single party -- that is, totalitarian power."

Manifestly, Barau has understood nothing about the coming regional reform. In fact, it feels quite simply that his seat is at stake and he is afraid for his daily bread.

As for the RPR [Rally for the Republic] bureau, it has published a bulletin that is just as wide of the mark. It wants to frighten public opinion with regional reform and the totally logical proposals of the left. He makes an amalgam of the different parties. The PS, a major party, holds its congress, makes its decisions in a sovereign manner, and the RPR immediately gets out its old anticommunist arguments. But that will no longer work.

Public opinion knows what class interests and what privileges the politicians of the right are defending by waving the flag of anticommunism. It knows that all these privileges and posts were acquired by dozens of years of fraud. That is why those people have been discredited in its eyes.

In panic, the leaders of the right practice real terrorism, making the most far-fetched accusations of the left: a "foreign party," they say!

All of that is ridiculous, outrageous.

But these leaders of the RPR should state what they mean by "all the means" which they want to use in order to try to prevent the unavoidable.

Proposal 58 of candidate Francois Mitterrand, now president of the republic, and the proposals of the leftist parties in Reunion are perfectly legal: A democratic debate must be initiated in order to discuss them. The Reunion region will become a new territorial collective of the republic, in keeping with the constitution. Then why all these cries of alarm and threats from our patented integrationists?

What game are they playing?

A warning to those who would go to extremes: Certain games are dangerous and can have very serious consequences for their authors.

Concept of Leftist Union

Saint Denis TEMOIGNAGES in French 14 Oct 81 p 5

[Editorial]

[Text] As we wrote yesterday, one cannot fail to refute a certain number of statements made by the socialist leaders and militants. They are unjustified, even malicious criticisms, accusations aimed at the PCR.

These allusions and positions stem from a desire for controversy which, for our part, we have always deplored. It is not fitting at a time when the union of the leftist and progressive forces seems to be shaping up in Reunion.

We wish to clarify things, calmly and with a desire for understanding, aware that we are thereby facilitating the emergence of the necessary rallying.

When a speaker at the Tampon congress looks to the election of Paul Verges to the National Assembly on the pretext that he would then be "muzzled about his demands for independence" (JIR, Monday, 12 October, p 5), we said that such assertions are not acceptable. It isa worn-out accusation, the very type of anathema thrown out by a right incapable of arguing.

We also think that all sincere socialists -- that is, all those who want above all to beat the right in Reunion in order to go after change, amidst unity -- must hope for the election of the leftist candidate, assuming the setting aside of results in the second district. For obvious reasons, that success would solidify change in our country even further.

Nor must we fail to react to statements using comparisons tending to give a "dominating" image of our party. A party having finally met its match in no way corresponds to the real situation.

The PCR has never posed the problem of the union in these terms. It is not a matter knowing who is going to win to the detriment of the other, but of knowing how to fight the right in Reunion together. Tomorrow, it is the entire left that will grow stronger, the PCR and the Socialist Party as well. That is the best we can hope for.

As for aphorisms of the "giant and Tom Thumb" type, let us leave them to the rightist press, which uses that vocabulary to hide its desire to prevent the union in order to prevent change.

Likewise, evoking "the PCR and its satellite organizations" is an old foil of the right.

Using such language to speak of democratic organizations allies with the Communist Party only sows confusion. Moreover, it is an attitude that can be used tomorrow against any organization allied with the PCR, including the Socialist Federation.

All these discordant notes can only hurt the quality of the union of the forces of progress. That is why we must bring them out, in a spirit of serenity and confidence in the future of the left in Reunion.

PCR STATEMENT ON AUTONOMY MOVES URGES ACCELERATION

Saint Denis TEMOIGNAGES in French 6 Oct 81 p 3

[Text] The Central Committee of the Reunionese Communist Party, meeting on Sunday, 4 October 1981, examined in particular the evolution of the situation in Reunion, and reaffirmed the positions expressed in its two communiques published on the days following 10 May and 21 June last.

The PCR [Reunionese Communist Party] indeed considers that the burdensome effects of several decades of rightist policies in Reunion have not yet stopped weighing down upon economic, social, and political life (price increases, rising unemployment, inequities, injustices...).

Moreover, the PCR considers that the situation has been aggravated by the fact that the Right in Reunion is still in power.

On the political level, the Right is in power in the General Council, the Regional Council, and the great majority of the municipalities, by methods that have given Reunionese elections a lasting reputation in public opinion in France and in our own region.

On the economic level, the Right is in power through certain important persons in the COLIER [expansion unknown], the SIPMER [expansion unknown], and the Chamber of Commerce and Industry, who have no hesitation in making, for obvious political reasons, economic decisions (ill-considered price increases) likely to jeopardize certain production sectors and especially to shake public confidence in the new government.

These same important persons appeared with shameless ostentation at the recent political discussion held by Debre and which fits in with the RPR [Rally for the Republic]'s plan for starting on a "reconquest of power."

Positive Measures

The PCR considers that for the present the main changes have not yet taken place in Reunion. They are being prepared for within the framework of the development of decentralization measures for the DOM [Overseas Departments].

It is appropriate, however, as of now, to appreciate the immediate and future beneficial effects of the measures that the government has already taken.

Among these measures, we refer to the two-stage 50 percent increases in family allowances and housing allowances, 20 percent increases in the pensions or retirement pay of the elderly and of handicapped adults, and 14 percent increase in many other benefits. We add the decision to raise old age pensions from 1,700 to 2,000 francs on 1 January.

All these measures have brought and will bring into tens of thousands of Reunionese homes billions of supplementary old francs that will enable them to meet the inevitable price increases (international circumstances) in certain products, as well as those arising out of the maneuvers indulged in by officials in certain economic sectors after 10 May.

We must also mention as positive the first measure toward liberalization of FR 3 and the establishment of joint efforts on the part of the government.

Two significant and encouraging examples can be cited in this connection. They are on the one hand the settlement of the sugar cane planters' dispute at the start of the sugar program, and on the other, government proposals for air travel fares with a view to helping, as a priority, the most disadvantaged: Reunionese migrant workers abroad.

Decentralization Proposals

However, the economic, social, and cultural situation in Reunion, left behind by the Right, is such that important changes are becoming imperative and urgent.

This involves:

1: rapid extension of decentralization to the DOM in general and to Reunion in particular.

In this connection, the PCR recalls its positions expressed on 14 May and on 22 June:

a: agreement with point 58 of the 101 proposals by Francois Mitterrand, approved on 10 May by presidential majority: "For the peoples in overseas French territories who are calling for real change, the beginning of an era of concertaion and dialogue starting with recognition of their identity and their right to realize their aspirations. Among other things, in overseas departments, institution of a departmental council, proportionately elected and responsible for local events in each department with compulsory consultation before any international agreement affecting the region of the world where they happen to be. The law brought in by the socialist parliamentary group will be submitted to the parliament at the next session of the legislature."

b: It follows from this that only a single assembly, elected by universal suffrage, proportionately and with the powers provided for by law, can make it possible to open the way toward the objectives of economic development and social and cultural progress.

c: Concerning the election of the single assembly, the PCR proposes that it be elected no later than March 1982, instead of the cantonal elections planned for that time, or at the latest in July 1982, allowing time to correct the electoral lists.

The Reunionese Communist Party notes with satisfaction the fact that the modalities of decentralization for the DOM will be discussed at the next Ministerial Council meeting on 7 October.

Even though it hopes for broad discussion in this matter, the PCR feels bound to say that from its own point of view and that of a very large body of public opinion, the present local assemblies (General Council and Regional Council) are disqualified from giving an opinion on decentralization, since their representativity is so questionable, on the one hand because of unfair apportionment of the cantons, and on the other because of the long-standing fraudulence that falsified the balloting in the majority of the cantons.

2: Change also implies that, after the record of decades of rightist power in Reunion has been established, economic and social measures be taken to allow real development of the country, moving in the direction of a reduction in the imbalances in the activity sector and lessening of the social and income inequalities.

3: The hoped-for and expected change requires the broadest possible rallying of all Reunionese men and women who care about the country's future.

Such a rallying is possible and the PCR hopes for it with all its might. It must occur, of course, among the organized forces of the Left (PCR, PS [Socialist Party] Federation and MRG [expansion unknown] Federation, especially) trends of thought and notables.

In addition discussion must be started among political forces on the one hand and the organizations or personalities responsible for the economic, social, and cultural world on the other.

The Central Committee of the Reunionese Communist Party promises to do everything possible to create the best conditions for this great rallying of the Reunionese for the preparation of an overall plan for the country's development.

Immediate Measures

Meanwhile, and in the immediate future, it is both necessary and possible to strengthen public confidence in the new government by taking some urgent measures that affect the majority of the population.

These measures should affect

1: Prices, by following up on the action undertaken by the Prefecture to check the increases recorded over the past few months

2: The sugar program, through the reorganization of interprofessional relations as well as price setting methods and the distribution of aid, particularly since there is less abundance this year compared to last year

3: Agriculture, by a reduction of planters' social insurance contributions

4: Housing, by giving absolute priority to public housing, within the framework of a construction revival

5: The FASO [expansion unknown] by extending solidarity to the working population as a whole (government services and independent workers). The large increase in funds would make it possible to organize a real public service, democratically run, of school food services

6: Employment, by increasing funding, democratically administered, for work sites under development. The increase could be obtained on the one hand from state funding and on the other from solidarity measures to be found among the people of Reunion.

'LE SOLEIL' COMMENTS ON DIOUF TRIP TO GAMBIA

AB191336 Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 12 Nov 81 p 1

[Editorial: "Brothers, Here We Are!"]

[Text] And finally, Banjul--the epilogue of a dream and the accomplishment of a destiny inscribed in fate. This is how at times, and without impatience, history seems through a tragedy to give us what we had already looked for without success. Our aspirations are now achieved.

The significance of President Abdou Diouf's visit to Gambia is thus evident. Who cannot guess it? Never has a traveler been so expected; also, never has a trip been so imminently political or has so influenced our future well-being. Without Senegal, there is no Gambia; and Senegal has no choice but to recognize Gambia's existence. Both countries have a common history, belong to the same ethnic group, possess the same civilization and share the same land. Only colonialism made them artificial neighbors. The constant review of the evidence only reinforces the truth.

Also, more important than the obligations imposed on countries bound by agreements, the Senegalese felt individually and collectively called upon by family solidarity to help during Gambia's moments of difficulty. It is this feeling that explains more than any other President Abdou Diouf's presence among the people of Gambia--a symbol born of a popular and political desire for unity and for union.

Indeed, it is a matter of making final the organic unity between the two countries proposed here in Dakar by President Jawara. Large strides were made toward unity when both governments decided without any further delay after the abortive coup to integrate their armies and security services. Undoubtedly, the Banjul visit will give the two heads of state an opportunity to adopt a comprehensive legal structure.

Meanwhile, popular wisdom, which must never be ignored, has already studied the event far better than our analysts.

Abdou Diouf is not the only person who restored legality and republican legitimacy in the brotherly country. There is a sign which is more cheering. As a matter of fact, which omen is more favorable than the period marking the birth of the Senegambia? The achievement of such an outstanding result seemingly without effort reveals to us the complicity of history which is not within the reach of some people.

ANTI-PDS MEASURES--Dakar, November 6--Three members of Senegal's opposition Democratic Party (PDS) were formally given one-month jail sentences here Thursday for "rebellion and violence" against the police. The three, arrested after a dispute with police who came to pick one of them up in connection with a probe into subversive activities, were freed immediately, since they had been detained already for 50 days without trial. Six other PDS members, including parliamentary Deputy Doudou Camara, who have been charged with subversion, are still in prison. They were jailed after Amadou Fall, a former bodyguard of PDS leader Abdoulaye Wade, claimed they had been to Libya for training in sabotage methods and that Libyan arms and ammunition had been smuggled into Senegal. The party has denied the charges and said the PDS members went to Libya to be trained as bodyguards to protect Mr. Wade and other party leaders. (A.F.P.) The ACDI /Candaian International Development Agency/ has been appointed as the agency responsible for purchasing and shipping to Dakar this wheat which will be sold on the Senegalese market, with the proceeds of the sale being paid into the counterpart fund. /Text/ /Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 28 Oct 81 p 1/ 11550

Political observers in Mogadishu say although Siad Barre's Government completed all the preparations to receive the U.S. delegation whom they were out to impress, the decision by the U.S. delegation to decline the invitation is because of the current instability in Somalia. The U.S. delegation feared the unabated attacks by the heroic liberation forces of the democratic front for the salvation of Somalia. JUMBE ANNOUNCES ZANZIBARI RESHUFFLE

Paris AFRICA AFP in English 6 Nov 81 p 20

[Text] Dar-es-Salaam, November 4--Two Cabinet Ministers in the Zanzibar Government have been dropped and a former Deputy Finance Minister promoted to the island's Revolutionary Council in a mini-Government reshuffle announced by Zanzibar leader Aboud Jumbe.

The dropped Ministers, for Finance and Planning, were assigned to unspecified duties, reports reaching here said.

Former Finance Deputy Minister Jafari Mfaume becomes the Revolutionary Council's Secretary-General, replacing Mohamed Faki, who takes over the Ministry of Planning for Ussi Hamisi.

Previously-unknown Mohamed Ramia becomes Finance Minister, while Abdalla Saidi Mughery succeeds Mr. Mfaume as Deputy Finance Minister in the Treasury.

Aboud Jumbe, who is also Vice-President in the combined Government of Zanzibar and mainland Tanzania, complained that some leaders were putting personal interests before those of the people, the reports said.

Tired Leaders

He called on tired leaders to step down so that more dynamic leaders could take over the task of spear-heading the island's economic development.

Mr. Jumbe said his Government was spending millions of dollars on imports to meet the needs of the people, but the imports were diverted into the black market, resulting in a scarcity of consumer goods. (A.F.P.)

MAFIA ISLAND OIL DRILLING--Dar-es-Salaam, November 4--Tanzania, assisted by the Algerian oil company Sonatrach, will soon start drilling a 4,000-metre (12,000 feet) well on the tiny coastal island of Mafia to determine the amount of available oil there, it was reported here. Officials would not say the precise date that drilling would start, but a giant drilling rig and other equipment were thought to have already been shipped to Mafia. Sylvester Barongo, General Manager of the Tanzania Petroleum Development Corporation, said the Mafia island drilling was originally planned to start last August but was delayed because of "logistic complexities," the Government-owned DAILY NEWS reported. The project was being financed through an Algerian loan of 10 million U.S. dollars. Tanzania, which has been seeking oil in many parts of the country since independence 20 years ago, spends about half its foreign exchange earnings on oil imports. (A.F.P.) CHIRAC CRITIQUES FRANCE'S AFRICA POLICY

Paris LE MONDE in French 7 Nov 81 pp 1,6

[Article by Jacques Chirac: "France's African Calling"]

[Text] While six African presidents are the guests of Francois Mitterrand at the Elysee three days after the conference of the heads of state of France and Africa ended, the evolution of the situation in Chad claims all the attention of the president of the French Republic and his African interlocutors. Goukouni Oueddei, the transitional head of the National Union Government, who displayed profound skepticism after his talk with the French head of state on Thursday, on the other hand spoke calmly in an interview with LE MONDE. In the article below, Jacques Chirac, the former prime minister and RPR deputy, for his part engages in harsh criticism of France's policy in Africa.

For several months some uncertainty has been observable concerning Franco-African relations, which, despite some efforts, have not been broken, nor has the diplomatic ballet between Paris and the African capitals nor the governmental statements, nor even the Franco-African conference which has just ended in Paris.

But it is urgent that we answer the interrogation by our African friends, that we become aware of the pitfalls of our diplomacy, for fear of abandoning the profound calling of France's policy.

But why are we in this predicament when exceptional historical, linguistic and cultural ties connect us with that continent?

Africa is afraid, first of all, of feeling that it is less close, that its true place at our side is no longer recognized.

Gen de Gaulle, on the strength of the close complicity brought about by history, was the first to make every effort to develop a privileged association between the Africans and the French, with respect for their identity.

It was in the interest of continuing this policy that President Georges Pompidou proposed in 1973 that Franco-African summits be held with our privileged partners in Africa.

Things seem to have changed today, and our allies are worried that we are paying less attention.

The fact is that it is regrettable that in five months the minister of Foreign Relations, due to a failure of the president himself, has been unable to go to black Africa yet, to assure our African friends of our support and friendship.

Africa is also afraid today of being misunderstood, of being looked at through the distorting prism of the political quarrels and partisan struggles which can only deepen a little more the divisions on the continent.

If it listens to its partners, France must be aware of the difficulties implicit in its new diplomacy.

First of all, the temptation to dogmatism, which can lead to flight, to a loosening of the ties with Africa.

In fact, if our country's African policy can participate in the "general mobilization" of our diplomacy in favor of the Third World, which the president of the Republic says he wants, it must certainly not be diluted, be dissolved in a vast Third World project on a planetary scale.

By joining the "great people of the humiliated, the persecuted and the damned of the earth," Africa may fear inhabiting the memory and heart of the French a little less; it may dread the turning away of France's gaze, ignoring France's extended hand, that very hand which, loyal and fraternal, supported us throughout the trials of history.

It is also necessary to reject any interference in the internal affairs of the African states.

Of course it would be tempting for some Socialists, as well as their friends from abroad, to count on the political allegiance of the governments instead of on the friendship of the peoples.

In the area of human rights, I am pleased that France says it will unrelentingly pursue the defense of this fundamental principle. In my opinion it is an absolute necessity in conformity with the calling of our people, and it inarguably goes beyond all political cleavages. We therefore unanimously reject the racial policy being conducted in South Africa.

Unfortunately, beyond this particular case, the present government, even while it admits to some infringements of respect for human rights, does not hesitate to invoke human rights to practice a veritable policy of interference toward some countries. This involves not only imposing Western democratic systems most often ill-adapted to Africa's profound realities, but moreover advocating to our partners the type of socialist democracy that rules our country today.

In fact, France must assign itself a triple task.

In the first place, France must demonstrate realism and tolerance, it must recognize that diversity which forms Africa's wealth. To do this, France must respect Africa.

Far removed from ideologies, from partisan contests, France must carry on with Africa a dialogue that is open and without reservations.

The African continent should be neither experimental ground nor a battlefield for the great powers. It must assume its own destiny and I am especially eager in that regard to salute the efforts of the Organization for African Unity in its search for an African solution to the crises that are agitating the continent.

I do not deny that after five months of uncertainty, France's recent actions in Chad have yielded positive results.

But in my opinion the present situation is still precarious, for three reasons: on one hand, we will not assume our historic responsibilities in Chad by delivering hastily a few weapons, ammunition and budgetary subsidies there. On the other hand, France claims it is up to the OAU and the Africans to decide how a neutral inter-African force is to be formed in Chad. Moreover, it is individually deploying an active diplomacy, which has just been caught short by the announcement of the precipitous departure of the Libyans. Chad in fact finds itself in its former situation, in which one cannot rule out the differing factions resuming their fratricidal struggles one day. Finally, no one can seriously claim to be helping Chad, in the immediate future or over the long term, without agreeing sooner or later to discuss the matter with one of the participants, that is with Libya. That country has occupied Chad for nearly 11 months, with a contingent of 10,000 men and sophisticated weapons. No one can really think that the announcement of the withdrawal of the Libyan troops marks the end of Tripoli's ambitions vis-a-vis its neighbor to the south. All of these elements must be taken into account.

On the other hand, sensitive to the dignity of the Africans, to their desire to see the decolonization of the continent completed, we must work tirelessly to facilitate Namibia's accession to independence.

France cannot conduct an original and effective action except with respect for the African personality and choices. The African determination, which is affirmed on the political level and already exists in economic matters, must be encouraged. Thus, in April 1980, at the Lagos conference, the African countries declared themselves in favor of a self-centered development taking the African realities into account, with the prospect of forming a true common market in the year 2000.

France must remain faithful to those commitments.

In fact, Africa could not be left to itself; to do so would be to hand it over to other, less well-intentioned powers. France must give aid to Africa against the many threats with which it is being assailed, France must help it to take its future into its own hands.

Africa is threatened from within by increasing economic and social challenges which it cannot solve alone.

In the forum of the United Nations the secretary general of the OAU, Edem Kodjo, reminded the world of the innumerable difficulties Africa is encountering in its effort to ensure its survival: demographic problems, with the prospect of a doubled population between now and the year 2000, with the expectation of a shorter life in this world and a higher mortality rate; a food shortage and the food crop problem; increased unemployment; a variation in raw materials prices; uncontrolled urbanization; the decline in exports.

It is being threatened from outside by the interplay and covetousness of the great powers. The USSR, thanks to Portuguese decolonization, has considerably increased its seizures on the continent and made it an important stake in the international rivalries. The East-West confrontation is crystallizing on the regional crises, in southern Africa, in the Horn of Africa, in Chad, etc. The law of the strongest prevails everywhere, depriving Africa of its proper destiny.

This is why on this continent almost 5 million refugees, half of all the refugees in the world, are living uprooted and in frightful physical conditions.

France must maintain the capital of confidence and solidarity earned over more than 20 years among our African friends, the Francophones in particular. It must carry on its task: development aid, especially through stabilization of raw material prices; the peace effort; but also, participation in the security of and a guarantee of independence for the friendly countries.

It is only at the price of a reaffirmed credibility with regard to our activities in Francophone Africa that our efforts can be effectively scaled back over the entire continent.

Expanding our policy without first deepening relations with our traditional allies cannot help but lead to trivializing our relations with Africa.

Finally, France must encourage the Africans to reconcile among themselves. The image of an Africa broken in two must be combated.

In that regard, I am pleased that countries like Madagascar, the Congo, Benin and Angola are turning to France, to enter into a policy of cooperation with that country.

France must respond to these appeals without ceasing to accompany its action with a message of peace, freedom and independence.

But only a France that is simultaneously open to dialogue, attentive to needs and faithful to its commitments can comprehend the true aspiration of the African peoples and affirm the profound meaning of its calling.

OPEC AIDS BURUNDI, ZAIRE--Vienna, 30 Oct (OPECNA)--The OPEC fund for international development signed two agreements Friday with Burundi and Zaire for one million and five million U.S. dollars respectively. The first agreement is in a grant, to enable Burundi to meet its contribution to the common fund for commodities. The agreement with Zaire for 5 million dollars will be used to finance the Shaba power rehabilitation project co-sponsored by the international development fund. The project is designed to improve the generating capacity of the existing power system in Zaire. In addition, it will activate the existing transmission and distribution lines in the Shaba region to prevent power failures in the crucial mining industry located in the area. It is the third loan extended to Zaire by the OPEC fund. The earlier loans totalled 12 million U.S. dollars. The new loan is interest free with a nominal service charge, a 20-year maturity and a 5-year grace period. Both loans were signed by Dr Ibrahim F. I. Shihata, director general of the fund. LACK OF BATTERIES CREATES NEW 'NATIONAL SPORT'

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 8 Nov 81 p 2

[Article by Joao Serra: "A New National Sport"]

[Text] After the little morning runs to the end of the island to shed pounds, the fashionable sport in Luanda is increasingly beginning to be pushing cars because of a shortage of batteries. This sport is winning over more devotees every day.

Not one day goes by without my being confronted with one more instance of this new national sporting phenomenon, from the young matron with a carful of children to the skinny athlete who starts with heavy vehicles instead of gradually going from a motorcylce to small-cylinder tourism.....

As for myself, unfortunately, I must exercise my muscles every day in pushing my Fiat 124. What is even worse, is that I become angry watching strong healthy people pass by without lifting a finger to help....

At any rate, this is a sport that will surely become more popular among us with time because of the increasing inability of the Tudor battery manufacturing plant to fill the country's needs in this respect. In the vicinity of primary and secondary schools, children and young people will have the opportunity of cultivating their healthy physiques by helping less well-endowed motorists push their stalled cars to start them when their batteries have died down.

In sum, the entire country will massively practice this sport, without forgetting the peasants, who will lawfully have the right to push all the merchandise-laden trucks stopped in the vicinity of their fields because of the lack of batteries.

I believe that it would not be a bad idea to start the immediate manufacture of tiny miniature batteries to award to the most distinguished athletes who have pushed the largest number of cars every day, who have run the most meters per second, who have provided the best quality and quantity of pushes and shoves.

This is indeed promising.

I have even thought that all the Luanda motorists, who are already adept at this new sport, should send a note of thanks to the Tudor company for its contribution to the sports world through its insignificant production of batteries, which has constituted--objectively speaking--the starting push for the massification of this new sport.

Popular opinion on the subject is, moreover, very clear: the Tudor workers should have priority access in training for this new activity, and could even be authorized to push two cars at the same time.

But one must be careful: this is a sport that stimulates the appetite a[illegible]t, and something that is very difficult to satisfy nowadays because of the [illegible]or contribution made by companies like the Tudor to the country's economic reconstruction. Therefore, still another effort has to be demanded from this company: besides manufacturing precious few batteries, it should also create a model for a battery to satisfy the athletes' hunger.

POOR CONDITIONS AT LUANDA AIRPORT DECRIED

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 3 Nov 81 p 2

[Article by Joao Serra: "Luanda Airport: The Face of the Country"]

[Excerpts] The Luanda international airport lacks almost everything that is common, even indispensable, in large airports abroad. This is a situation that has increasingly deteriorated over the years and has now reached inadmissible levels, even though such a situation may still look quite normal to many people.

An international airport is the face of a city. In this particular case, any visitor sees a sick image upon arrival, which, unfortunately, even provides a pessimistic notion of this city of Luanda so full of difficulties, but not so many, really....

All new arrivals must wait nothing less than 120 minutes before breathing the air outside the airport. Lines for health control, for foreign exchange control, for passport control, for luggage, for luggage carts, for customs, for cabs, etc, etc.... Any arriving international passenger cannot find a toilet if the need arises. There are no porters available, as if Luanda does not need them. What can a visitor think?

If an arriving passenger wants to make a phone call after emerging from an international flight, he simply cannot do so, since there are no public phones. If he would like something to eat or drink during the long 120 minutes' wait, he will certainly remain hungry and thirsty because there are no snack bars in the waiting room. If a departing passenger would like to ensure his luggage, again, he cannot do so. This is a common service provided at all airports.

In sum, all these petty details, taken together, make our international airport in Luanda an embarking or disembarking station where passengers meet with more difficulties than facilities. What will our foreign visitors think of us?

I believe that our officials in charge of airport facilities should ponder the question and adopt the necessary measures to provide a minimum of infrastructures proper for an airport of this size and importance. Otherwise, our airport will continue to present a congested and unwelcoming aspect of our city....

READER COMPLAINS ABOUT DEFICIENT CONDITION OF LUANDA RESTAURANTS

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 3 Nov 81 p 2

[Article by Miguel Livro: "Restaurants in Luanda"]

[Excerpts] This is the third time I find myself writing to your paper, with my last letter having been sent 8 months ago. I would like to speak today of the so-called "fried-fish snack bars," but not exclusively. There are also expensive restaurants where food is almost as bad, and much more expensive to boot.

But let us start with the former. In our capital, hotel infrastructures were very good during colonial times because they were aimed at the capitalist accumulation of profits; snack bars were well equipped with refrigerators, stoves, etc. Following independence, many of them were abandoned and others were left in the hands of employees, and the situation became impossible. The Ministry of Domestic Trade assumed the responsibility for the management of a large number of such establishments, but one must admit that it is still impossible today to claim we possess a minimally acceptable restaurant service.

Snack bars only serve fried fish with rice (or even worse foods) at exorbitant prices. As long as there is beer to attract customers, everything is all right. They enter the restaurants only to drink three or four glasses of beer, also at a very high price, since the food served with it is merely set aside. What can one say of even more expensive restaurants, where for weeks at a time only canned food is served at exorbitant prices as well?

In Luanda today it is a well-known fact that no one can lunch or dine for less than 500 kwanzas [?about $14] either at the "fried fish snack bars" (both state- or privately-owned) or at better-known restaurants which, however, differ little in the quality of food and service. How is this possible, since most workers earn low salaries? Or are perhaps these restaurants reserved only for black marketeers?

I don't know where hotel industry cadre are located. It would be useful to find where they hang out, because they cannot be seen in most of the restaurants in Luanda, that's for sure....

POTATO SHORTAGE MADE LIGHT OF IN HISTORICAL PERSPECTIVE

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 4 Nov 81 p 2

[Article by Jose C. Cunha: "Potato Logic"]

[Excerpts] There are many of us who use potatoes without being interested in finding out what is their origin and history.

Despite the fact that this tuber's visits among us at this time are imprevisible and--especially--quite short, we should know something about its curriculum, given the fact that its presence or absence may well be tied to historical factors, since in the eyes of a casual observer, there is no other discernible cause.

Potatoes are a tuber that originated in Latin America; according to old chronicles, it was imported into Europe by the Spaniards in the 16th century to be used as animal food. Two centuries later, it suddenly appeared in people's diets.

Just during World War II, England cultivated more than 1 million acres of potatoes. In 1947, production was stabilized at half a million acres.

As an aside, Angola produced in 1971-1972 a total of 28,381 tons of potatoes on 5,000 hectares of large-scale farming and 72,136 tons on 33,000 hectares by smaller peasant farms.

One of the nicest facets of the tuber's history is the following story. A king of France, recognizing the ease of producing potatoes, as well as their nutritive qualities, asked the French people to acquire the habit of consuming them. During the long campaign that stretched over many years, potatoes were still not consumed on the scale requested by the monarch. Pondering the psychological aspects of the problem, the king decided to publish a decree prohibiting the consumption of the said tuber. Reaction was instantaneous: everyone began eating potatoes.

We therefore believe that we can extract a sure-fire formula from the history of the potato to solve the problem of its lack in our midst (obviously, this is being said in jest!): 1) That potatoes should not be produced; 2) that they should not be distributed efficiently; 3) that they should not reach the markets; 4) that a ridiculously low price be paid so as not to stimulate production; finally, 5) that this tuber not be consumed.

REASONS FOR COOPERATION WITH SOCIALIST COUNTRIES EXPLAINED

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 29 Oct 81 p 1

[Article by J. Miranda: "We and the Socialist Community"]

[Excerpts] The People's Republic of Angola maintains preferential relations with those countries whose political system fully identifies with ours; nevertheless, this premise does not stand in the way of the Angolan government in establishing mutually advantageous relations with all countries of the world on the basis of the principle of peaceful coexistence as universally accepted.

On the basis of our political principles, which outline the present fundamental objective of creating technical and material bases for the construction of a socialist society in Angola, and considering the present state of our economy, the strengthening of relations of cooperation with our natural allies imposes itself as a rigorous need. It is within this framework that the visit of President Jose Eduardo dos Santos to a number of socialist countries took place, a visit that was fully in accordance with an orientation of the MPLA-Labor Party aimed at developing economic, technical, cultural and scientific cooperation with the countries of the socialist community, as an objective need to build socialism in the People's Republic of Angola.

The problems that were discussed and the agreements that were signed in these countries answer the expectations of the Angolan people because the fulfillment of its interests, both material and cultural, constitutes the reason for the existence of the MPLA-Labor Party and the basis from which evolves all its activity in search of a just society free from social differences.

The various documents that were signed, such as friendship and cooperation treaties and agreements in various fields were made possible through the identity of views between the political parties and governments of those countries and the MPLA and government of the People's Republic of Angola.

The cooperation that will develop on a model basis with the establishment of mixed enterprises in key sectors of the national economy (agriculture and industry) take into account the experiences of our natural allies in building a socialist society. The emphasis placed in the documents on the training of Angolan technical cadre should be understood within this framework. Man will continue to be the determining factor in the development process, in spite of the vertiginous technical advances taking place in the world. The issue of training able technical cadre is one of the highest priorities of the country, because it is solely through Angolan cadre that the full success of a centralized economy can be guaranteed.

The mixed companies that will be established following the various agreements will eventually come under the exclusive control of the People's Republic of Angola, and this turning over will only be beneficial when Angolans will fully master the technical and administrative mechanisms of these companies.

The technical cadre training process requires, therefore, careful rationing in its use and we believe it is important that youths being sent abroad not be restricted solely to the class of students. The selection of certain workers in the fields of agriculture and industry who evidence a desire for individual and collective progress may be beneficial. We believe that opportunities granted to us must be fully taken advantage of. Our natural allies, aware of the fact that the building of socialism in our country constitutes an important step forward in the construction of world socialist systems, have opened their doors to us more than in the past within the framework of technical, cultural and scientific agreements.

Our preferential cooperation with the socialist community is not only due to the fact that they gave us proof of unconditional militant solidarity during the most difficult moments of our struggle for national liberation, but also, and above all, because they understand us better than anyone else and are always willing to help us.

We shall be able to solve some of the more important problems affecting the large masses of workers on the basis of a multilateral, varied and mutually advantageous cooperation complementing the national economies.

ALGERIAN PHARMACEUTICAL DONATION--A donation from the Algerian government for the suffering people in the southern part of our country, estimated at 20,497 kgs of pharmaceuticals, was handed over to Rodeth Gil, state secretary for social affairs, by the Algerian ambassador to Angola. The Algerian diplomat expressed his pleasure at having personally handed over the donation from the Algerian people who, just like in the past, are continuing to show their solidarity with the Angolan people, particularly at this time when it is being attacked on account of the support it provides to the Namibian patriots headed by SWAPO. Rodeth Gil thanked the ambassador for the donation, adding that "this preoccupation of the Algerian government is the preoccupation of a free people who wants to see another people freed." MORE DOMESTIC FLIGHTS--Huambo--The province of Huambo will now be served by 18 weekly flights for the transportation of passengers on domestic lines, according to Huambo airlines manager Jose Carlos Cardoso. Together with Benguela and Cabinda, Huambo is a high-traffic area. The increase in flights, therefore, will solve the severe lack of transportation that was already felt and compelled many prospective passengers--especially during holidays and vacations--to wait for almost a month before getting a reservation. It should be noted that the TAAG [Angolan Airlines] flies to the central plateau about 7,500 passengers a month. The service to the province of Huambo will also acquire a Boeing 737 aircraft that will fly the Luanda/Huambo/Benguela route. The airlines manager noted that the new ticket offices will not be inaugurated on 11 November because of delays in completing the construction work. BACKGROUND GIVEN ON DRAFT CONSTITUTION VOTE

[Text] Bujumbura, 17 Nov (AFP)--For the first time in 16 years, the people of Burundi will go to the polls on Wednesday to vote on a national issue which will mark the return of this small Central African country to a democratic system.

Five years, almost to the day, after the coup which brought him to power, Col Jean-Baptiste Bagaza is submitting a draft constitution similar to that of neighboring Tanzania to a referendum.

This draft constitution, which will undoubtedly be adopted, officially installs the national unity and progress party [UPRONA] as the sole party whose chairman will be the only candidate for the presidential elections. Legislative elections on universal suffrage will also be organized when the constitution is adopted.

Since its independence in 1961, Burundi, a former German territory which later became a Belgium mandate, has experienced a checkered and bloody political life, marked by the 1972 tribal massacres--between the majority Bahutus and the ruling Batutsis--which left several dozen people dead.

Since the overthrow on 1 November 1976 of President Michel Micombero, who established a dictatorial republic, the new regime has tried to put an end to the tribal tensions and progressively restore a democratic regime.

UPRONA held a congress in December 1979 and elected Colonel Bagaza as chairman of the party, thus giving a civilian character to his remaining in power. Elections of local leaders of the party took place last August. Finally, the Central Committee, the supreme organ of the party, approved the draft constitution now being submitted to a referendum.

The basic law reaffirms the socialist inclinations of the government, extolling in its preamble a society in which social justice reigns and where exploitation of man by man will be abolished. The constitution expresses the need for Burundi to exercise control over its wealth and national resources.

Under the motto of unity labor and progress, the citizen of the second republic will also have responsibilities, especially that of extolling the dignity of labor and preserving and strengthening national unity and social solidarity. Freedom of worship and the existence of private schools under state control is guaranteed by the draft constitution.

The Catholic Church is the second largest employer after the state and plays a major role in the lives of Burundians. But its relations with the government have not always been good, and that is why about 60 missionaries were expelled from the country 2 years ago.

Having no political detainees in its prisons--former President Micombero is in exile in Somalia--Burundi should see the early normalization of the situation which will help wipe away the scars of the past clashes, with the installation of a civilian regime, observers note.

Still placed among the 10 poorest countries of the world, Burundi, which is a well managed country, benefits from aid donors and can really be described as a developing country.

Despite its landlocked nature (1,500 km to the sea by the shortest route), Burundi does not experience the economic deficits of its giant neighbors, like Zaire and Tanzania.

Nonaligned, small Burundi with its 4 million inhabitants, maintains independence thanks to a wise dose of outside aid and cooperation. East and West are trying to outdo one another for the construction of roads, development of agriculture or equipping and training that country's army.

RELATED REPORTAGE ON NINTH CONGRESS OF THE SOLIDARITY COMMITTEE

Solidarity Committee Congress Opens

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 26 Sep 81 pp 1, 2

[Text] The Fifanampiana Malagasy (Solidarity Committee of Madagascar), an association giving allegiance to the AKFM-KDRSM [Congress Party for Malagasy Independence--Democratic Committee to Support the Malagasy Socialist Revolution], is currently holding its 10th [as published] national congress. Some 10 foreign delegates from Mozambique, Vietnam, the USSR, the GDR and France, and also representatives from national or international bodies (ANC, AAPSO, WPC), are taking part in these proceedings, whose theme is entirely centered on ways of impelling the revolution.

The congress, which was opened yesterday morning in the covered stadium in Mahamasina, will continue until tomorrow. It was officially opened by Jean Marie Koko, vice president of the Fifanampiana Malagasy. Also present were the AKFM/KDRSM leaders, the CSR [Supreme Revolutionary Council] leaders Richard Andriamanjato and Arsene Hatsifehera, and Minister Gisele Rabesahala (Revolutionary Art and Culture).

The presidency of the Fifanampiana Malagasy having been vacant since the death of Henri Rakotobe last year, it was thus the vice president, Jean Marie Koko, who took the floor to point out the severe hardships which the committee had had to overcome during its 30 years of existence. At the same time, he recalled the committee's objectives: to come to the aid of all those in need without distinction as to political party or religion.

Yesterday afternoon, CSR member Richard Andriamanjato spoke of the current difficulties in Madagascar, "difficulties which," according to him, "are rooted in Madagascar's economic dependence on foreign countries and in the flaws of colonialism." He called on the people to make "sacrifices" and "to produce," indispensable conditions for him if the current Malagasy Socialist Revolution is to succeed.

Minister Rakotovao Andriantiana (P et T [Postal and Telecommunications Administration]) and CSR member Arsene Ratsifehera will speak this morning respectively about decentralized communities and about a subject which is much discussed at present, but about which there is never any agreement: "Peace and Development."

Tomorrow afternoon, the congress will publicly submit its motions and announce the names of the new members of the Fifanampiana Malagasy steering committee.

Appraisal of Ninth Congress

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 29 Sep 81 pp 1, 3

[Text] The day before yesterday, the covered stadium in Mahamasina, richly decorated with streamers, served as the framework for the closing ceremony of the Ninth National Congress of the Solidarity Committee of Madagascar, a social association affiliated with the AKFM-KDRSM. The CSR member Richard Andriamanjato, honorary president of this association, presided over this closing session, briefly recalling the development of the congress before presenting to the participants the new members of the Management Committee of the CSM [Solidarity Committee of Madagascar], headed by Maurice Rakotobe, with Mrs Gisele Rabesahala as sectetary general.

It was the turn of Maurice Rakotobe, the new president, who then summed up the motions adopted by the congress participants, including those dealing with international affairs: "There will never be real progress without effective peace in the world," he stressed on that occasion. As for Mrs Gisele Rabesahala, she emphasized the principal points raised by the Ninth Congress concerning the country's internal affairs, while expressing satisfaction about the fact that there were numerous social activities at present. She also recalled the efforts made in the rational utilization of the media for adequately informing the people, not forgetting to stress the need for combating the hijacking of goods; and in order to do so, it would be necessary for us to establish KPSVs (socialist fokonolona cooperatives for trade).

We must recall in passing that this Ninth Congress paid tribute to the lamented Henri Rakotobe, former president of the CSM, and Joseph Jaozandry, a dynamic member of that association in his lifetime. Streets in the Andravoahangy district, in the Firaisana III of the capital, will henceforth bear the names of these two distinguished individuals from the "Fifanampiana Malagasy," in order to immortalize what they did both for the association and for their fellow citizens.

Gifts from foreign associations with which the "Fifanampiana Malagasy" maintains friendly relations were made on that occasion: they are to be handed over subsequently to the local associations concerned with the handicapped, orphans, etc. In conclusion, let us note the presence of some representatives of the diplomatic corps accredited to the RDM [Democratic Republic of Madagascar] on that occasion and of guests of the Fifanampiana Malagasy, who had not yet taken the plane to return home on Sunday afternoon.

Ninth Congress Adopts Resolutions

Tananarive MADAGASCAR-MATIN in French 30 Sep 81 p 2

[Text] The Ninth National Congress of the Fifanampiana Malagasy (Solidarity Committee of Madagascar) officially terminated its proceedings Sunday afternoon in the covered stadium in Mahamasina. As is true for any self-respecting meeting of this type, a certain number of resolutions were adopted by the some 800 delegates from all parts of Madagascar and about 30 foreign observers. It is normal that the major decisions adopted during this congress by the Fifanampiana Malagasy, a body which is very close to the AKFM-KDRSM, are the very ones for which this revolutionary vondrona has been fighting for a long time.

At the national level, first of all, the congress accepted as its own the governmental explanation that the country at this time is going through a difficult period which requires each and every one "to increase production in all areas, a spirit of sacrifice and patience and austerity," while recognizing that "it will be difficult, however, to reach these goals if the masses are kept in ignorance." Furthermore, the congress repeated its "commitment to reply positively to the appeal made by President Didier Ratsiraka, on 30 December 1977, concerning the cooperation of all for a change in the people's attitude, especially among the young."

As for education, the Ninth FM [Fifanampiana Malagasy] Congress recommends the "general recognition" (by medals and diplomas) of teachers and educators. When they deserve it, of course! "Solidarity schools" will be set up. Their establishment will be the responsibility of each section of the FM, so as to avoid any further increase in the government's social expenditures, bodies like the Fifanampiana Malagasy being the most suitable for this type of work.

A new type of "sabotage" was denounced in this congress's resolutions: the "intentional depreciation of the diplomas of students who had studied in socialist countries as compared to those issued by capitalist countries." The congress very simply asked that "firm measures be taken to remedy this state of affairs."

The continuation of the campaign against illiteracy, education by books and newspapers, training and employment were also subjects and problems of concern to the congress participants, who called for greater "impartiality" in radio programs, also appealing to the FM members to contribute to the various operations aimed at improving the distribution of supplies throughout the country.

At the international level, this Ninth Congress of the Fifanampiana Malagasy was very pleased with what it called "the success of the socialist countries at all levels." In its final communique, the Fifanampiana Malagasy also stressed that the "imperialists for all that do not consider themselves beaten and do not hesitate to bring the world to the brink of total destruction." One can read there a specific condemnation of the United States for its refusal to respect its commitments regarding arms limitation, its decision to install Pershing 2 rockets in Europe. Lastly, the FM reaffirmed "the right of peoples to independence and to a free choice of their path to development." The United States' decision to "shift the nuclear war to the Indian Ocean" was also the object of condemnation by the Fifanampiana Malagasy, as were the imperialist actions in Namibia, Libya, Angola, Bolivia, South Africa and the western Sahara. In brief, wherever imperialism "threatens world peace." In comparison, the FM stressed the attitude of the USSR, "always ready to use dialogue to solve international problems."

DETAILS REPORTED ON USSR FLOATING DOCK

Cost Projections

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 2 Nov 81 p 8

[Text] The floating dock, built for Mozambique by the Soviet Union, has been budgeted at $13 million (about 455,000 contos) and will be paid for through repairs on Soviet ships.

The dock is tied up on the pier of Maputo, following a three-month journey from the Baltic Sea. A 19-man crew came with the enormous shipyard unit, towed by two ocean-going tugs at a speed of never more than 5 knots.

According to information revealed by the crew, this is the first time a floating dock has made such a long journey. The dock's equipment includes a workshop vessel of Bulgarian origin which was transported in the dock's belly. The second phase of the work begins now and involves the final installation of the dock about 2 kilometers from the mining port of Matola, in the Bay of Maputo.

The dock and the workshop vessel are equipped with all kinds of material necessary for major repairs without having to use any help or foreign support. The dredging work and the placement of the concrete caissons for the stabilization of the dock at the mouth of the Matola River will be handled by the Portuguese company "Construcoes Tecnicas." This work has been budgeted at about $600,000 and it is expected to be completed within the next 6 months.

The dock can accommodate ships of up to 4,500 tons (deadweight) and a length of 120 meters. It will be used mostly by the country's fishing and coastal fleet as well as foreign units, especially the Soviet fishing fleet operating in the Indian Ocean.

There is another dock in Maputo but it does not have the same capacity as this new unit. This purchase has been budgeted at $13 million and, according to sources contacted by AIM [MOZAMBIQUE INFORMATION AGENCY], the USSR will be repaid through repairs on Soviet ships.

A vocational training program will be carried out to enable Mozambican technicians to handle the overall maintenance and operation of the dock, gradually replacing the 70 Soviet technicians who will help get the undertaking started. It is expected that all operations will be handled by Mozambicans within 2 years.

Installation Begins

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 3 Nov 81 p 2

[Text] Work on the definite installation of the floating dock for ship repair, currently tied up at the Maputo pier, has begun. During the first phase, this work calls for the transportation of the pertinent equipment of Construcoes Tecnicas from Beira to Maputo. Responsibility for the transportation of this equipment by sea rests with NAVIQUE and it is expected that the equipment will arrive in the capital within a month.

The metal-working enterprise is also involved in the work of installing the dock and it is expected that the completion of this phase will take 6 months.

During a subsequent phase involving the operation of the entire complex, plans call for the construction of access roads both by land and by sea, the creation of warehousing areas and administrative facilities, in addition to a pier-bridge to enable vessels, which are to be repaired, to tie up.

The establishment of the infrastructure facilities is designed to eliminate difficulties especially regarding telephone communications, transportation of personnel and materials, since the final installation of the dock will take place in an area remote from access roads; the situation is further complicated by difficulties in electric energy and water supply. Housing for technicians and food supplies are some of the problems to be resolved; it is expected that the former can be solved soon while the latter will take longer.

FOREIGN MINISTER INTERVIEWED ON 'CONTACT GROUP' VISIT

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 5 Nov 81 p 5

[Text] Just hours after the end of conversations held Tuesday between the government and the Contact Group, Mozambican Foreign Relations Minister Joaquim Chissano briefly talked to Mozambican and foreign journalists. The interview essentially revolved around the new proposals from the five Western countries regarding the Namibian issue.

Question: Mr Minister, can you give us your opinion on conversations with the Contact Group?

Joaquim Chissano: The delegation from the group of five Western countries has brought us proposals on what they call "constitutional principles." During this phase we are confining ourselves to exchanging opinions on the basis of the clarification of some of those main points and we are studying the proposals and consulting SWAPO and other Frontline countries before commenting on these proposals.

One of the things which we found confirmed once again is that Resolution 435 for us remains the basis for solving the problem of Namibia and that this resolution must not be amended.

We reiterate this and this serves as guideline for future discussions between us and the group of five, between us and SWAPO and between the Frontline countries; this also applies to the group of five countries itself and international authorities, the United Nations, etc.

Question: Do the proposals of the five call for amendments in [resolution] 435?

Answer: We must study them before we can answer that.

Question: Will there be a meeting of the Frontline countries to spell out the position of its member countries on these proposals?

Answer: I think that we are first going to have to have consultations in order to figure out whether this is necessary or not. All I know is that there will be consultations but how this will take shape I do not as yet know.

Question: Can these proposals form a basis for Namibian independence?

Answer: The basis is Resolution 435. They (the proposals of the five) are constitutional principles, they are not the basis for solving the problem of Namibia.

Question: But can they be considered a step forward?

Answer: The group of five has not even talked in terms of this being a step forward. They purely and simply said that these were some constitutional principles; they did not mention this as a step forward or backward. This is why we are going to have to study those proposals.

Question: But do they or do they not supplement Resolution 435?

Answer: We will have to study the whole thing in the People's Republic of Mozambique and then we are going to have to consult the others in order to respond to each of your questions. These are the questions we are going to have to answer, in other words, we are going to have to see whether these proposals interfere or do not interfere with Resolution 435, whether or not they supplement it, whether they are acceptable. All of these questions are a part of the study which will have to be conducted.

Question: Can we look forward to a press conference after you have studied the proposals?

Answer: If things were clear, then you would need no press conference. You have to wait with much patience.

Question: Can you describe the conversations with them in one word?

Answer: The delegation of Mozambique makes no attempt to express any opinions but has questions to ask and wants answers. We are going to study this situation now to determine whether these responses are or are not satisfactory.

Question: But can we say that the deadlock in negotiations on Namibia has been broken?

Answer: I do not know that either because negotiations are going on between SWAPO and South Africa. We also have contacts with the Contact Group but that is only just one more contact. After we have studied the proposals, after South Africa has given its response, after SWAPO has come up with its answer, and after negotiations between SWAPO and South Africa are resumed, at that point, we are going to say that the deadlock has been broken. But right now that would be premature.

Question: A situation is developing regarding the fact that the South Africans are occupying a part of southern Angola. Will that issue be raised during the conversations?

Answer: We are not going to raise that question because that is not a factor for discussion right now as far as we are concerned.

Question: Mr Minister, can you tell us something about the constitutional principles that were submitted by the Contact Group?

Answer: No. Right now I do not know what to say about those principles because we have to realize that even translating those words into Portuguese is a big job that requires caution so that we may figure out exactly what they mean.

Question: The South African journal THE STAR published a version of those proposals. Is it correct or is it just their imagination?

Answer: I do not know whether it is correct or not.

Question: Is Mozambique still critical in relation to the Contact Group or do you believe that your action can help solve the problem of Namibia?

Answer: We never said that the Contact Group is harming the search for a solution in Namibia. We always replied to the effect that the Contact Group must continue its work and that a plausible solution must be presented on the basis of Resolution 435 which we would have to analyze and that is what we are going to do anyway.

Question: Could the submission of the constitutional principles dignify the abandonment of Resolution 435 by the Contact Group?

Answer: This is something we are going to have to find out, in other words, whether those proposals do or do not clash with Resolution 435. And if they do clash, we have to figure out in what way and whether this is a positive or negative development. We always said that if they find something positive, we are going to analyze the situation and we are going to continue the discussions in this sense. We never doubted that they would find a positive solution going beyond 435. Resolution 435 already is a concession. The roadblock is on the South African side. This is why, if they find a way which is acceptable to South Africa or which follows Resolution 435, we will go along with that but we are going to have to find out whether this involves an amendment of 435. It may be that the people involved do not yet see what they want to see. They came with a question which is completely new and which they refer to as constitutional principles.

Question: There was a point at which it seems that there were disagreements in the Contact Group, mainly after the election of the new French government. There does not seem to be identity of positions between the Americans and the French, for example, and perhaps between the Americans and the Europeans. Did any of that emerge during the last conversations or did they come out with a united position?

Answer: The spokesman here was French. They certainly agreed on this in advance among themselves and I do not know anything about any such differences. What I do know is that the French government for some time now has not known whether it should continue in the Contact Group or drop out following the change in administration; we were consulted by the French government in this connection, as to what should be done, and whether they would have our support if they were to continue in the Contact Group. We responded positively and they continue to stay in. They consulted not only us but various African governments to find out what their position is and that is why they stay with the Contact Group. There is a major contradiction, if you can call it that. The initiative of the five was paralyzed for some time in Geneva because the United States government did not adopt any position. The remaining members of the group of five tried to persuade the United States government that it is necessary to move forward and that is what was called the disagreement. It may be that you have information to the effect that there are disagreements but I was not officially informed on that.

LACK OF TRANSPORTATION AFFECTS COAL DISTRIBUTION

Beira DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE in Portuguese 8 Oct 81 pp 8-9

[Article by Santos Artur]

> [Excerpts] Moatize Coal Mines (CARBOMOC), in Tete Province: gigantic black mountains of coal are heaped near the installations of the company headquarters.
> We are in Moatize, dear reader. The mountain to which we refer represents thousands of contos in foreign exchange and millions of meticals extracted from the ground by the miners; thousands of contos represented by this huge stock, the product of almost 3 years of work (almost 35,000 tons of coal), now stored at this strategic production unit.

According to information gathered by DIARIO DE MOZAMBIQUE correspondents, the reason this strategic product for export and domestic consumption is being held at the site has basically to do with the difficulty in delivering it to the port of Beira, for export, and to other locations such as "Acucareira de Mozambique" and the Dondo Cement Plant, among other important production units that use coal.

The CFM-Centro [Central Mozambique Railways], for acceptable reasons in this phase, is not yet in a position to respond to the requests for delivery of the coal produced at CARBOMOC.

In addition to a limited fleet of coal cars, there is also the poor state of preservation and the location (in certain instances) of the rail line linking Moatize to Beira.

In addition to being very old, the line is inconveniently laid across mountains with a very steep incline. As can be logically deduced, trains have difficulty handling these grades, pulling a large number of loaded freight cars.

In general, these are some of the problems resulting in the accumulation of the mountains of coal at CARBOMOC in Moatize. If distributed, the coal would bring in huge sums in foreign exchange for the country and reduce the problems at the production units that use coal.

As we learned from engineer Alfredo Conme, CARBOMOC's director of public affairs and supply, the CFM-Centro now moves only 26 carloads of coal per day. To fully meet CARBOMOC's needs, it would have to double this number, at least.

Mining Does Not Stop

The lack of transportation to distribute the coal has in no way curbed the activity of the CARBOMOC workers. Instead of declining, production has stayed within the goals established by the party and government. The Central State Plan for this year for the Moatize Coal mines is being met, the company officials assured us.

To meet this plan, CARBOMOC currently has 2,600 workers (1,400 in the mines), working at four mines: Chipanga 3, Chipanga 4, Chipanga 7 and Chipanga 8. A new mine, Chipanga 11, now in the preparatory stage, is expected to go into production soon.

Next year two more mines will be opened: Chipanga 9 and Chipanga 10.

At medium range, and pursuant to the guidelines of the Third FRELIMO Congress, an open pit coal mine will go into operation. It will be located in the region of Mitele, below Chipanga 8.

Of the 2,600 CARBOMOC workers, 100 are internationalist cooperants from the GDR. Working side by side with the Mozambicans, they have contributed greatly to the growth of this sector of activity.

NUTRITIONIST REASSURES POPULATION ON DANGER OF CASSAVA

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 4 Nov 81 p 8

[Text] "Cassava is good and it is not dangerous. But its preparation and storage require care, just like other foods. The best quality for consumption is the "sweet" cassava, and it should be consumed in conjunction with other foods, a nutrition specialist from the Ministry of Health told our reporter.

The cassava issue has provoked fear in many people following the outbreak of paralysis known as "tropical neuropathy" that has affected some areas in Nampula.

The nutritionist noted that there is no reason to be afraid. Cassava has been under cultivation in Mozambique for over 200 years. The people long ago learned the basic rules for the consumption of this root and they know which types of cassava can be considered more dangerous.

What happened in Nampula was exceptional, a result of the food shortage that created a number of problems. Cassava, as other foods, contains a toxin derived from cyanide. The nutritionist explained that "this can only be dangerous when ingested in large quantities."

In some areas of Nampula, particularly in Memba, the lack of rain in the last 2 years made cassava--and especially the bitter variety--the mainstay of the people's diet. This is how cassava turned dangerous. Under such conditions, some of the people, besides not eating properly--a fact which only makes them more vulnerable--did not apply required rules for the preparation and storage of cassava because of the near-famine situation.

"Not all varieties of cassava contain this toxin in harmful quantities. The so-called 'sweet' type contains so little of it that it cannot hurt anyone. This is the variety most often used in Mozambique," the nutritionist explained.

The fact that some people have stopped eating cassava following the outbreak of paralysis in Nampula does not make sense, because the same substance that exists in cassava is also found in a large variety of other foods such as corn, lettuce, etc. Just like in cassava, though, the toxin can be found in such minute quantities that it is not harmful to one's health.

"Even the 'bitter' cassava can be consumed if properly treated," the nutritionist added, stressing that such treatment is familiar to the people, who have been using all the varieties of cassava for a long time without harmful consequences.

Various processes can be used in preparing and storing cassava to eliminate any toxins it contains. Both the drying and fermentation process are well known.

FUTURE PHARMACEUTICAL PLANT WILL SAVE FOREIGN EXCHANGE

Beira DIARIO DE MOCAMBIQUE in Portuguese 8 Oct 81 p 16

[Article by Ezequiel Ambrosio]

> [Text] Maputo--In 1985 Mozambique could have its pharmaceutical industry established. In the first phase, it will be devoted to production of pills, lozenges, capsules syrups, creams, salves and drops. The next phase, to begin in 1986 or 1987, will be marked by manufacture of ampules and serums.
> The imformation came to DIARO DE MOZAMBIQUE from a reliable source in the Ministry of Health, who informed us that our country will save about $2 million (about 74,000 contos) a year on imports of medicines.

Development of the national pharmaceutical industry is also important in that it means an end to our dependence on imports of these costly products. We also learned that implementation of the project will cost the country at least 500,000 contos.

Because this is the first time the RPM [People's Republic of Mozambique] has launched a project of this type and scope, a key issue at this time is the training of qualified technical cadres for the proper function of the sector.

Foreign countries and firms have already been contacted to supply the technology needed for the Oralite plant, in the city of Beira. The importance of this plant lies in the training of national cadres for the future pharmaceutical industry in the RPM.

The plant producing Oralite (hydrated salts taken orally in treatment of diarrhea) is very inportant to our country, considering that diarrhea is an infant health problem today.

The plant will basically serve the domestic market.

The civil construction works and the selection of personnel for later training should be completed by the end of December. The respective equipment should arrive from Hungary in the last week of next January, and will be mounted between February and March.

Personnel training will begin in April, lasting for 3 months, and production will be initiated in July.

Execution of this project is the responsibility of UNIDO, which contracted with a Hungarian firm to provide the technology for the project.

DPRK-ASSISTED SALT PRODUCTION

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 3 Nov 81 p 1

[Excerpts] The salt flat complex at Nova Mambone, in Inhambane, was formally opened yesterday following the start of operations in the first two 50 hectares constituting the project's first phase. By 1985, the new government salt production enterprise will turn out 7,500 tons of that product, which is the current installed capacity.

The Government Salt Enterprise had already gone in experimental operation 5 months ago at Nova Mambone. As of yesterday, that production unit had already extracted 1,040 tons of salt.

By the end of December, the Mambone salt flat complex will reach a figure of 1,080 tons of salt and that is its first target during this start-up phase. If weather conditions continue to be favorable, as they are now, it is hoped that the goal will be slightly exceeded.

The opening ceremony took place in the installations of the new complex to which the trade attache of the People's Democratic Republic of Korea in Maputo had also gone.

The Nova Mambone salt flats, which at this time constitute the country's third-largest production unit, is endowed with excellent technical conditions for correct processing. The Nova Mambone salt flat complex was built under the technical guidance of specialists from the RPD [People's Democratic Republic] of Korea as part of the economic cooperation agreements signed with Mozambique.

SOLUTIONS TO PROBLEMS, DIFFICULTIES OF STUDENTS IN GDR

Maputo DOMINGO in Portuguese No 2, 4 Oct 81 pp 8-9

[Article by Jorge Costa: "Specialized Workers"]

[Excerpts] A few thousand Mozambican youths are in the GDR learning a profession while actively engaged in the productive process. They are temporarily employed as on-the-job trainees for a period of 4 years, or have grants for professional training courses for 2 and 1/2 to 3 years. Their fields include agriculture, metalworking, the textile industry and manufacture of cargo vehicles and machinery.

They are all between 18 and 20 years old, with a limited education. They voluntarily signed up with the Ministry of Labor, which organized their placement in the GDR, where they are learning special skills to be put to use in Mozambique within a few months.

The young people are comfortably housed and receive wages comparable to the German workers'.

Easier Life Depends on Leadership

It is not easy to be in a strange country where the customs and language are unfamiliar. In addition to this natural problem, the environment is totall foreign, down to the smallest detail, beginning with the food. With a little more effort now, try to imagine how a young man would feel when, days after leaving a remote province in our country, he suddenly finds himself in a modern city, the capital of a technologically advanced country.

Add to this other basic factors, such as the lack of news from one's family or one's own country and you will have an idea of the problems this young man is apt to experience shortly after his arrival.

This is the first shock; whether or not it becomes worse depends on various factors. From our visit, we concluded that the biggest problems, arising basically in some lodging or work places, were encountered by the first group that went to the GDR. The later groups are adapting more easily to the new life and the different society. Why? Because they are not only being better prepared for their departure but are also benefiting from the experience of the groups who have gone before them.

The greater or lesser severity of the problems is closely related to the leadership and the adaptation of these young people to German society.

By coincidence, on the last 2 days of my stay in the GDR, I encountered three typical exampl s of situations that cause, or eliminate, problems.

In a truck repair plant, the Mozambicans complain of problems in discussing things with the plant managers. There is, infact, a professional training program, but it is offered in stages and is almost always improvised. Offsetting this, the Mozambican workers in this production unit have strong leadership, and discuss and resolve day-to-day problems in a democratic way.

In another factory (batteries and dry cells), there is also proper leadership among the Mozambicans and excellent direction at the plant level. The Mozambicans know what each phase of their professional training will be, step by step, until the day they return home. The German workers make every effort to include them, inviting them to their o n homes and, at the same time, encouraging them to engage in Mozambican cultural activities. Every Mozambican is known to every German worker by name. There are no problems.

The third unit is a meat derivatives plant. The plant management is faultless and concerns itself with training, but the Mozambicans are not carrying on a dialogue. They are failing because their leadership is poor, and full of problems. The least disciplined, the most alcholic and disruptive individuals are members of the leadership itself. In the sporadic meetings, they practice demagoguery; problems are never examined and guidelines are never offered.

Thus, in the first unit, the workers are happy about being in the GDR, but are dissatisfied because they do not know precisely how their professional training will be conducted.

In the second unit, there are no problems. In the last socialist emulation campaign, one of the prize winners was a Mozambican--Jaime Zita--who is specializing in metalworking.

There are serious problems in the third unit. The Mozambicans are described as failing to report for work. They lie to the physicians to get on sick report, appear inebriated both at work and in public places, and cause fights.

"The Mozambicans are highly disciplined and model workers. The biggest problem is in making them understand that they cannot learn everything in one day," we were told by the German workers in several units we visited.

Except for an occasional case in which Mozambicans were presented as a bad example, the general opinion of our countrymen in the GDR is very high.

We would almost have to believe that the bad elements were chosen and placed together in this or that area of activity, which is absolutely ridiculous. The fact is that, wherever there are problems, there are also leadership problems.

The office of the Labor Ministry of the People's Republic of Mozambique in the GDR does not have the capacity to control the situation.

The office has a small staff, and since its members must travel constantly to various points in the country, they do not have time to go deeply into the problems. Perhaps for this very reason, the office has become an agency limited to administrative means to resolve the everyday problems that are inevitable when we are talking about hundreds of people--young people--away from their own environment.

There are problems that understanda ly catch our young people by surprise, and it is impossible to help them out here, to explain things as they come up. Even if they have the same amount of education, the son of a peasant from Cabo Delgado almost certainly will not interpret phenomena the same way as the son of a factory worker from Maputo.

The fact is, however, that all these young people must live and work together, get along together for many months. There will inevitably be clashes. In some cases they are not important, while in others they take on huge proportions, from insignificant beginnings.

I went to an enormous building in the heart of Maputo where Mozambicans are housed. They are the workers at the battery plant mentioned earlier in the article. I paid random visits to several apartments, which consist of a sitting room, bathroom, kitchen and bedroon; every worker has the right to one of these apartments, which are fully furnished. In all the quarters I entered, there was the inevitable record player, acquired on the market by the occupant of the apartment.

In Weimar, a city in the south of the GDR, there is a housing center for Mozambicans, who have formed into small groups on the basis of a dialect and region of origin. They explained that the first group leaders were not self-disciplined, abused alcohol and were authoritarins. When they were called to account, the leaders said this was how it was done in their own provinces. These group leaders were not only totally discredited among their colleagues but fostered bad attitudes. The designation of new group leaders, although recent, is already showing results, and the last report from Weimar said these problems were beginning to be overcome.

Drinking also Question of Custom

At present, our country is still having supply problems. We do not produce enough to supply our entire population.

The GDR experienced a similar situation many years ago. Today, the problem no longer exists. There is enough of everything and it is available everywhere. Many Mozambicans who are now learning a trade in the GDR were still students back in Mozambique, supported by their families. In every part of the GDR, they are now receiving high wages and have the money to buy anything they see. Some of them come, make German friends, and want to go drinking with them. Well, in addiion to beer and wine, there are many other alcoholic beverages to which the Germans are accustomed but our young people are not. The inevitable result is that, in every group that comes, two or three ment begin to abuse alcohol. Some cases are occurrring precisely in locales where there are leadership problems and, hence, a lack of discipline.

These impressions might seem to some to indicate that our worker-students in the GDR are creating serious problems, that we are creating a group of delinquents. Nothing is further from the truth. There have been serious problems and there are still problems, as we indicated. All the problems are known, however. While it was in the GDR recently, a delegation led by our acting labor minister made a full study of the situation, visiting almost all the locales where there are Mozambicans.

BRIEFS

FISHING PORT CONSTRUCTION DELAY--At least 4,800 contos a month in damages are recorded with the delay in completing construction of the fishing port in the city of Beira, Sofala Province. The shortage of stone is causing the delay in this important project, which was begun in June 1976 and scheduled to be completed by December 1979. Construcoes Tecnicas, a Portuguese firm contracted to carry out the project, has been taking steps to see that it will be completed in the first or second quarter of next year. Construction is now almost at a standstill because of the stone problem, which is also affecting many other projects of national importance. At first the stone was acquired in the area of Chiluvo, in this province, but after intensive study of the area's potential, it was concluded that the local reserves were insufficient to keep up with the rapid pace of construction at the fishing port. Hence, a quarry in Chimoio was selected, but the lack of efficient transport means to deliver the stone is preventing completion of the project as planned. A total of 210,000 contos was to be invested in the project. Some 180,000 contos have already been spent to date, and, because of delays in delivery of the stone, it is believed that by the time the project is completed, the initial estimate will be exceeded by many thousands of meticals. Countless efforts are being exerted with the agents responsible for arranging delivery of the stone. If the works are to be completed by April of next year, at the earliest, it will require delivery of at least 8 freight cars (about 240 cubic meters of stone) per day. DRYDOCK PURCHASE--Mozambique has purchased a drydock from the Soviet Union for 450 million meticals. The dock, which will be used to repair coastal fishing vessels, has been en route to the port of Maputo for almost 3 months, towed by two tugboats. It should arrive in November and will be installed 1,800 meters above the Matola petroleum docks. The dock is 116 meters long and 30 meters wide; it weighs 2,500 tons. As we learned, the dry dock carries a repaif ship 67.5 meters long and 13.4 meters wide, weighing 1,360 tons. The ship can operate on the high seas, doing carpentry and metalwork and making repairs to the electrical system, hull and boilers on any type of ship which has been damaged. The dry dock left the Soviet port of Klaipeda, on the Baltic Sea, and traveled by the North Sea and Atlantic Ocean, entering the Mediterranean Sea through the Strait of Gibralter and proceeding to the Suez Canal. It passed through the canal 2 weeks agc and is now on the Red Sea proceeding to the Gulf of Aden and the Indian Ocean. According to engineer Conceicao, 50 specialists in ship repair will soon arrive in our country to work with the equipment and also to train Mozambican cadres. AIRPORT MODERNIZATION--Mozambique's airports are undergoing modernization. Inauguration of the new Tete airport was planned for 25 September, but has been postponed for a few more days, according to engineer Jose Viegas. Viegas added that the electrical installation at the facility is being completed, which will permit operation of the installed VOR system. VOR is a modern system of aid to air navigation, enabling planes to make very accurate landing approaches under any weather conditions. We were unable to verify the reasons for the postponement of the inauguration of the new Tete air terminal. Also, according to Viegas, the radio tower at Quelimane has already been installed and is being tested. The previous beacon was not properly lined up with the runway and functioned irregularly, so "Mozambique Airports" decided to put up a new building and install new equipment, which has been done. With respect to lengthening the runway at Maputo, Viegas reported that the work is going well and should be completed by the end of the year, as scheduled. HOME INFORMATION TO STUDENTS ABROAD--One of the main concerns of the delegation that recently visited the GDR, which was headed by Minister of Justice Teodato Hunguana, was to keep Mozambicans in that country informed of events in Mozambique. Approximately 4,000 Mozambicans are attending professional training courses in the GDR as specialized workers, professional training monitors, engineering teachers, etc. Teodato Hunguana stated that a plan was drawn up and signed for 1982, including the signature of a protocol stipulating an increase in scholarships for professional training courses in the country's strategic economic areas, such as metallurgy, mining, textiles, agriculture, forestry and meat processing. The protocol also includes the construction of professional training centers in Mozambique and support for the development of professional training within this country, in accordance with the principle that conditions must be created to foster in-country training. In the field of information, which Teodato Hunguana termed fundamental, the mechanisms for an exchange of information were studied, aimed at establishing a flow of information from the GDR to Mozambique and vice-versa, so that Mozambican students in the GDR are kept informed of realities in their own country. ANTI-SWAPO ACTIVITIES OF SOUTH AFRICAN POLICE DESCRIBED

Ode to South Africa's Police

Windhoek REPUBLIKEIN in Afrikaans 13 Oct 81 p 4

/Article by Gene Travers: "The South African Police Who Strike at SWAPO"/

/Text/ Strongly built, tough and sinewy men are these, with bushy shocks of beard. They are almost superhumanly fit, but they don't talk much. These are the men of the South African Police who daily inflict bloody noses on SWAPO terrorist forces in the bush along Angola's border.

Shoulder to shoulder with black policemen they attain great successes in fighting terrorism and they play an important role in this respect. Seldom, if ever, a hero's song is sung for them, but while millions of people in South Africa and in the South-West sleep in security of their homes, they defy indescribable dangers in keeping SWAPO in its place.

Their equipment is unorthodox; this is because they have adapted themselves to the circumstances. Most of them are using the enemy's own weapons to fight him and it is not not at all unusual to see a policeman, armed with an AK-47, running along the bush in pursuit of terrorists.

The police bushfighter goes dressed in canvas shoes, shorts and a T-shirt, because in most instances he has to pursue the terrorist over long distances in order to make contact with him. SWAPO terrorists, who find out that the police are on their tracks, flee like Cape hares before them. Then the terrorists must be pursued over rough terrain through the thick bush.

During the REPUBLIKEIN's visit to the border a policeman pursued a terrorist over a distance of about 30 kilometers, under a bloody hot sun, before he could kill him.

The police's modus operandi is simple. As soon as there is information that terrorists are on the move in a certain area they are tracked down. As soon as the track is found the trackers rush to the trail while a relief group rides in a troop carrier behind.

A tracker who tires out falls back and climbs into the vehicle. His place on the front is immediately taken up by a comrade. This method tires out the terrorist forcing him to stand up and fight.

Various groups of police operate in sections of different regions. Each group consists of a number of white policemen who are responsible for driving the vehicles and manning the machineguns mounted on top of the vehicle. When the trail becomes "hot," some of the white policemen join the trackers and the pursuit of the enemy begins.

The white policemen are accompanied by a large group of black constables who are mostly Ovambos. These trackers are referred to as "buddies" (bosom friends) by their white leaders. A close comradship is forged between white and black constables and woe befalls the terrorist who shoots a policeman's "buddy's." It's a common thing for a section leader to pursue a terrorist for 200 kilometers and kill him for having murdered one of his buddies.

The vehicles, designated as "Casspirs," were designed in Pretoria especially for the police and they are also assembled there. The Casspir is bulletproof and almost nothing can stop it. Large trees are simply pulled out of their way if they stand on the tracks of a terrorist.

The local population is referred to as the LP (or PB) and there are good relations between these people and the police.

Rumors that so-called "murder groups" exist in the ranks of the police and that the local population is being intimidated have also been quashed.

The police take action only against armed terrorists and the local population is, in most instances, eager to provide the police with information on the movements of the terrorists.

While the REPUBLIKEIN moved along with the police after terrorists, no policeman ever entered a kraal and nobody's premises were searched.

The terrorists themselves are surprisingly strong and can run for long distances with little water. Their equipment is not of the best kind and their uniforms look ragged.

A wounded terrorist told the REPUBLIKEIN that terrorist commanders in Angola are telling them that the South Africans have already fled as far south as Keetmanshoop before the SWAPO forces and that the police are shooting with "water bullets." It is not until the terrorists arrive in Ovamboland that they become terribly disillusioned and many of them pay with their lives.

Last Monday, when I reported at the Police Battalion Headquarters in Oshakati I was immediately admitted in the police ranks. I was given an automatic weapon and issued a camouflaged uniform. I could move around freely. Often I have run up to the front lines behind the terrorists. All the questions have been answered with frankness and it has been clear that the police have nothing to hide.

Few terrorists surrender, but those who do or are wounded, are taken to Oshakati where they get medical attention and then sent to a rehabilitation center. At the center they are given jobs and paid for their work.

Many of them are also allowed to go away for the weekend and they present no problems. The REPUBLIKEIN was offered the opportunity of talking to them and to go through their quarters.

Police Claim Heavy SWAPO Casualties

Windhoek REPUBLIKEIN in Afrikaans 14 Oct 81 p 7

/Article by Gene Travers: "Death Toll Proves Police Fighting Ability"/

/Text/ Although the South African Police in the operational area are keeping SWAPO terrorists at bay and are actually killing them every day in the course of skirmishes, this is not to say that the terrorist is not a formidable fighter.

When cornered terrorists can fight back with determination and it is only the police's better fighting ability that prevents more casualties among their own ranks.

During the past 10 weeks the police have killed more than 200 terrorists in the operational area, while only one Ovambo tracker of the police force was wounded on the leg.

The police fighting against SWAPO in Ovamboland have lost only one policeman and four trackers in combat against SWAPO since the war began. The terrorists in Angola are being given the wrong impression by their commanders that the South Africans and the South-Westerners in the operational area are fleeing before SWAPO like Cape hares.

In Angola the South Africans are apparently being called "running dogs" and some of the terrorists captured in Ovamboland were under the belief that the South Africans had already fled head over heels to Keetmanshoop.

It is only when he crosses the border that the terrorist becomes terribly disillusioned. Terrorists who make war against innocent and unarmed civilians take to their heels when they learn that the South African police are on their trail.

Terrorists have the advantage in the sense that the police must follow their tracks and must do so at a fast pace in order to tire them out. They also have the advantage that they can easily set traps for the police.

Terrorists are moreover extremely tough and can easily cover 60 kilometers per day over rough terrain without water. They also use all sorts of methods to prevent trackers from finding their trails. For example they run over stumps and walk on leaves so as to make their trails undetectable.

But when a police Ovambo tracker get on the terrorist's trail then all his tricks are of no help. Nine out of ten times the police tracks him down and he is killed if he chooses to fight.

A terrorist does not give up easily and would rather choose to fight it out. It is for this reason that so many of them are killed. Last week the police found two terrorists who committed suicide rather than fight against the police.

Combat Case With SWAPO Described

Windhoek REPUBLIKEIN in Afrikaans 15 Oct 81 p 4

/Text/ It is impossible to describe the state of mind of a policeman when he goes into combat. Some of them have been involved in the war for more than 3 years and bullets streaking around them are nothing unusual.

Everything happens lightning fast and a combat in most instances lasts only a few minutes. To give the reader an idea of such a situation I will as accurately as possible describe what my own observation was during a contact with the terrorists.

It was 14 October about 3 pm. We had been on the tracks of three terrorists since 10 am. We were closing in on them and the Casspir vehicles were moving along a spread-out line. A number of policemen ahead of the vehicles had run into the tracks. I was sitting in the back of a Casspir when a sweat-covered tracker jumped in and said that at any moment contact would be made with the enemy. I had discharged my rifle in the vehicle and was holding a camera in my left hand. I was armed with a 357 Magnum revolver which hung in a holster on my side.

Four policemen were running ahead of me. Our section leader was driving the Casspir and Col Leon Mellet was manning the machinegun mounted on top of the Casspir.

Suddenly I heard a machinegun ahead of us and the bullets hit the Casspir diagonally on the left side just behind me and then ricocheted. My first reaction was to fall flat, but the policemen in front of me stormed forced fearlessly and I ran after them. I cannot remember exactly what was going on inside my head, but strangely enough I felt no fear. Probably this was because I was running along the best fighters in the world and possibly this was the excitement of the moment. I can remember that I was wondering why Colonel Mellet was not firing the machinegun. Later I learned that we were in his line of fire or in the range of death (doodsakker).

About 25 meters ahead of us a terrorist sprang forth and was swinging his arm back to throw a grenade. All four of the policemen fired at him at the same time.

It was as though an invisible fist had struck the terrorist on the chest throwing him back about 3 meters. The grenade fell beside him in the sand.

I took cover and I heard the grenade explode; a thick cloud of dust arose all around us. I looked around and noted that I way lying flat on the ground on my stomach. The camera was pressing against the left side of my chest and I was clutching the revolver in my right hand. I don't know when I drew the weapon from the holster. I can remember that the weapon was full of sand and then I realized that I could possibly have trouble with the mechanism. The first move thereafter was when the section leader stepped down and asked if anybody was wounded. It was all over. Policemen appeared as though from nowhere and they gathered around the fallen terrorist.

I could not detect any pleasure in their victory. For me this was an exceptional experience--for them a day's task. I don't know what the psychological effect is on the policemen who finds himself in such a situation every day; nor can I ascertain that, because these men do not talk very much. They do not talk about their actions in such instances. It is only in a roundabout way that you learn from a policeman of this or that policeman's heroic deeds.

In one of the police bases I saw a policeman tap his colleague on the shoulder and tell him: "I'll buy you a beer tonight... that terrorist had me right in his gun sight when you shot him."

...And with that nothing more was said.

NATIONAL PARTY REFUSES TO BE BOUND BY RESOLUTION 435

Windhoek ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG in German 13 Oct 81 p 2

[Editorial by H Feddersen: "NP Basically Unimportant Now"]

[Text] Friday night, NP [National Party] leader Pretorius let the whole world know: the NP (SWA) and Aktur will not be intimidated by anybody. They no longer feel morally bound by Resolution 435. The Reagan administration, too, has managed to make cosmetic changes, at best, on this much maligned document which should best have been buried in the snow of Switzerland immediately after the round of negotiations in Geneva. This is the view of Pretorius and his party newspaper.

It is not surprising that the party must look for a new profile after losing such leaders as A H Du Plessis and Eben van Ziji. This new profile should be created most easily by looking to the right and retrieving a few lost sheep from the HNP [Herstigte Nasionale Party] corral. For this reason it is understandable that an unimportant announcement appears in such prominent light.

If anyone reads through the documents of the NP SWA, he will ask himself why this party in the middle of page 5 of its pamphlet "Nege Vrae oor Suidwes" ["Nine Questions on South-West Africa"] feels "morally" bound to accept an election that is in agreement with Western plans, was accepted by South Africa on 25 April 1979 and is contained in UN Resolution 435. The same document makes it clear that it is not the NP which must decide about acceptance of the UN resolution but rather South Africa, which after our own elections of 1978 would convince the "elected representatives" of the necessity of an election under UN supervision, after first agreeing to Resolution 435.

We must remember that immediately after the National Assembly was established, P W Botha and Pik Botha negotiated with our own leaders behind closed doors and afterward announced that it should be our future policy to work toward an election under UN supervision. This goodwill...has now become a matter of defiance on the part of the NP (SWA).

This means that the new slogans of the NP have lost their importance unless they are merely a matter of party politics (image). It does not matter who and if anybody at all feels "bound" to Resolution 435, as long as the most important negotiation partners (South Africa, SWAPO and the Western mediation group) can agree that internationally--or half-internationally--recognized independence is possible. To shift the blame to our own parties will not again be as easy for South Africa as it was in Geneva. South Africa must now make its position clear and, from this point of view, yesterday's statement by Prime Minister P W Botha offers more hope and shows more goodwill than the NP (SWA) is offering.

Any of our parties who still do not take independence seriously and still do not understand that South Africa in its negotiations with the United States is mainly concerned with its own security (and therefore wants to "get rid of" Namibia as fast as possible) have lost their "important" role a long time ago.

WESTERN SETTLEMENT PLAN EYED WITH HOPE

Windhoek DIE SUIDWESTER in Afrikaans 20 Oct 81 p 4

/Editorial: "A Challenge"/

/Text/ In the course of the years the people of South-West Africa have gotten used to accepting international interfence in South-West Africa with a kind of stoical resignation. Now the table is once again laid for the next round in this process of many years.

After yesterday's visit by the South African Prime Minister and two of his senior cabinet colleagues, we believe that the parties here realize how important it is that South-West Africa be disengaged from being an international bone of contention as soon as possible.

Therefore, we also believe that all parties which wish to contribute will approach this matter with the greatest earnestness and responsibility. If the efforts toward an acceptable and peaceful settlement should now fail, there might be far-reaching consequences, not only for South-West Africa but also for all of southern Africa and for the Western world.

Although the final details are as yet unknown, there are indications that the Western plan for settlement provides for the protection of the right of private opinion as well as for the protection of the rights of minorities.

At the same time there are very strong indications that the Western contact group will insist that a democratic test be built into the settlement process. There is as yet no clarity regarding the nature of this test.

If and when such a test comes, however, it is of decisive importance that it be won by a party--or a front of parties--which will see to it that the guarantees in question be properly entrenched in the constitution of South-West Africa.

No guarantee, however nice it may sound, can in the long run be effective unless backed up by a state structure by virtue of which it can be enforced--not from without but from within. This means that each minority group be placed in a position to watch over its own interests and to protect them against a majority assault.

In a unitary state governed on the basis of one man one vote, this is impossible. In illustration of this we may cite the recent example of Zimbabwe.

A repetition of what happened there must at all cost be avoided in South-West Africa. In this regard the peaceable domestic parties can play an important role in their negotiations with the Western contact group. Toward that end they will first of all have to get effective guarantees from the group and at the same time "sell" them a form of government which is so structured that guarantees cannot be overthrown by any majority.

This is simultaneously a unique opportunity and a great challenge. It is of the utmost importance that these groups, prior to the finalization of any agreement with the Western powers, achieve a mutual compromise about the basic points of an agreement. SWAPO speaks with one mouth and if the domestic parties speak with four, five or more mouths, they will of course not have the same impact.

Points of agreement between some of the parties have already crystallized. To mention only a few: if an election is held, whoever monitors the process must be completely impartial; SWAPO or any other party may in no respect be favored. There is also a considerable measure of agreement in principle between various parties that minority rights must be protected; there is a difference only about the method.

Proceeding from this basis, further points of agreement can be sought, first in principle and afterward this can be expanded to provide the necessary methodology and structure.

This should, during the coming days, be given the urgent priority of all of the parties which realize what the alternate consequences will be.

IDEOLOGY DRIVES PROFESSORS FROM TEACHERS COLLEGE

Windhoek ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG in German 14 Oct 81 p 2

[Editorial by H Feddersen: "Rebellious College Teachers"]

[Text] Among the college teachers who, for whatever reasons, have been lost to our country--or at least to the training of new personnel, e.g., teachers--are such qualified people as professors E L P Stals and Daan Gresse. During the past year, a total of 18 very well-qualified teachers left the white teacher training college, among them George Weideman, Dr A Poitgieter, Bryan Harlech-Jones and J Marais. So far, the Academy for Higher Education has at least been able to profit from their leaving. And this is the way it should be because here, after all, is being formed the nucleus of the future University of Namibia.

It is a shocking fact that qualified personnel (this year alone 7 of the 50 instructors at the teachers college) are leaving an institution at which future teachers are to be trained. Teachers, after all, are expected to train the youth of the country and thereby its future. For them, only the best kind of training should be good enough.

The atmosphere at the white teachers college, which is run by the administration for whites, is not exactly stimulating for college teachers. Even though everybody is ready to admit that the "Academy" is quite popular especially in its role as the nucleus of a university, the training of teachers should not simply be put aside.

It is difficult to understand what position an academic institution entrusted with the future of this country is taking if its students are isolated as a "white elite club" instead of being able to make a contribution for the future Namibia in cooperation with other population groups. For this reason, it is understandable if instructors do not want to yield to the pressure of a bureaucratic system but prefer dedicating themselves to their special fields on a higher academic level.

On the one hand, the tragic circumstances through which the "white elephant" Windhoek Teachers College sinks into ever deeper problems should evoke sympathy. On the other hand, it cannot be overlooked that the institution cannot do justice to its role as an autonomous institution for the promotion of culture, knowledge and thought as long as a tight ideological strait jacket prevents teachers from giving their work their best efforts. Among these teachers are enough people who want to work toward the creation of a better image for Namibia, but cannot reconcile this image with that of the teachers college. No wonder, then, that our college teachers are becoming disenchanted. It would be a pity, however, if they left the country for this reason.

BRIEFS

CAPRIVI RAILWAY--Andre Holland's more romantic than realistic talk on Wednesday about the prospects of a railroad line from Zimbabwe via Botswana and the future Namibia to the Atlantic resulted in a commentary on South-West Africa [SWA] Radio by Mike Myburgh, SWA's managing railroad director. He said that the railroad is already considering plans for the construction of a railroad line between Botswana and the SWA. He emphasized that the construction of a railway line in the north of the country between Windhoek and Caprivi is another project of strategic importance for SWA. TEACHERS UNDER PRESSURE--In an exclusive interview with the AZ, one of the instructors who resigned their positions at the Windhoek Teachers College described the difficulties under which he must continue his work because, ever since he gave notice, "some of his colleagues and the education administration for whites are giving him a hard time." He doubts whether under these circumstances he can stick to his resignation deadline. To many AZ questions the person interviewed wanted to give answers only "after the dust had settled" so that no emotional statements would be made public. From what he said it can be concluded, however, that this instructor was shocked by the reactions to his resignation. "The majority of the South-West Africa community does not seem to be ready to accept steps of this kind which immediately have political consequences." For obvious reasons, the person interviewed does not want to be identified by name. [Text] [Windhoek ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG in German 15 Oct 81 p 2] 8889

WHITE PAPER ON KANO RIOTS ISSUED BY GOVERNMENT

White Paper Announced

AB102147 Lagos Domestic Service in English 2100 GMT 10 Nov 81

[Text] The federal government has issued a white paper on the report of the Kano disturbances tribunal of inquiry. The tribunal found, on the basis of its investigations, that the Kano disturbances of 18-29 December 1980 was caused by the late Mallam Muhamadu Barwa who was popularly known as Maitatsine.

The tribunal also attributed the causes of the disturbances to acts of negligence principally on the part of the Nigeria police force, the Nigeria security organization, NSO, as well as the carefree attitude of the immigration authorities.

According to the report, the breakdown of the non-Nigerian Fanatics who fueled the disturbances and who were captured by the police is as follows: Niger Republic, 162; Chad Republic, 16; Cameroon, 4; Mali, 2 and Upper Volta 1.

The tribunal made a number of recommendations for effective control of the entry of aliens into the country. Accepting the recommendations, the federal government is to direct an inter-ministerial committee comprising the ministries of defense, finance and internal affairs as well as the police force to work out the modalities.

The Kano disturbances tirbunal of inquiry was set up on 6 January 1981 with Mr Justice (Inamizi Aniagorwu), for [expansion unknown] as the chairman.

'NAN' Reports Details

AB110844 Lagos NAN in English 0832 GMT 11 Nov 81

[Text] Lagos, 10 Nov (NAN)--The federal government today announced that it would review the country's immigration laws "in their entirety," to check the influx of aliens.

In a white paper on the recommendations of the Kano disturbances tribunal of inquiry, the government also said that it would ensure that aliens in the country were properly registered and their movements monitored.

The government accepts "in principle" the tribunal's recommendation that all African aliens should register to regularise their status and residence in Nigeria.

It also accepts that all aliens should be given 90 days within which to comply with the directive.

The government accepts the recommendation that the immigration department should undertake the registration of aliens instead of the Nigerian security organisation, despite ECOWAS protocols.

The chief alien officer would henceforth be responsible to the director of immigration services, according to the white paper.

All African aliens are to apply to the nearest newly-designated immigration office for registration.

Another recommendation of the tribunal accepted by the government is that landlords should report African aliens who are their tenants to the appropriate authorities. They should also report foreigners who are squatters, under pain of stiff penalties.

The federal government directs that the inter-ministerial committee comprising the ministries of defence, finance and internal affairs, the Nigeria police force and the executive office of the president, already set up, should work out the methods of establishing a separate border patrol unit in the immigration department.

The federal government accepts that only the police should issue permits for public meetings and processions for religious purposes.

The government refers the recommendation of the tribunal to appropriate state government for implementation, on the reorganization of the Almajiri system and their incorporation into the formal school system.

The government commends three policy officers--Superintendent of Police Maikifa, Assistant Superintendent Karim and the then Assistant Inspector-General of Police Mr Sunday Adewusi.

The shortcoming of the action commissioner of police, Kano State, Mr J. O. Pogoson, during the disturbances was referred to the police service commission "for appropriate action."

The government also notes the tribunal's impression that Alhaji Lawal Sambo, director of immigration services, displayed "reprehensible abject ignorance," adding that his case had been to the federal civil service commission.

Further 'NAN' Report

AB111317 Lagos NAN in English 1148 GMT 11 Nov 81

[Text] Lagos, 11 Nov [AFP]--The federal government yesterday announced that the terms and conditions of service in the armed forces and the police should be reviewed to ensure the welfare and continued education of the families of those who lost their lives in the Kano disturbances last December.

In a white paper on the recommendations of the tribunal of inquiry which looked into the disturbances, the government also said that the review would cover all cases of death in service.

The government accepts "in principle" that all senior officers of the Kano State Police command, a number of whom had been long in the state, should be re-developed by the inspector general of police in his "absolute discretion."

The federal government directs that additional equipment should be obtained after consultation with the military, for mobile police force commensurate with its duties, and that training programme should be reviewed to enhance its operational efficiency.

It notes the tribunal's recommendation that the national security procedure, particularly the procedure for the police to hand over to the army, should be reviewed to conform with the new presidential system of government.

According to the white paper, the federal government also notes that special protection should be given to members of the press in the process of their coverage of emergency operations.

It notes that arrangements should be made for special press briefings during such operations.

The government advises that the press corps should in future liaise with an officer designated by the commander of the operation in that connection.

The government accepts that officers and men of the 3 infantry brigade, Kano, should be commended for the manner they brought the Maitatsine affair to a quick and decisive conclusion.

The government takes "serious" note that the tribunal was of the view that Alhaji Sule Vahaya Hamma, secretary of the Kano State Government, "handled the security affiars of Kanc State with levity."

Government further notes that the tribunal was of the view that Alhaji Aminu Yusuf, commissioner for special duties, Kano State, among others, "does not deserve to remain in office as a commissioner."

According to the white paper, government notes that the tribunal found that Alhaji Muhammadu Abubakar Rimi, Governor of Kanos, among others, "abandoned his responsibility as a chief executive in dealing effectively with the Maitatsine affair before the out-break of the December disturbances."

The government will refer other cases to the governor of Kano State, according to the white paper.

The government refers the recommendations of the tribunal to appropriate state governments for, among others, the setting up of a machinery for screening and testing Malwams concerning their intellectual erudition, good conduct and reputation.

The state governments will also introduce measures aimed at prohibiting provocative or abusive preaching either by open lectures or through the use of cassettes.

It will prohibit the use of the term "infidels" or "non-Islamic" or "pagans" by one group in describing other rival group or groups.

The federal government notes the recommendations of the tribunal that state governments must refrain totally from exhibiting any attitude of special patronage or show any preference of favour to any particular religious groups or leaders.

They also have a duty to ensure a fair and even distribution of the nation's media resources to enable all shades of accredited religious opinions wishing to reach the people to do so, provided that they conform to existing regulations.

The federal government set up the Kano disturbances tribunal of inquiry on 5 January, with Mr Justice Anthony Aniagolu as chairman.

The tribunal was set up to inquire into the causes of the disturbances which broke out in Kano on December 1980.

It commenced its first public sitting on Monday, 2 February and submitted its report in April.

Kano Rejects White Paper

AB122024 Kaduna Domestic Service in English 1600 GMT 12 Nov 81

[Text] The Kano State Government has rejected the report of the Aniagorwu tribunal which investigated the Maikesini riots and the federal government's white paper on it. In a bold attack, Governor Abubakar Rimi said the report and the white paper had blackmailed highly placed officials of his government. The Kano Government will therefore release its own white paper on the report to exonerate the officials. Governor Rimi disagreed with the tribunal and the federal government's view that the riot was brought under control by the army and the police. He was of the view that it was the vigilante group set up by the people of Kano that quelled the unrest.

The federal government had accepted the tribunal's earlier version that the governor, as the chief executive abandoned his responsibility for security of the state during the period preceding the riots. The government also accepted the panel's views that the riots would have been averted if the Nigerian police, the Nigerian security organization and immigration authorities had not neglected their duties.

COMMENTARY LOOKS AT OAU PEACE FOR CHAD

AB122206 Lagos Domestic Service in English 2100 GMT 12 Nov 81

[Divoo Osifasur Commentary]

[Text] At least for now, it seems that the problem of foreign troops in Chad, which has hitherto defied every solution, looks like heading for a definite solution. In a stunning decision President Goukouni Oueddei of Chad 2 weeks ago called for the total withdrawal by December ending of all Libyan troops stationed in his country. In fact, President Oueddei gave no indication that he was about to take this bold step when he met recently with high-ranking government officials from both France and Libya. All along Libya had believed that Chad would never call for the withdrawal of its troops without its approval because of its confidence that it had :resident Oueddei under control.

Not considering the unexpected developments in Chad in the last few weeks, the inclination of those familiar with the problem is to take the Chadian decision at face value. Two factors are, however, seemingly responsible for the Chadian Government's decision. First was the decision of the French Government last week to provide logistical support to the transitional government in Chad.

Another factor was the appeal for the urgent despatch of a pan-African peace-keeping force to Chad, which is now beginning to take shape. Underlying these two factors, however, is the fact that the move came after an alleged worsening of relations between Tripoli and President Oueddei because of his repeated refusal to merge his country with Libya.

At the OAU conference in Nairobi, Kenya, President Oueddei put forth a five-point proposal before the OAU heads of state. One of the proposals called for the setting up of an African peace-keeping force to be made up of troops from Benin Republic, Congo and Guinea. Another proposal was the solemn undertaking by neighboring African states of non-interference in the internal affairs of Chad. The third was President Oueddei's call for assistance for the reconstitution of his country's ragtag national army.

Although the OAU heads of state gave their positive response to those suggestions, they however passed a mild resolution which inevitably left the burden of expelling the Libyans from Chad to the people of that country. Despite this, however, the organization empowered its chairman, President Daniel Arap Moi of Kenya to visit Chad and assess the way the OAU can assist that country in its efforts at national reconstruction.

In the same spirit, at the instance of the Nigerian Government, a fourth conference of six African states was held in Lagos to discuss the situation in Chad. Principally the participating states composed of Cameroon, Algeria, Sierra Leone, Chad, Libya and Niger including the host country Nigeria, deliberated on the question of an African peace-keeping force in Chad.

In the communique issued at the end of the confernece, delegates vehemently denounced the stationing of foreign troops in Chad and called for their immediate withdrawal. However, following the Chadian Government's decision to expel all Libyan troops stationed in that country, an OAU inter-African peace-keeping force is expected in Chad any moment from now. Already Nigeria and Senegal have agreed to participate in the force. They will be assisted by five other African states.

A report from the OAU however, made it clear that the organization would not dispatch its force to Chad to obtain the departure of Libyan troops there or to replace them. Rather, the African peace-keeping force will be in Chad to avoid a resumption of civil war which has engulfed the country in the last 3 years. The [words indistinct] for ensuring this is part of what therefore is believed to be on the agenda of the meeting now going on in Lagos.

The immediate task confronting the OAU is to take this golden opportunity to end once and for all the civil strife in that country and put to an end foreign expansionist ambitions in the area of the continent. Such an endeavor would go a long way to protect and preserve the continent's territorial integrity and sovereignty from foreign evil machinations.

COMMENTARY PRAISES OAU ACTIONS TOWARDS CHAD

AB151231 Lagos Domestic Service in English 0600 GMT 15 Nov 81

[Andy Anarado commentary]

[Text] Perhaps one vital message that emerged from the Lagos meeting is that Africa cannot afford to abandon its responsibility and pledge to Chad. From the recent developments in Chad itself it was apparent that the various delegations realized the purpose of their mission and the urgency of their assignment. That explained why there was no exchange of rhetorics, but realistic ideas and principles. The foreign ministers did appreciate that their call to session was for solution and action on a situation that demanded an immediate and positive response. It was, therefore, to the credit of Africa and its friends that they came out with a deserving program of action to set the machinery for an eventual deployment of OAU troops to Chad.

Under the program, part of which will take off shortly, a 14-member military team will be going to Chad on Monday to assess the situation on the spot. Nigeria, in addition to accepting to provide transportation to the team, is also to nominate a commander general for the OAU neutral force. But that also seems that Nigeria will have to provide the largest single contingent for the Chadian operation. In keeping with the relevant sections of the OAU resolution on the neutral force, the role of the OAU force would be to maintain law and order, ensure the free movement of people and security of life and property. In addition, the force has responsibility for the reorganization or reestablishment of an armed force for Chad and that of assisting in the supervision of general elections. From its structure and program of operation, the task for the force will surely not be an easy one to accomplish. Its overall success would largely depend on the level of commitment and discipline of its leadership and the entire military personnel. It should see the assignment in Chad as a call to serve Africa in a capacity that would either make a mockery of the exercise or given the continent, and indeed the OAU, the worldwide recognition for competence and capability to handle and solve our problems.

Although the situation in Chad is basically an African problem, it should be emphasized that the world community to which Chad and her people rightly belong must not be seen to be indifferent to the iniative of the OAU. This means that the OAU should be given every possible assistance by the United Nations, other international organizations and friendly countries that believe in the restoration of permanent peace and normally to that country.

But in seeking for and accepting such assistance, it should be made very clear that for the transitional period of the presence of the OAU neutral force in Chad, any invitation for help must be properly channeled through the appropriate designated machinery. This is to ensure that there would be no conflict in their intentions.

As the OAU goes for the final phase of sending troops to Chad, one point that seems distressing, however, is the reported fighting at a section of the country. No matter the intentions of those responsible for such renewed, unpleasant incidents, their actions need to be totally condemned by all peace-loving people. In the interest of peace and concord in Chad, all differences and conflicts, whether influenced from within or outside Chad, must be abandoned to create a healthy atmosphere for the reconstruction and rehabilitation of the country and its economy after 15 years of bitter fighting among political rival.

One point that needs to be stressed is that the government in Chad at the moment is a transitional administration. This means that when the right atmosphere is restored, hopefully in the next few months, the poeple of Chad will be assisted to elect a permanent government. What is generally expected is that the summit of the six African leaders whose countries are making up the OAU force will, in Kinshasa next week, give the final green light for the deployment exercise.

'NAN' CORRESPONDENT DISCUSSES CANCUN CONFERENCE

AB262033 Lagos NAN in English 1730 GMT 26 Oct 81

[By Femi Adefela: "A View of the Cancun Conference"]

[Text] Cancun (Mexico), 26 Oct (Nan)--The two-day international meeting on co-operation and development ended in Cancun, Mexico, with most of the people present--delegates and journalists alike--feeling that it was worthwhile and hoping that it would lead to the initiation of new efforts to improve international economic relations.

The feeling of cautious hope is not based on any concrete or binding agreement or any specific and well-defined goal arrived at during meeting. It is not the result of the adoption of any realistic solutions or programmes of action capable of dealing effectively with the pressing problems of hunger, poverty, energy shortage and balance of payment deficits facing many developing countries. There were no such agreements, goals, solutions or programmes of action.

The feeling of hope arises from the fact that the conference took place, that the eocnomic yearnings and problems of the peoples of the world were voiced and discussed, and that everyone present must [words indistinct] with a higher level of consciousness [word indistinct] of the issues.

No communique was issued at the end of the meeting--an indication that the leaders appreciate that the hungry and poor peoples of the world have had enough of empty words and now want meaningful action. This, however, does not imply that nothing was achieved in Cancun.

One obvious achievement is that almost all the leaders present at the meeting agreed that there was a need to carry on the process begun in Cancun through global negotiations under the auspices of the United Nations. This, in a way, is a significant breakthrough. Such global talks were originally proposed in 1977, but action on them had been held up because of the coolness of Western countries to the idea. But, at Cancun, the leaders of Britain, France, Sweden, Japan and the others expressed their support for global negotiations. The odd-man-out is President Ronald Reagan of the United States who has hedged his support for the idea with some tough conditions. These are practicability, acceptance of the views of international agencies as final, emphasis on mutually-beneficial growth, and the maintenance of the spirit of co-operation that marked the Cancun meeting.

These "tough conditions," as the minister of external affairs, Professor Ishaya Audu, said, can only be the negotiating position of the United States, and it is hoped that with some give and take and more understanding of the situation by the United States, this obstacle can be overcome.

However, the failure of the conference to agree on the modalities for setting the global talks in motion dampens hopes for its future.

Another notable encouraging aspect of the meeting was the extensive attention given to the problems of hunger, malnutrition, agricultural development and general poverty which plague more than half the population of the world. President Shehu Shagari stated the issues succinctly in his speech which was generally well received. Almost all the leaders recognised the need for urgent action to deal with the immediate problem of food shortage in certain parts of the world and the need for a programme of action to improve agriculture and enable all nations to achieve self-sufficiency in food production in the long run.

If and when the global round of negotiations take off, this problem of food scarcity and agricultural productivity can be expected to be given priority.

The other issues of energy, restructuring of international financial institutions to make them more responsive to the needs of developing nations, balance of payments deficit and stable and equitable prices for commodities also received attention, but are left hanging in the air in the absence of concrete plans of action to deal with them.

The conference had several other minus points. The most important of them was the conspicuous absence of the Soviet Union which created a palpable vacuum in Cancun. As everyone knows, no negotiations or programme of action to change international economic relation can be truly global without the participation of the Soviet Union and other socialist countries in view of the economic interdependence of all nations. According to President Jose Lopez Portillo, a [words indistinct] attend. China and Yugoslavia were in Cancun, any way. So, it could be claimed that all shades of opinion were represented. But there is no doubt that the presence of the Soviet Union might have broadened the perspective achieved in Cancun and given greater credibility to the meeting.

The Cancun conference stands a chance of going down in history as an important landmark on the road to a new world economic order--that's if it is promptly followed up with specific and global negotiations leading to effective action--a rather remote but not totally unattainable prospect.

It would be tragic to let the excitement and impetus generated by the meeting to be wasted. The presence of 2,500 journalists from 100 different countries in Cancun and the resultant wide publicity received by the meeting may help in sustaining the momentum for some time. But only concrete action can ensure any lasting effect.

One thing which the meeting may be remembered for is what is being termed "the spirit of Cancun." It derives from the atmosphere which pervaded the meeting. The emphasis was on exchange of ideas and co-operation, rather than confrontation. The tone of the discussions was positive throughout and there was marked lack of ideological rhetoric. All the leaders seemed to have come to Cancun with an open mind, "to listen, learn and understand" and some with a determination to succeed.

If this spirit can guide all subsequent meetings on the subject of reshaping international economic relations, then there is some room for optimism.

UK ROLE IN NATIONAL DEVELOPMENT PLAN DENOUNCED

AB120810 Lagos NAN in English 0810 GMT 12 Nov 81

[Text] Lagos, 11 Nov (Nan)--The fourth national development plan was prepared by a British "think tank" to propogate British economic interests overseas, the chairman of the task force for the dissemination of information of the academic staff union of Nigerian universities (ASUU), Dr Joseph Omoruan, said in Lagos today.

He told the house of representatives committee on education investigating the current industrial action by university lecturers that the university community was "shocked" to find that the country's economic development plan for the next four years was designed and written by a foreign think tank organization. The exercise, he said, did not only add to the drain on foreign exchange reserves, but also posed a threat to "our national security."

Dr Omoruan said that the economy of the nation could be slowed down or depressed through price manipulation and the creation of scarcity by the foreign organization which prepared the plan.

He said that the plan was first contracted to the international labor organization, ILO, which later called in the Institute of Development Studies at Sussex University, Britain, as sub-contractors.

Dr Omoruan said that the government has refused to approach Nigerian universities for solutions to problems confronting the nation even though "we have the largest concentration of thinkers and scientists in the universities." He therefore called on the federal government to make more use of the universities by allowing them to take control of all research programs and feasibility studies in the country.

Dr Omoruan also called on the government to give funds to specific departments in the universities to carry out research for solutions to the technological, managerial and psychological problems of the civil service and parastatals.

The chairman of the committee, Dr E. C. Emekekwue, gave an assurance that the committee would study the recommendations of the union and find ways of ending the current industrial action by the lecturers.

WEST URGED TO PUT PRESSURE ON SOUTH AFRICA

AB281135 Lagos International Service in English 0830 GMT 28 Oct 81

[Text] Despite the world outcry and condemnation against racist South Africa's strike into Angola, Pretoria seems more determined than ever to destabilize the MPLA-controlled government of Angola. Behaving true to type, apartheid South Africa has again turned her military talent against neighboring Angola, destroying and occupying towns and villages, killing and maiming several innocent lives and citizens of this sore-stricken black African nation. Last week's invasion brings to five the number of such destardly raids by South Africa into Angola. If anything, Pretoria's military incursions into Angola do not appear to be over despite her assertions to the contrary. More importantly, it is now clear that the purpose of such strikes is to complicate issues in the United Nations over the terms of achieving Namibia's independence. The UN plan is contained in resolution 435 passed by the world body in 1978. It authorizes the United Nations to take the lead in bringing about Namibia's independence.

After a hushed agreement between the United States and South Africa some time last month, Washington announced Pretoria's willingness to give peace a chance in Namibia. This means that South Africa is now ready to return to the negotiating table for another try at an acceptable international solution to the problem of Namibia. But ironically enough, South Africa has since then assumed a confrontational posture over the Namibian issue. Instead of giving peace a chance, Pretoria has only flexed her military muscles in an unprecedented search and destroy mission against the sanctuary of the movement fighting for the liberation of Namibia, SWAPO.

Apparently disturbed by this development, President Shehu Shagari urged the commonwealth leaders at the recent meeting in Australia to ensure Namibia's independence by June next year. He warned on that occasion that unless a just and meaningful solution was found now to the issue of Namibia's independence and the political situation in Southern Africa, the commonwealth could face the danger of having to justify its existence as a family of equal, friendly and brotherly nations. According to reports, the American president, Ronald Reagan, whose administration has given much support to the South African Government, has recently briefed the Nigerian leader on what the United States is doing to achieve an early independence for Namibia. Precisely what these new efforts are, apart from the recently concluded agreement between Washington and Pretoria, are still to be made public. Perhaps the package is contained in what the contact group has brought to Africa. Nevertheless, there is need to heed President Shehu Shagari's call for a definite timetable for the independence of Namibia. Nothing short of this could convince black Africa of Western genuine efforts to find a lasting, peaceful solution to the Namibian issue.

South Africa cannot continue to behave as if it holds the trump card to an eventual settlement over Namibia's independence. The West, therefore, must join in putting pressure on racist South Africa in order to compel it to withdraw from Namibia. Indeed, as President Shagari put it, it is time apartheid South Africa's arrogant defiance of the world through its continued occupation of Namibia and aggression against neighboring states is halted. For sure, any further delay on the question of Namibia's independence is likely to plunge the territory into a violent descent to war. This is the clear notice the contact group will take from every stop in its current tour of selected African states.

In an interview with the news agency of Nigeria (Nan) in Lagos yesterday, he said that it was not enough for the council to promote only made-in-Nigeria goods. Professor Ogunseye said that his council was awaiting the government's decision on the recommendations of the committee that undertook a study on the setting up of an "industrial free zone" in Nigeria. He said that it was necessary to create such a zone because of its advantages to generate employment for indigenes, preserving foreign exchange and attracting investment from abroad. TROOPS' PAY STOPPAGE--Kaduna, 4 Oct (Nan)--About 500 discharged soldiers formerly serving with 1st mechanized division of the Nigerian army in Kaduna have appealed to the military authorities to continue to pay their salaries until their discharge benefits are paid. The ex-soldiers, who stormed the news agency of Nigeria (Nan) offices in Kaduna during the week, alleged that they had been thrown out of the barracks since 1 October and that their salaries were stopped since September. The spokesman of the ex-soldiers, ex-sergeant Joseph A. Adebor, said that 5 of their colleagues who were delegated to appeal to the general officer commanding 1st mechanized division (GOC), Major-General David Jemibewon, were detained for (?about

40) hours. He said that they were (?told to remain in) their quarters following the GOC's order. Efforts made by a Nan reporter to get the GOC for his comment failed, the division public relations officer, Major Agbugba, said that the GOC was too busy to attend to visitors. He also said that the GOC's next-in-command was not in the office. He, however, denied any knowledge of the ex-soldiers who were detained when they went to appeal to the GOC to rescind his decision. OGUN DOCTORS END STRIKE--Abeokuta, 13 Nov (Nan)--Striking doctors in Ogun state have resolved to return to work following a compromise reached between them and the state government, to implement the payment of call-duty allowances from 1 June this year. Addressing newsmen in Abeokuta yesterday, the chairman of the state branch of the Nigerian medical association, Dr Adekola Ashaye, said that the doctors decided to return to work because they now appreciated the financial constraints of the state government. He said that the new effective date of payment of the allowances would be June this year. The state government had suggested June as the effective date, but the national economic council fixed April. The doctors said, however, that the acceptance of the new date was conditional on the provision of adequate equipment for emergency, they said, would also provide transport during call duties as a matter of urgency. [Sentence as received] The allowances vary between 12 and 20 Naira per 8 call units for various categories of doctors with a maximum of 20 call units a month. In a circular letter to all commissioners and permanent secretaries, Alhaji Sule directed that no new appointments into the civil service should be made until further notice. He directed that payment vouchers on projects costing up to 100,000 Naira should first be cleared with the commissioner for finance before being presented for payment. According to the circular, all capital expenditure above N100,000 should be presented to the state development committee which would examine and approve funds for such expenditure. MINES MINISTER ON ENERGY--Lagos, 5 Nov (Nan)--The minister of mines and power, Alhaji Mohammed Hassan, said yesterday in Lagos that one million tonnes of coal was needed to operate the Oji coal station in Anambra State and another to be set up in Makurdi, Benue State. Alhaji Mohammed, who was addressing an 18-man British trade mission currently visiting Nigeria, also said that Nigeria produced about 25 percent of its annual coal requirements. The minister said that by 1985, 4,000 megawatts of electricity would be needed to meet the country's electricity needs. He said that a feasibility study had been completed for the setting up of a hydro-electric dam in Makurdi, and that work was almost finished on two hydro-electric projects at Jebba, Kwara State and Shiroro, Niger State. Alhaji Mohammed urged British companies to assist in supplying machinery and training facilities, and to conduct geological surveys. He said that phosphate had been discovered on the Nigeria-Niger border and that the federal government and Niger would mine it soon. The British trade minister, Peter Ress, who led the delegation, said that his country was prepared to co-operate in the fields of mining, electricity and geological surveys. He later presented the minister with a study on the enlargement of the Oji coal station. [Text] [AB051148 Lagos NAN in English 1052 GMT 5 Nov 81]

KADUNA AREA FUEL SHORTAGE--Kaduna, 10 Nov (Nan)--The fuel scarcity which has hit Kaduna and its environs since the week-end, worsened yesterday. Many of the filling stations did not have fuel and the few that had were packed with motorists forming long queues. Taxi drivers increased fares from 30K a drop to 50K, and road-side petrol sellers increased prices by 100 percent. The general manager of the Nigerian National Petroleum Corporation (NNPC) refinery in Kaduna, Mr Sanni Bellow, blamed the situation on demand outstripping supply. He said that 87,000 tonnes of prime motor spirit were used monthly in the northern part of the country, although the refinery produced only 70,000 tonnes per month. Mr Bello said that the shortfall in supply could only be met with supplies from depots in the southern part of the country. He said that his organisation had met with various oil companies but that they were unwilling to carry supplies from these depots. Attempts to speak with the area manager of the national oil and chemical marketing company in Kaduna failed, as he was not available. [Text] [AB101451 Lagos NAN in Egnlish 1428 GMT 10 Nov 81]

OIL PRICE CHANGE--Lagos, 12 Nov (Nan)--The Nigerian National Petroleum Corporation (NNPC) has notified its customers that the new base price of the country's crude oil would now be 34 dollars per barrel. In a statement, the corporation said that the new price followed the decision reached by members of the organization of petroleum exporting countries (OPEC) at an extraordinary meeting of OPEC in Geneva last October. The meeting raised the base price for the Arab light, the marker crude for OPEC, from U.S. 32 dollars per barrel to U.S. 34 dollars. It also agreed that this new base price for the marker crude should be applied to derive the prices of the crude for all the member countries of OPEC with effect from 1 November. The statement also notified NNPC customers of the new prices of the Nigerian crude streams. According to the statement, brass blend will now sell at 36.60 dollars per barrel, Bonny Light and Qua Iboe Light at 36.50 dollars per barrel, while the Escravos light and the Pennington light would sell at 36.30 per barrel and the Bonny medium at 35.20 dollars per barrel. The statement said that the new prices were in keeping with the 2.50 dollars per barrel differential that was maintained during the first month of the fourth quarter of this year. This differential, the statement added, would be reviewed after the OPEC meeting next month. It also said that a new price resulting from that review exercise would be notified to all customers. ADDITIONAL OIL WELLS--The Nigerian National Petroleum Corporation [NNPC] is to drill 11 oil wells in the country before the end of this year. The managing director of the corporation, L.A. Amu, announced this while answering questions before the house of representatives committee on petroleum and energy conservation. He said out of the number, 5 will be on-shore while the rest will be off-shore. Mr Amu said however that the number fell short of 20 such wells earlier envisaged to be drilled by the NNPC. NAMIBIAN CONTACT GROUP DELEGATION--President Shehu Shagari has stressed the importance of independence for Namibia as a crucial factor for peace on the continent especially in the South African sub-region. The president made this remark when he received a 15-man delegation of the five-nation contact group on Namibia. He reminded the delegation of efforts made before the independence of Zimbabwe was achieved and urged them not to relent in their efforts for a just, negotiated agreement leading to the independence of Namibia by the end of 1982. President Shagari expressed the hope that the current tour of the contact group will pave the way for achieving the desired results of implementing United Nations resolution 435 on Namibia's independence. Replying, the leader of the delegation, Sir Leonard Allenson, said that despite its initial set back, the group intended in its current efforts to make progress. He briefed the president on what the group had set out to achieve [words indistinct], which was to sell its proposals to those countries on the methods to be adopted before indpendence for Namibia could be achieved. Sir Leonard Allenson said the group had proposals for a three-phase process which will lead to independence for Namibia. These are constitutional principles, the resolution of the principles and the actual implementation process of resolution 435. The contact group is made up of the United Kingdom, France, West Germany, Canada and the United States. [Text] [AB261744 Lagos International Service in English 1630 GMT 26 Oct 81]

COMMENTS ON U.S. STATEMENT--The Nigerian HERALD comments on a recent statement by the American Government that member states of the nonaligned movement should apologize for their condemnation of the U.S. act of aggression against Libya. According to the paper, the U.S. envoy to the United Nations saw the condemnation as one-sided because it did not condemn the involvement of the Soviet Union in Afghanistan and Kampuchea as well as that of Libya in Chad. Conceding to the United States her right to show displeasure with any action she considers unhealthy, it does not believe that Washington is right to dictate to other sovereign countries on what to do on matters of foreign policy. The HERALD calls on the nonaligned movement to maintain its firm stand on world issues and not allow itself to be arm twisted by American threat of withdrawing aid to nonconformists. OAU CHAD FORCE COMMAND--Lagos, 13 Nov (Nan)--Foreign Ministers of African countries discussing the deployment of a peace-keeping force to Chad today decided that Nigeria provide would [as received] the commander of the force, conference sources told the news agency of Nigeria (Nan) in Lagos. According to the sources, the decision was reached when the formal session of the meeting began. The minister of external affairs, Professor Ishaya Audu, told the newsmen when the meeting adjourned for lunch today that the decision of the meeting would be communicated to the heads of state of countries contributing troops to the force for final approval. The countries contributing troops to the force for final approval. The countries are Nigeria, Togo, Guinea, Zaire, Senegal and the Republic of Benin. Professor Audu said that there was no misunderstanding between Nigeria Dand Kenya over a decision of the OAU chairman, President Arap Moi, to appoint a Kenyan military officer to take command of the peace-keeping force. Asked if Nigeria had approached the United States for aid in respect of the force, Professor Audu said I don't know. The OAU secretary-general, Mr Edem Kodjo, however said that the organisation had not approached any country for aid. Although some foreign countries have pledged aid, we have not yet approached them and I don't think the OAU will do so, he added. The meeting is expected to end today after which Mr Kodjo will address a news conference. [Text] [AB131601 Lagos NAN in English 1554 GMT 13 Nov 81]

RELATIONS WITH ISRAEL--The WEEKLY FOCUS would like the federal government to review Nigeria's continued break in diplomatic relations with Israel. The paper says it is unthinkable for Nigeria to insist on towing this line since Egypt, in support of which the federal authorities took this solidarity stand, has reestablished cordial ties with Israel. Commenting on the charges that Israel maintains trade links with apartheid South Africa, the WEEKLY FOCUS draws attention to those Western countries which openly carry out trade dealings with the racists and yet enjoy Nigeria's patronage. GHANAIANS TO BE REPATRIATED--Abeokuta, 24 Oct (Nan)--Ghana's high commissioner in Nigeria, Alhaji Youssif Paggi, has said that Ghanaian women who are living in Nigeria without reliable means of livelihood will soon be repatriated. Speaking during a visit to the Ogun State Broadcasting Corporation in Abeokuta on Thursday, Alhaji Paggi also said that his government had to make employment plans before the embassy could carry out the exercise. "It will be unfair on our part to dump them in Ghana without providing employment opportunities for them" he added. At the state policy headquarters, the deputy commissioner of police, Mr Potter Dabup, told the high commissioner that the police could help the embassy to contact Ghanians in police custody without recourse to the ministry of external affairs or force headquarters. PRP WHIP ACCUSES NPN--Lagos, 13 Nov (Nan)--The PRP [People's Redemption Party] chief whip in the house of representatives, Dr Junaid Muhammed, today in Lagos accused the NPN [National Party of Nigeria] of encouraging the crisis in his party. Dr Junaid told national assembly correspondents that the leadership tussel that disrupted proceedings in the house yesterday was organised by the NPN to blackmail the PRP. He said that the NPN had consistently made overtures to his party to form a coalition alliance with it at the centre. The chief whip said that his party had resisted the move because it prepared to stick to its principle of a government of national unity at the centre. Overtures have been made to us to submit names for ministerial appointments, and we have refused this too, he added. Dr Mohammed said that on Wednesday, President Shagari invited party leaders in the house to discuss his next move on the revenue allocation bill. He said that instead of inviting his faction of the PRP, the president invited the leader of the Imoudu faction, Alhaji Mohammadu Ringin. He said that the PRP was not obligatory to the NPN in anyway and we shall never dance to their tune. [Text] [AB141006 Lagos NAN in English 0715 GMT 14 Nov 81]

VOTING MACHINES BARRED--Lagos, 16 Nov (Nan)--The house of representatives today adopted an amendment to the electoral bill, which would bar the use of mechanical voting devices for future elections. The amendment, proposed by Mr M. A. Agbamuche, NPP [Nigerian People's Party] Bendel, on behalf of 39 other legislators urged the house to delete from the bill the sub-clause on the mechanical device. The sub-clause states that the Federal Electoral Commission (FEDECO) may record votes in elections by "mechanical, electrical, electronic or by any other means other than by the issue of ballot papers to voters." The deputy speaker, Alhaji Idris Ibrahim, who presided, did not allow debate on the amendment. After the amendment was proposed, he immediately called for a vote, and the "ayes" won. Another amendment to the electoral bill which the house adopted was one which stipulates that "if the number of votes cast in any constituency exceeds the number of registered voters for that constituency the election for that constituency shall be declared null and void and another election conducted within 7 days." The amendment was proposed by Dr E. C. Emekekwue, NPP-Anambra. [Excerpt] [AB161814 Lagos NAN in English 1710 GMT 16 Nov 81]

UNOPPOSED CANDIDATES--Lagos, 13 Nov (Nan)--The house of representatives today in Lagos approved an amendment to the electoral bill 1981, making it impossible to declare a candidate unopposed in an election. The amendment, proposed by Mr Y. B. Aliyu, NPN [National Party of Nigeria]-Bauchi, stated that where only one person emerged as candidate after nominations had closed, "votes shall still be cast to determine the popularity of the candidate by voting 'yes' or 'no'." The amendment stated that where the "yes" votes outnumbered the "no" votes, the candidate would be declared elected and where the "no" votes out numbered the "yes" votes, the candidate would be regarded as defeated and a fresh election would take place within 3 months. Mr Aliyu said that during the last elections, some candidates bought other candidates, asking them to withdraw their candidature at the very last minute. He explained that the purpose of the amendment was to prevent such a practice. Another amendment which the house also adopted was proposed by Mr Debo Akande, UPN [United Party of Nigeria]-OYU. The amendment sought to ensure that registered polling agents could serve anywhere in the country. [Text] [AB140959 Lagos NAN in English 0745 GMT 14 Nov 81]

COOPERATION WITH LEGISLATURE--Lagos, 13 Nov (Nan)--President Shehu Shagari has emphasised the need for co-operation between the executive and the legislative arms of government. The president was speaking yesterday at the National Theatre, Lagos, during the senates' end of session dinner party. President Shagari, who was the guest of honour at the party, said that he hoped there would be opportunities for him to meet socially with national assembly members. He noted that the senate and the house of representatives constituted the highest law-making body in the country, and added that while the legislature make laws, they leave them to me to implement. The senate president, Dr Joseph Wayas, who was the chief host at the party, proposed the toast of the president. The vice-president, Dr Alex Ekwueme, and the chief justice of the federation, Justice Atanda Fatai-Williams, were among some of the guests present. SHIP HIJACKED FOR BACK PAY--Lagos, 12 Nov (AFP)--The Norwegian officers of a Nigerian ship have reportedly hijacked the vessel to Norway in protest against nonpayment of salaries. The INDEPENDENT NATIONAL CONCORD newspaper quoted a Nigerian diplomat in charge of maritime services in London as saying the officers had taken over the ship, the Agbodo, belonging to a National Fishing Company, at a Mauritanian port and taken it to Flekkefjord, in Southern Norway. The report said the officers claimed back pay of about 60,000 naira (36,000 dollars), while some 20 other Norwegians employed by the same company were owed a total of 1.6 million naira (960,000 dollars). Diplomatic sources in the Nigerian high commission in Longon also told the paper that the ship had been fishing off the Mauritanian Coast when it suddenly developed a mechanical fault. It was berthed for repairs, then hijacked by the Norwegians. [Text] [AB121325 Paris AFP in English 1319 GMT 12 Nov 81]

FORMER SECURITY HEAD'S TRIAL--Kigali, (Rwanda) 14 Nov (AFP)--Maj Theoneste Lizinde, former head of security in Rwanda, yesterday appeared in camera before the Rwandan security court, within the context of the April 1980 plot. As Mr Lizinde knew state secrets because of his work, the state attorney demanded the hearing be in camera, which was granted by the court sitting at Ruhengeri (Northwest of Kigali). Earlier, Donat Murago, former councilor at the ministry of Justice and accused with Mr Lizinde of being involved in the plot, rebutted the statements of prosecution witnesses. The justice ministry in particular accuses Mr Murego of being responsible for printing tracts in the country to destabilize the government. In his defense, Mr Murego categorically denied Mr Lizinde's statements and particularly denied having made any sort of alliance with the latter to the point of working together to destabilize the government. He asked to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses, therefore applying the defense strategy used by almost all accused persons. A total of 28 people have already appeared during the first part of this trial. Twenty others now have to appear before the court. The plot, which was uncovered in April 1980, from where it got its name, took the form of distribution of subversive tracts calling for acts of banditism in Rwanda. LIBYAN TRAINING OF PDS MEMBERS VIEWED AS PLOT AGAINST DEMOCRACY

[Article by Less Coura: "Kaani-Gui"]

[Text] Some disturbing facts suggest the existence of a widespread plot against democracy. The main plotter is Abdoulaye Wade, leader of the PDS [Senegalese Democratic Party], the oldest and most representative legal political formation among the opposition groups which have flourished after the resumption of democracy in 1974, leading to a condition of total pluralism inaugurated by Abdou Diouf at the beginning of the year.

What actually happened?

The whole thing began with a vulgar fraud committed by Amadou Fall against a third party. Amadou Fall, a former officer in the Senegalese National Army, had abused the trust of his victim by presenting himself as an officer in active service, showing proper identification. Informed of the abuse committed by this former lieutenant, the general staff ordered the police to recover this identification card in order to make its break with the former officer even clearer. In the course of a search of the home of Amadou Fall, who meanwhile had become the official in charge of the security services or action committees of the PDS, the police found quite by accident a detailed file of a training session organized at the military academy in Tripoli, attended by Fall together with other PDS members, including one Gana Mbengue, an Army reserve officer, deputy Doudou Camara, his two gardeners and, apparently, about a dozen other more or less anonymous individuals.

The known brains behind the operation, on the recruiting end at least, was said to be Alassane Cissoko and Alioune Badara Niang, the Master's Right Hand, in charge of relations with expatriates for the PDS.

These are facts. They are worrisome, particularly when we know that the training we mentioned covered the theory and practice of destabilization through arms. It is inconceivable that Abdoulaye Wade has not been kept informed at all times of the actions of his collaborators. Far from helping to exonerate him, such a revelation could stupefy the Senegalese people and international public opinion. It is true that the leader of the PDS is a distinguished acrobat. He is the great defender of lost causes and a renowned intrigue-maker, not to mention the fact, as Senghor has said, he has never said no to money, whatever its color. Yet this matter of paramilitary training in Tripoli precisely stinks of petrodollars.

Most of the participants are said to have received the nice sum of $30,000 each from Alioune Badara Niang. Multiplied by 15, this means at least $450,000 or 135 million of our own francs.

Unquestionably, Qadhdhafi is a madman. However, he deals with money matters on the highest possible level.

In any case, Laye offers the cheap argument of ignorance as his justification. In order to help the press, which he had summoned to a press conference in Paris on 28 September, to swallow this clap-trap, he dared to quote our newspaper as proof of his imaginary popularity, using rather insulting terms. He also spoke of the machination of the powers that be against his party. Why does he not come back, to Senegal, to defend his theses?

Flanked by his ever-present Badara Niang, he was scheduled to return on 1 October. Reservations had been made. However, he is still away and it is quite unlikely that he would show up soon, for he is afraid, he fears that his parliamentary immunity will be revoked and he will have to face the investigators who will quickly find out about his commitments.

Laye cannot get used to the idea of wasting away in jail, particularly since in our country jails are not very comfortable.

Flash: On Tuesday, 6 October, at 1500 hours, Laye told a Parisian journalist that it was his intention to become an exile and to continue the fight through other means... "if Abdou Diouf persisted in rejecting his succession."

Long live guerilla fighter Laye, the pale reincarnation of Che Guevara.

SEMINAR PRESENTS POPULATION STATISTICS

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 17-18 Oct 81 p 5

[Report by Moustapha Mbodj: "The Size of the Population Will Be Doubling Every 25 Years"]

[Text] The seminar on the presentation and popularization of the results of the investigation of the fertility of the Senegalese ended yesterday morning in Breda. It will have helped statisticians and users of demographic data to concentrate for a 3-day period on factors governing the development of the Senegalese population.

However, the fertility investigation is not an isolated operation. It is part of a demographic investigation program developed by the National Statistical Office. It can also be defined as "A component of the World Fertility Investigation (EMF)." Its long-term objectives are to determine the current demographic rates, study the level of familiarity with and use of modern and traditional contraception methods, among others, provide information on the determining factors of population growth and its consequences in terms of economic and social development and lay a firm foundation for future population studies.

Demographic surveys have been made in Senegal in 1960-1961 and 1970-1971 also. However, the April 1976 census, which was an important stage in this area, quite clearly changed the terms of the demographic problem in the country. It is true that this first national very important census had ignored the fertility aspect. This was an omission which the National Statistical Office has corrected thanks to the financial and technical support of the United Nations Population Activity Fund (FINUAP) and the World Fertility Investigation (EMF). Other programs have been planned in this area with a view to identifying the determining population factors. This includes an investigation of infant and juvenile mortality, an investigation on the civil status and, finally, an investigation on the consumption budget of households and a census of economic activities.... What are we to expect from this fertility investigation? Let us note, to begin with, that the first census set the population of Senegal at 5,114,600 people on 1 July 1976. According to the current study the population's growth rate is between 2.6 and 2.8 percent as compared with the 2.2 percent which was maintained throughout the Fifth Economic and Social Development Plan, "which is the equivalent of doubling the size of the population every 25 years." Actually, the results of the 1970-71 demographic survey and the 1976 census have already indicated that the Senegalese population was not only bigger than anticipated but that it was increasing at a faster rate than had been maintained during the first four economic and social development plans.

Contraception Methods

Therefore, the study of Senegalese fertility shows very high birth and fertility rates. This is despite the fact that 20 percent of the female population is aware of contraceptive methods, whether modern (the pill) or traditional, although only 1 percent admit to having used at least one of these methods.

Although it is lower than that of several West African countries, the mortality rate remains high. It seems to have remained stationary over the past few years, averaging 20 percent on the national level, with major disparities between areas, such as 9 percent in Cap-Vert and 25 percent in Casamance. The infant and adolescent mortality rate is very high and unevenly distributed among localities and ethnic groups, counterbalancing the high birth rate. It averages 71 per thousand in the cities, 136 per thousand in the rural areas, 95 per thousand among the Wolof and 135 per thousand among the Mandingo, for example. According to the survey personnel, such wide disparities are the result of unequal sanitation facilities in town and country.

According to some investigators, this high infant mortality rate eliminates the need to limit the birth rate. The concept of an ideal family with two or three children has not yet entirely been accepted by society, although it is developing quite slowly and gradually in the cities. The investigation also brings to light interesting features of Senegalese society if we consider as representative the 193,083 people of the surveyed households and the 3,985 talks with women between the ages of 15 and 49, selected among the 4,441 women covered by the survey of individuals.

First Marriages

The share of single women is higher among the 20 year old or younger group (41 percent). The figure drops to 14 percent for women between 20 and 24 years of age and to 4 percent in the 25 to 29 year old group. Virtually all women (99.8 percent) 30 years old or older are either married or have been married.

On the average, women in Senegal marry for the first time at a very young age, half of them at the age of 15 or 16. The trend of first marriage at an older age is not quite pronounced for the country at large. Nevertheless, some factors such as school attendance, urbanization, place of residence and ethnic group, show certain variations. Thus, this age average is slightly higher in the cities.

The investigators also noted that the continuity and the exposure to the risk of pregnancy depend on the age at which the first marriage was contracted. However, the frequency of marriage dissolutions is compensated by second marriages. Seventy-one percent of the 3,472 nonsingle women investigated were still in their first marriages; 9 percent had become widowed and 20 percent had divorced. This shows a relative instability of first marriages, which does not affect the overall duration of the marriage, a second marriage being almost automatic in Senegal. This shows a high marriage rate; 89 percent of women whose first marriage broke up remarried; 46 percent of the women married for the first time 30 or more years ago have remarried one or more times.

Another noteworthy factor is polygamy, the practice of which is very important and applies to all ethnic groups. The results of the investigation of households, covering 200,000 people, show that 32 percent of all married men were polygamists in 1978. The prevalence of polygamy increases progressively with the age of the woman. In the 15-20 year old group, one woman out of three is a member of a polygamous household, while two women out of three in the 40-44 year age group are in a polygamous household. More than one half of women between the ages of 30 and 34 and more than two thirds of women 35 or older have given birth to no less than six children.

The fertility investigation conducted in Senegal shows, therefore, a strong birth rate, a high infant and juvenile mortality rate and the concentration of the majority of the population in the peanut-growing basin and along the Dakar-Thies access to the detriment of the eastern part of the country. There is also an imbalance between the urban centers (a 35 percent urbanization rate) and the rural areas inhabited by more than 70 percent of the population. This is an imbalance from the viewpoint of hygiene infrastructures....

To sum it up, does Senegal have population problems? Or, to put it better, does the development of the Senegalese population constitute an obstacle in the short or long term to economic and social development, which is a main target? Is demographic growth inseparable from economic growth which, in the final account, determines the limits of economically and socially acceptable development? All of these are questions on which the specialists do not always agree. In any case, according to Alioune Fall, director of the office of the Minister of Plan, "We shall pursue our thoughts on a more refined and more rational basis, with a view to achieving the complete mastery of demographic problems and, consequently, of the problems of overall socio-economic development."

For the time being, the investigation has revealed that Senegal has less than 200,000 paid jobs for an active population of 2 million, highly concentrated in the cities, with a total of roughly 22,000 housing units built by the OHLM [Office of Moderate Rent Housing] and the SICAP [Real Estate Company of Cap-Vert]. According to some investigators, given such conditions the (unresolved) demographic problems are among the aggravating factors of underdevelopment. Projections in this area indicate that the Senegalese population will exceed 9 million by the year 2000.

According to others, the solution would be to increase the annual average growth rate of the gross national product to 4.3 percent rather than 2.3 percent as is the case currently, rather than try to lower the average annual growth rate to 2.1 percent compared with the 2.8 percent which is the case today. This opens new lines of research.

PRAISE OF CUBAN PHYSICIANS--When an official of the Arusha Region hospital, P.R. Ngekela, was talking last week with four Cuban photographers, he praised Cuban physicians who are working in various hospitals in Tanzania under cooperation agreements between the governments of the two countries. He said that 20 physicians from Cuba were in the Arusha Region hospital, which is one of several hospitals having had Cuban physicians since 1975, but that now there are only six Cuban physicians at the hospital. He commented that the reduction in the number of Cuban physicians "shows how Tanzania is trying to become self-sufficient by having its own specialists." The group of four Cuban photographers has been in the country to photograph the work done by Cuban physicians in Tanzania. [Text] [Dar es Salaam UHURU in Swahili 9 Nov 81 p 1]

CREDITORS AGREE TO EXTEND DEBT REPAYMENT 10 YEARS

AB190927 Paris AFP in English 0714 GMT 19 Nov 81

[Text] Paris, 19 Nov (AFP)--Uganda's six major western creditor nations agreed here Wednesday to give the bankrupt East African nation another 10 years to repay some 13 million dollars of its debts to them.

After a two-day meeting, representatives of the United States, Britain, France, West Germany, Italy and Japan said they appreciated the Ugandan Government's efforts at reconstruction after a period of civil war and noted with satisfaction the application of an economic and fiscal programme backed by the international monetary fund.

They had agreed to reschedule the debts--due for repayment this year and next--so as to give these efforts a chance to bear fruit, they said in a joint communique.

The 12-13 million dollars due are now repayable in 10 years, including a 5-year period of grace. All arrears as of last 30 June have been rescheduled for repayment over 8 years, including a grace period of 4 years.

E. Kamintu, Ugandan President Milton Obote's special envoy, said after the meeting that Uganda's 850-million-dollar debt had accumulated since the 1979 overthrow of Marshal Idi Amin, who habitually paid in cash.

He said Uganda now needed the rescheduling of another 72 million dollars worth of debts from all sources which were due for repayment in 1982-83. These included debts to Eastern Europe, 13 million dollars to Libya and 25 million for the rest of the Arab world.

We need 500 million dollars for a mini-marshall plan for short-term reconstruction, he said. The country's trade balance was also 150 million dollars in the red.

A meeting of the six creditor states, as well as Iraq, Algeria and other Arab countries, will hear a plea here today from the Ugandans for further urgent aid.

Unconfirmed reports said at least three members of the elite police unit were hit by the shots, along with several civilians. INTEREST RATE HIKES--Kampala, 6 Nov (AFP)--Uganda's Central Bank today announced sharp increases in interest rates and almost doubled the interest on treasury bills and deposits, the new rates are effective immediately. The bank rate rose from a minimum of 8 percent to 10 percent. Interest on treasury bills maturing in 35 days jumped from 4.91 to 8 percent and the interest rate on savings deposits went up from 5 to 8 percent. The bank also raised ceiling on lending rates from 12 to 17 percent a year and doubled the interest on one-year term deposits from 6 to 12 percent. Rates for term deposits of more than one year will be negotiable, bank officials said. The interest rate hikes were apparently aimed at bringing the country's rates structure into line with international prime rates, and to reduce the money supply. NEGOTIATION WITH CREDITORS--Kampala, 15 Nov (AFP)--Five high officials of the Ugandan ministry of finance left Kampala on Sunday for Paris to participate in negotiations on the rescheduling of Uganda's eternal debt, the Ugandan National Radio announced. Because of the anarchic borrowing policy followed by the Idi Amin regime, no one knows precisely the total amount of Uganda's external debt nor the proportion of the country's gross domestic product devoted every year to servicing the debt. At the beginning of the year, the FRG, Great Britain, Denmark and Sweden, wrote off Kampala's officials hope to obtain new deadlines from the governments represented in Paris. They also hope to have their official debts with and loans from these countries rescheduled. The participants in the Paris meeting also hope to be able to determine Uganda's exact external debt and the percentage of its gross national product to be transferred annually for its reimbursement. The Ugandan delegation to Paris is headed by Ambassador Ephrahim Kamuntu who has occupied the post of the minister of finance since President Milton Obote's return to power, almost a year ago. MANO RIVER UNION ESTABLISHES BUREAU OF STANDARDS

Development Survey

Freetown DAILY MAIL in English 31 Oct 81 pp 1, 8

[Text] The Mano River Union has established a Bureau of Standards within its Secretariat to co-ordinate the work of similar bodies in member countries.

The Bureau will maintain standardisation of goods produced in member countries—Sierra Leone, Liberia and Guinea—in conformity with internationally recognised bodies like the International Standardisation Organisation.

The Mano River Industrial Development Unit has carried out a survey in the three countries to determine areas for standardisation.

This was followed by a survey of 60 industrial enterprises in various countries by the Union's Standards Group which advised enterprises to set up norms in line with international standard as well as laboratories for testing products.

As a result, a joint metrication committee of national metrication committees is being formed.

Decision Backed

Freetown DAILY MAIL in English 4 Nov 81 pp 1, 8

[Editorial: "Standards Talk"]

[Text] The Mano River Union's decision to set up a bureau of standards for goods produced in member countries is in a positive direction and in line with the crying need for quality of goods to be standardised in his country.

Protectionism aimed at helping our indigenous businesses and genuine investors has not come up with the expected results and daily we see a myriad of poor quality goods in the Sierra Leonean market.

The MRU has decided to ensure proper standards for goods produced in its member countries--Sierra Leone, Liberia and Guinea--in conformity with internationally recognised bodies like the International Standardisation Organisation.

This follows a survey of some sixty industrial enterprises in the member countries.

The importance of effecting standards and maintaining these cannot be emphasised and such standards are a pre-requisite for the acceptance elsewhere of goods produced in our sub-region.

Strict enforcement of regulations is vital as far as this is concerned if our domestic or sub-industrial pace should be accelerated while quality of what is produced is maintained at admirable levels.

The question, of course, arises over the efficacy of providing monopolies and protection if the standards of goods locally produced are not positively comparable to others elsewhere.

MRU can do a lot to help in this vein if the right steps and right enforcements are effected.

SADCC'S BLANTYRE TALKS PROMOTE REGIONAL COOPERATION

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 21 Nov 81 p 3

[Article by Keith Atkinson]

[Text] THE Blantyre talks have opened up new areas of regional co-operation, says Mr Kebby Musokotwane, Zambia's Minister of Finance and head of the Zambian delegation, at the closing ceremony of the Southern Africa Development Co-ordination Conference meeting here yesterday.

Agriculture and food security were at the core of SADCC's efforts to uplift the quality of life of the people in the region.

"These new areas cannot be over-emphasised, and must be accorded the top priority they deserve in our pragmatic programmes of action," he said.

The region's major handicap was the inability to exploit its enormous natural and human resources.

This was the reason for forming SADCC and "through collective endeavour we hope to overcome these constraints, especially if our co-operating partners continue to assist".

Mr Musokotwane said that during the talks it had become obvious that SADCC faced a very grave challenge. "This challenge highlights the need for effective overall co-ordination programmes within SADCC, and between SADCC and co-operating governments and agencies."

The meeting had given an opportunity for introspection, correcting past weaknesses and an opportunity for donors to make constructive suggestions.

DESTINY

Mr Musokotwane made it clear that despite seeking assistance the destiny of "our people remains wholly in our hands". He added that SADCC had a contribution to make to the North-South dialogue and establishment of a new economic order.

He ended his address on the note that there was no doubt that Namibia would soon be free and would be joining the SADCC states.

Mr David Johansson, from Finland, spoke on behalf of the donor countries and agencies at the closing ceremony. He said the pragmatic approach of the SADCC states had led to much concrete progress since the meeting in Maputo last year.

"Only a year ago we had very little. Now within the transportation and communication sector we have more than 20 projects under way and another 30 ready to start."

There had also been considerable progress in security, manpower development and industry.

"One important achievement I can see is a huge mobilisation of financial as well as physical resources within the SADCC region and in the donor countries," said Mr Johansson.

Every day SADCC co-operation was creating new forces, generating new activities and this was a challenge to the donor countries to mobilise new resources.

Mr Peter Mmusi, chairman of SADCC, said one more step had been taken in the organisational evolution as it had been the first review meeting.

Results had been surveyed, performances evaluated and future plans agreed on.

The conference had also given the opportunity to discuss problems with donors. "For our projects to succeed we must be honest with ourselves as well as with those who co-operate with us. They must be quite open with us and never hesitate to point out our mistakes," said Mr Mmusi.

PROTECTIONISM HIT--Protectionism applied by SADCC members against Zimbabwean exports does not augur well for co-operation in the airfreight industry, Affretair commercial manager, Mr John Fletcher, told the seminar. He said royalties were being levied by neighbouring SADCC countries on Zimbabwe exports. In one case, the royalty constituted more than 50 percent of the charter price. Affretair had to recover this royalty from the supplier, who in turn merely increased the landed cost. Also, as a result of poor communication within SADCC, there were still members of the community who use freight and transport companies which were based outside the SADCC at an increased cost. Affretair is a wholly Zimbabwean company which, as well as helping the export drive in general, is a foreign currency earner in its own right. For instance, a round trip could consist of taking tobacco to Cameroun, grapes from Cyprus to Amsterdam and then low bulk, high value technical goods back to Zimbabwe for the expansion of the economy. Mr Fletcher said that according to figures released in Holland, Affretair had carried a total of 6 000 tonnes of freight through Amsterdam's Schipol airport in the first six months of this year, putting the carrier among the top three charter companies operating there. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 27 Nov 81 p 3]

UNIFIED AIRLINE--A unified airline among the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference is not appropriate at this stage because of the lack of skilled manpower, the deputy sales manager for Air Zimbabwe, Mr Farai Malianga, said yesterday. Speaking at the transport seminar, Mr Malianga said it would be impossible for a unified airline to live up to SADCC's aim of economic liberation when Air Zimbabwe itself was so conscious of its lack of manpower and three of the member countries had formal agreements with European carriers for managerial and technical support. INCREASED SOVIET INFLUENCE REPORTED

Johannesburg SUNDAY TIMES in English 15 Nov 81 p 27

[Article by Norman Chandler in Gaborone: "After Seretse--Reds Move In"]

[Text] Russia is rapidly increasing its influence in Botswana. Its embassy in Gaborone, the capital, is being used as a major beachhead to spread communism and unrest in South Africa. The embassy has been massively reinforced since the death last year of the moderate President Sir Seretse Khama. It now consists officially of 208 accredited diplomats, many of them known KGB agents.

This total dwarfs that of any other diplomatic mission in Gaborone and is seen as an indication of the growth of the Kremlin's influence.

Mr Archie Mogwe, the Foreign Minister, insisted, when talking to me, that "we have told the Soviets, and any other country, that we will not tolerate subversion or spying activities being conducted from our territory and as far as we are concerned, they have all acceded to out request".

But among Western diplomats in Gaborone there is undisguised alarm at the growth of the Russian presence in a key Frontline State, for they see it as significant not only in terms of the Kremlin's aims in South Africa, but also in the context of Botswana's own situation following the death of Sir Seretse.

Less Popular

Dr Quett Masire, the new president, is not of the dominant Bamangwata tribe and most observers believe him to be far less popular among the Batswana than Sir Seretse.

Most speculation centres on Sir Seretse's eldest son, Brigadier Ian Khama, who is second-in-command of the Botswana Defence Force and chief of the Bamangwato.

Brig Khama is widely popular, and in recent times had a close personal relationship with Mozambique's Marxist President Samora Machel. There are, however, signs that their relationship has cooled.

There are many manifestations of the growing Russian influence in Botswana:

--The country's most senior civil servants have been on hunting trips in the Tuli block with Russian Ambassador Yuri Petrov and his aides.

--The Botswana Defence Force has recently acquired military hardware, including armoured personnel carriers, from Moscow.

--At least one senior and highly influential businessman in Gaborone has been holding regular meetings with envoys from Warsaw Pact countries.

--Obviously a primary target for the Russian presence in Botswana, offices in Gaborone of the African National Congress are constantly being visited by the Kremlin's agent, who are known to extend the hand of "friendship and assistance".

The belief in Gaborone is that South Africa, rather than Botswana, is the primary target of the activities of the Russians in the country.

The KGB operatives are thought to "supervise" many of the activities of the banned SA Communist Party, having taken over a role previously fulfilled by the Russian Embassy in Lusaka.

Some suspect that South African communist operatives probably go to Gaborone for instructions.

Forged

Equally, it is widely believed that the Russians, travelling presumably on forged passports, sometimes slip into South Africa.

I have learned that recently a prominent member of the Gaborone Russian Embassy staff--long suspected of being a KGB man--was seen at the Milpark Holiday Inn in Johannesburg.

When greeted by someone who knew him well, the man hurried from the bar. He booked out of the hotel the same day.

KGB agents have also been active in tailing visiting South African journalists and others with political connections in Botswana.

On any one day now, both the Holiday Inn in Gaborone and the city's President Hotel have Russians or East Europeans staying in them. Previously this was a rare event.

Russia's growth of influence in Botswana is a far cry from the day when Sir Seretse expressed the view that his country, one of black Africa's only democracies, should serve as a bridge between white rule and black rule.

Increasingly and perceptibly, this ideal is being replaced by strident anti-South African militancy on the part of Botswana's leaders.

An indication of South Africa's reduced influence is to be seen in the fact that Gaborone's envoys are now in the forefront of international condemnation of apartheid and white rule.

In Sir Seretse's day, things were different, for he was clearly loath to jeopardise his vast, desert country's almost total reliance on South Africa.

Apparently assured of Soviet and Eastern bloc support, Botswana's new rulers feel less inhibited about this--and comforted, perhaps, by the ostentatious Russian presence in Gaborone.

Time and time again, it is believed, the Russians have offered even greater help to Botswana, particularly in relation to its army.

President Quett Masire, it seems, feels no particular ideological commitment to the strident and anti-South Africanism, and is a realist.

But he is also a political pragmatist, and realises the growth of "pro-Russian" sentiment in the country.

Sentiment

In recent times, hundreds of Batswana students have gone to the Soviet Union on scholarships, and this had undoubtedly helped develop the "pro-Russian" sentiment.

Most Western diplomats in Gaborone believe President Masire's position is far from secure and that in some respects, he may now be involved in a battle for political survival.

Officially, of course, Russia is "just another country", as Mr Mogwe put it to me.

The reality as it is emerging is, however, vastly different.

CABINET APPROVES LIBYAN BUREAU, GRANTS SNEA AUTHORIZATIONS

Brazzaville ETUMBA in French No 614, 17 Oct 81 p 2

[Report: "Economic Cooperation"]

[Excerpts] The Council of Ministers met under the chairmanship of Comrade Denis Sassou-Nguesso, head of state and chairman of the Congolese Labor Party Central Committee, on 14 October.

The report on the meeting, presented by Major Florent Ntsiba, reveals the following:

After the working and friendship visit which the comrade prime minister paid to the People's Republic of Bulgaria and the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and after the very quick trip of Comrade President Denis Sassou-Nguesso to the interior of the country, Pointe-Noire and Loubomo specifically, the Council of Ministers met on Wednesday 14 October 1981.

As required, Comrade Denis Sassou-Nguesso, Central Committee chairman, president of the republic, head of state and chairman of the Council of Ministers, chaired this meeting which was held as usual in the hall of the premises of the Secretariat General, next to the Central Committee presidency, from 0900 to 1230 hours.

Once again, the economy of our productive state sector was discussed, represented by two of our enterprises: SOVERCO (Glassworks of the Congo) and SOTEXCO (Congo Textile Company).

In accordance with the system adopted at the national conference of state enterprises, which starts on the level of management committees and goes as high as the government council, the files on SOVERCO and SOTEXCO reform were considered by the council.

Without putting excessive emphasis on theoretical developments related to the purpose of our enterprises, the council tried to formulate specific directives directly based on the thorough study of the files.

The council then considered and adopted two draft decrees granting mining permits to the Elf Aquitaine National Company.

The first grants the SNEA the mining permit allowing it to survey and explore the availability of liquid, solid or gaseous hydrocarbons throughout the entire Congolese territory with the exception of areas the survey of which has been granted to other similar companies.

The second grants a permit for uranium prospecting.

Obviously, these authorizations will be followed by requests for research permits with specific indications of areas to be covered, as stipulated by the comrade minister.

The council also issued its agreement on the opening of a Libyan People's Bureau in our country or, in other words, of an embassy of the Libyan Arab Jamahiriya.

SOVIET ECONOMIC, TECHNICAL COOPERATION

Brazzaville ETUMBA in French No 616, 31 Oct 81 p 3

[Text] President Denis Sassou-Nguesso's official friendship visit to the USSR in May, in the course of which several important documents were signed, including the Friendship and Cooperation Treaty, has boosted Soviet-Congolese relations.

On Friday, 16 October 1981, Jacob Okanza, member of the Central Committee of the Congolese Labor Party (PCT) and ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary of the People's Republic of the Congo to the USSR, and Semen Skachkov, chairman of the State Committee for Economic Relations of the USSR, joined together, on behalf of their respective governments, in signing five documents strengthening economic and technical cooperation between the People's Republic of the Congo and the USSR.

Of all the documents, the one which offers the greatest new possibilities of cooperation is undoubtedly the agreement on the future development of economic and technical cooperation between the two countries.

Drawn up with preferential conditions, the agreement concerns the granting of a Soviet Government credit making it possible, among other things, to develop the Yanga-Koubenza polymetal ore deposit in the Bouenza region, improve the Mfoati plant structures so as to double its production capacity and permit the production of lead, zinc and copper in the Congo, and build up the technical base of the RNTP [National Public Works and Transport Administration] so as to carry out our road program. This credit also affects building construction through the reinforcement of the technical base of SONACO [National Construction Company].

One of the five documents signed concerns Soviet technical assistance, which will be used in fields such as the drafting of the program for energy development in the People's Republic of the Congo, the study on agricultural mechanization and the development of cooperatives in our country.

CONGO

AGRICULTURE, FORESTRY TO BE STRESSED UNDER FIVE-YEAR PLAN

Brazzaville ETUMBA in French No 614, 17 Oct 81 pp 1-2

[Report: "Green Gold, a Major Trump Card of Our Economy"]

[Excerpts] During the current stage of the national, democratic and people's revolution, the Congolese Labor Party must prepare the transition of Congolese society to socialism by laying a firm technical and material foundation.

Naturally, this is a long-term task. However, the victories already won in the struggle for an independent national economy and the spirit of sacrifice of our people are unquestionably revealing indications of future success.

Such is also the overall purpose of the first five-year plan of 1982-1986. That is why its implementation will become the embodiment of the determination of the national political leadership and the Congolese people, rallied around their leading nucleus, radically to transform the structure and superstructure of Congolese society.

That is why the party and the government have wisely given the utmost priority to agriculture as the center of this new development strategy. It is based on the reorganization of the rural world and the rapprochement between town and country with the help of a dynamic policy in this area and of measures to encourage the efforts of the peasantry.

That is why, within the framework of this utmost priority, the policy of promoting the development of the green gold, of the forests and of all its components is given a choice position in the five-year plan.

This is because forests not only account for a high percentage of the national territory in which a great part of the active population lives, but above all because they contain known and relatively unknown opportunities whose development for the national and international markets is more than necessary given the current economic situation.

That is why the current days of timber and forests assume a very special nature, for their purpose, among others, unlike the 15 days dedicated to timber, is the following:

The popularization, promotion and consumption of all our resources;

The imperative need for the rational management of forest resources;

The dynamizing of relations among the various economic operators in this area through joint planning and cooperation;

Policy coordination on the continental level in the area of burnished timber;

Increased exports as a result of better knowledge of demand on the world market, etc.

The battle which will be fought for the implementation of the major stipulations of the 1982-1986 five-year plan also requires of us a policy of promoting this green gold in its entire variety. The entire purpose of this policy is to make forests an important trump card of our economy.

IDA CREDIT FOR RIVER TRANSPORT PROJECT

Brazzaville MWETI in French No 488, 20 Oct 81 p 3

[Text] The International Development Association (IDA), subsidiary of the World Bank, which grants loans on liberal conditions, has approved a credit totaling 14.6 million SDR ($17 million) for the Congo.

The credit will be used to finance a $28-million project aimed at improving river transport services and indirectly, to facilitate lumbering in the northern Congo. River services will also serve southern Cameroon and the Central African Republic. Thanks to technical assistance, a transport planning department will be set up within the Congolese Ministry of Transport and a study will be made of means of improving operations of the organization in charge of marketing Congolese wood.

The Congo's regional transport system includes a port at Pointe-Noire, a river port at Brazzaville, a 510-kilometer railroad line linking the two ports and river transport services along 1,120 kilometers of the navigable portions of the Congo and the Ubangi. This system is under the Trans-Congolese Communications Agency (ATC), which operates a fleet of freighters and passenger vessels.

A project aimed at improving railroad service, partially financed by the IDA and to be finished in 1983, will enable the railroad to meet the increased traffic. The improvement in river transport will contribute to optimum use of the increased means of the railroad.

The transport equipment to be furnished includes 14 new 300-ton barges, two 200-ton barges for hydrocarbons and sawn timber, two 100-hp push boats and a 400-hp tugboat, and miscellaneous spare parts. A main computer and two smaller computers, along with related data processing equipment, will also be supplied.

Some 106 consultants will help the ATC to improve its operations. The 14.6-million credit from the IDA to the People's Republic of the Congo is repayable in 50 years, including a 10-year amortization deferment. There is no interest, but a .75-percent commission will cover the administrative costs of the IDA. The credit will be paid out when funds are available. IDA credits are expressed in special drawing rights (SDR), whose worth is determined on the basis of a currency quote. The dollar amount of the IDA credit corresponds to the amount of SDR based on the rate of exchange at the time the credit was negotiated.

CABINET PASSES DECREES IMPLEMENTING STATE ENTERPRISE CHARTER

Brazzaville MWETI in French No 490, 24 Oct 81 pp 1-2

[Excerpt] On 14 March 1981, Law 13/81 instituting the state enterprise charter was promulgated in Brazzaville.

The scope of this basic law, which will henceforth regulate the life, organization and operation of state enterprises in a uniform and standardized fashion, no longer has to be shown.

The special importance which the political leadership attaches to the strict application of this charter stems from the strategic place occupied by our state enterprises in the government economic sector, the role they must play in it and the mission that has been entrusted to them.

The requirements of recovery and the needs imposed by the imminent implementation of the development plan caused the Cabinet to draw up bills governing application, as provided by Article 110 of the charter.

This was assuredly the first point but also the main point on the agenda for the weekly meeting of the Cabinet held yesterday, Friday, 23 October, in the conference room of the General Secretariat of the chairman of the Central Committee, presided over by Denis Sassou-Nguesso, chairman of the Central Committee of the PCT [Congolese Labor Party], president of the republic, chief of state and president of the Cabinet.

Four decrees were under consideration: the powers and organization of the Directorate of Supervision and Orientation.

Placed under the direct authority of the minister, the Directorate of Supervision and Orientation is in charge of assisting the minister in the exercise of his duties as head of state enterprises under the ministry.

As one can see, it derives from a watchword that has become a constant: systematization of supervision, with supervision viewed as an effective means of eliminating all evils that might check the proper operation of enterprises, of objectively evaluating cadres at all levels and of correctly, honestly and scientifically evaluating results and performances in the field of production.

The second decree defines the articles of association, thereby expressing one of the fundamental concerns of the charter: standardizing the organization and operation of enterprises, which would undoubtedly make it possible to eliminate previously observed disparities.

The third decree concerns ways of allocating profits of the state enterprises, with profits being defined here as the net result of the fiscal year from the deduction made from income taxes from the increase allocated to the legal reserve, increasing profit carryovers and reducing outside losses.

Whatever the case, the allocation of enterprise profits is decided upon based on their obligations, as follows: contribution to the operation of government (the government as the generator of startup funds, the state as the subsidizer of deficits in difficult periods); participation in the national investment effort in order to generate other sectors and create jobs; and the involvement of workers in order to stimulate them and encourage emulation.

The fourth decree concerns the establishment of a special commission in charge of certifying the balance sheets of state enterprises. The validity of this commission will be 5 years maximum, the necessary and sufficient period of time for organizing the national auditorship as initiated by the state enterprise charter in Articles 94 to 100. This is a provisional, temporary solution.

The establishment of this special commission should contribute to rapid clarification of the financial situation of state enterprises.

It was somewhat in this connection that the Cabinet examined two dossiers relating to points 2 and 3.

The first dossier concerned the situation of the STB (Brazzaville Transport Company), whose task it is to ensure transportation for citizens within the urban perimeter of the city of Brazzaville.

The second dealt with the establishment of SONAVI (National Fowl Raising Company), the fruit of Congolese-Cuban cooperation. SONAVI combines all state fowl farms. The objectives pursued respond to one hope: improving the diet of the masses by increasing the production of chicken eggs and meat.

GOALS OF DIRECTING PLAN FOR BRAZZAVILLE'S ELECTRIFICATION

Brazzaville ETUMBA in French No 616, 31 Oct 81 p 8

[Report on interview with Sama-Itoua Leonard, divisional director of the SNE [National Energy Company], by Bertin Ossenza; date and place not given]

[Excerpts] On the occasion of its centennial, a vast electrification program was carried out in the city, making "Brazzaville by night" a kind of fireworks show. But is the program finished? Why are there frequent blackouts? With Comrade Sama-Itoua Leonard, divisional director of the SNE, we tried to find an answer to these questions, viewing all problems in their proper perspective, from the angle of a general consensus of electrification of the city of Brazzaville.

Master Plan

Brazzaville, our country's political and administrative capital, is also an important industrial center. Its harmonious electrification already requires a far-reaching study for the next 10 years.

Consequently, the divisional director and his aides, with the aid of the EDF-DAFECO (French Electric Power Company-[expansion unknown]) as consulting engineer, only recently completed work on the master plan for the distribution system for the city of Brazzaville.

According to Sama-Itoua Leonard, the purpose of the master plan is: the gathering and analysis of the city's characteristics and the current electrical power or load of the existing systems; an examination of prospective development of the demand for electric power by category of customers, sectors of activity and district for a period of 10 years; long-term technical and economic research concerning tension plans, the structure of systems for different tension plans, the size of engineering works, and so on, all in terms of the density of the foreseeable load, quality of service, operating limitations and losses; reorganization of the medium-tension systems that already exist so as to integrate them into the optimal systems; the determination of the major phases of development of high-tension feed and high-tension injection stations, distribution tension and tension of medium-tension distribution stations; and the drafting of a schedule for investment expenditures over the period studied, with a special analysis of the medium-term period from 1980 to 1986.

Sama-Itoua Leonard specified that by virtue of its structure, the master plan implicitly recommended the working out of a rate structure ensuring a financially balanced supply of energy and its distribution to the city of Brazzaville.

High-Tension Line

At the present time, production of the Djoue hydroelectric plant is entirely used by Brazzaville. The steadily increasing cost of oil products discourages the use and expansion of our thermal power plant located in the center of the city within the compound of the SNE main office.

In the face of this situation, SNE divisional officials had to find a low-cost, reliable solution for the production of electric power in order to meet the demand for electricity of the city of Brazzaville.

A study showed that before we could put our own means of production into operation, it was necessary to build a very-high-tension line between Kinshasa and Brazzaville. The administrative, technical, economic and financial elements of the project reveal that this alternative is completely justified from the standpoint of the Congo's economic and social development and that of the profitability of the Inga Dam hydroelectric complex. The project is technically feasible. The cost is 1.5 billion CFA francs. Work will take 18 months, from the time of payment of the first installment collected by the CEM [expansion unknown] two months ago. The cost will be divided between the SNE and the National Electric Company of Zaire (SNEL).

It should be recalled that Kinshasa and Brazzaville have been connected by a 30,000-volt electric power line since 1953. The SNE will include the very-high-tension connection among those basic units for the planning of means of production needed to face the steadily growing load of the city of Brazzaville.

It was for this purpose that the Zairian-Congolese Joint Commission decided, at its fourth session held in Kinshasa from 23 to 27 May 1978, to strengthen the electrical connection between Kinshasa and Brazzaville, within the framework of cooperation between the two countries.

The SNE and SNEL were then entrusted with the task of carrying out the project. Technical and economic studies were also undertaken by the Joint SNE-SNEL commission for the purpose.

Very-High-Tension Station

Within the framework of this project, Sama-Itoua Leonard pointed out that there were also plans for a 220,000-volt very-high-tension station at Mbouono, located on the banks of the Congo River (after the Djoue Dam). From this station, part of the power coming from Kinshasa will be sent to Brazzaville by the existing 30,000-volt lines via the Djoue plant station. It is important to note that this station will receive the future arrival of the very-high-tension line linking Brazzaville to Bouenza.

Moukondo-Mbouono

The economic projects and their distance from each other and from the places where the power is produced caused SNE divisional officials to design a structure in the Brazzaville electrical system made up of very-high-tension lines from the very-high-tension injection points and the 30- and 20-kilowatt high-tension distribution stations. The SNE opted for the construction of a very-high-tension connection between Mbouono and Moukondo, with a very-high-tension station at Moukondo. This station will receive the very-high-tension line linking Brazzaville to the Lefini Dam.

Mplia Station

The very irregular power supply to the Talangai and Mpila industrial zone and to the low-income districts of Ouenze and Talangai forced SNE divisional officials to build a 30,000-volt station at Mpila, not far from the Canada Dry plant, in order to guarantee an electrical supply and the development of these areas.

Startup of the station, to the great delight of SNE subscribers, will take place in a month. For the SNE, it will also be an opportunity to thank the Kronenbourg Company for all it has done to bring the project to successful completion.

"Electricity for Everyone"

Our capital now has 66,500 homes (400,000 inhabitants). Only 15,000 homes now have electricity. This situation is anachronistic and unacceptable. Sama-Itoua and his aides are aware of this and consequently, are in the process of developing a study entitled "Electricity for everyone" through the prism of the city of Brazzaville.

This operation essentially consists of estimating the work and materials it would take in order to supply electricity to every individual homes located less than 40 meters from an existing SNE system throughout the city. If this operation is successfully carried out, it will make it possible to reach the greatest number of homes at reasonable prices and it will mean electricity for everyone.

Lighting for Brazzaville

Speaking of lighting for Brazzaville, Sama-Itoua Leonard becomes joyful: "I will not be here to celebrate Brazzaville's second centennial, but with the aid of our comrade deputy mayor of the city of Brazzaville, my aides and I will have given our beautiful capital its finest costume."

Actually, sodium lighting is the latest thing in public lighting systems. All studies have been completed and the work has been done by SOCECA [expansion unknown], under the technical guidance of the SNE. Work should be finished in about 2 months. All avenues and programmed streets will be lighted within the period of time contracted for. In particular, the avenues 3 Martyrs, de France and de la Tsieme will be like the Avenue de la Paix. Nearly 2,000 lighted homes will brighten the city of Brazzaville by the end of the program, on the condition that they be cared for and maintained.

TWO FRG COOPERATION AGREEMENTS--Cooperation between the Congo and the Federal Republic of Germany was broadened Thursday with the signing of two cooperation agreements at the Ministry of Cooperation. Representing the Congo was Aime-Emmanuel Yoka, minister-delegate to the Office of the President in charge of cooperation. Signing for the FRG was Harold Nestroy, ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary to the Congo. The first agreement involves financial cooperation through which the government of the FRG will make it possible for the Congolese Government to obtain from the Reconstruction Credit Institute a financial contribution of up to 500,000 deutsch marks for the proposed study on supplying water and electricity to rural centers. The second agreement concerns technical cooperation. The West German and Congolese governments agreed on the bilateral cooperation in order to encourage the economic and social development of their respective peoples. CORRUPTION CHARGED--A leading Ghanaian politician has called on leaders of the PNP to declare their assets. Mr. Joshua Attoh-Quarshie said he was gravely concerned that leaders of the PNP and those in positions of trust were amassing wealth at the expense of the down-trodden in Ghanaian society. The PNP, he said, was not sincere enough to continue the good work of Kwame Nkrumah who led the CPP to rule Ghana for more than 15 years. EEC DAIRY PRODUCTS AID--Ghana is to receive 300 tonnes of skimmed milk powder and 260 tonnes of butter oil in EEC aid. The total cost of the aid package is put at about $1 [as published] in world prices. This follows a request by Ghana for additional supplies of milk powder and butter oil to ensure a regular production of evaporated milk until the end of 1981, writes Shada Islam in Brussels. EEC officials said that the production of evaporated milk--one of the basic food products approved by the Ghana Government--had been erratic in recent months because of uncertainties about quantities or dates of arrival of various inputs. The European Community, for its part, has not sent food aid in dairy products to Ghana in recent years--and held up delivery of the aid in 1980--because of uncertainties about the utilisation of the assistance. The 1980 allocation of 2,500 tonnes of skimmed milk powder and 200 tonnes of butter oil has now been delivered. [Text] [London WEST AFRICA in English No 3354, 9 Nov 81 p 2683]

The Commercial houses were allocated ¢13.8m. Out of this, ¢5.6m. went to the Ghana National Trading Corporation (GNTC), ¢3m. to the Ministry of Agriculture (out of which ¢2.5m. would be for 800,000 day-old broiling chickens and 200,000 day-old laying chickens. BRITISH LOANS--Three loan agreements totalling £20.25m. (about $36.5m.) have been signed in London by the Standard Chartered Merchant Bank and The Bank of Ghana.

The agreements followed a memorandum of understanding on British credit support for Ghana signed last May in London by Britain and Ghana. The loan agreements could help finance contracts on the sale of British Leyland (BL) trucks, equipment for Ghana's gold mines and locomotives. NIGER

GOVERNMENT'S MEASURES TO ENCOURAGE FOOD PRODUCTION

Niamey SAHEL HEBDO in French No 290, 19 Oct 81 p 5

[Article by Abdoulaye Boureima: "Once Again!"]

[Excerpts] Once again Col Seyni Kountche, the head of state, took off to feel the pulsebeat of the deep Niger countryside during the harvest season.

He knows that "the Nigerien nation can assert itself and be respected only to the extent to which it depends on no outsider for its food."

The truth is that the chief of state has always believed in and dedicated his energy to a food policy whose characteristic is to eliminate within a longer or shorter period of time the imbalance between available grain crops and the demands of a steadily growing population.

The implementation of hydroagricultural projects, the exposure of rural populations to modern cultivation techniques and the organization of the basic farming sector in general are all actions contemplated or undertaken by the authorities, directly in accordance with the policy formulated by the CMS [Supreme Military Council] and the government immediately after 15 April 1974.

The liberation of our economy from weather vicissitudes and the organization of the Development Company lead to the establishment of the necessary conditions for improving the living standards of the Nigerien population which has already been able to prove repeatedly the possibility of taking Niger out of its condition of underdeveloped food production.

This requires full awareness, involvement and faith.

It is an awareness of the permanent food problems which must commit us unreservedly to a fight on all fronts of the agricultural battle in order to achieve food self-sufficiency.

It is an awareness of the struggle, of the only struggle which must also ask of us to build the new Niger with our own hands, together, and with the sweat of our brows.

Such involvement in the building of our country cannot exist without a deep faith in our land and its production capacity even if we admit that some parts of this land are terribly weak.

Actually, problems of hunger and thirst are feared more here than elsewhere, for Niger is a country which came out weakened by a pernicious drought which destroyed the environment and the livestock.

However, even if the authorities are willing to invest the entire national budget in the prevention of hunger, thirst and disease, today the food problem remains a bewildering one.

Last year, for example, we noted that despite a grain surplus, occasionally our urban and rural markets were the victims of highly speculative activities, which makes food sufficiency even harder to achieve.

Actually, political will alone is not enough. The population must dedicate itself to the cultivation of the land, which is the only thing which could help it to help itself and to break the infernal dependency circle.

By promoting a policy based on irrigated agriculture, Niger intends to rely on its own forces above all in order to commit itself to, wage and win the production battle.

World Food Day, which was held on 16 October, gave Niger the opportunity to reassert once again its options in its fight against hunger.

The reorganization of the National Office of Food Products and the price increases or readjustments for some foodstuffs serve the purpose of stimulating agricultural output and "awakening in each one of us the awareness of what must be undertaken in order to protect the country from hunger."

Such is the price of our food security and the security of the country.

MINISTER DISCUSSES RICE, SUGAR, PEANUT SUPPLIES

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 15 Oct 81 p 4

[Report: "Rice: Regular Supply Ensured for One Year"]

[Excerpt] "In the economic sense of the word there is no rice shortage in Senegal." Djibo Ka, Minister of Information and Telecommunications, was firm on this point. He made this statement during a press conference on the proceedings of the Council of Ministers last Tuesday which took place yesterday.

Mr Ka indicated that 35,000 tons of rice were distributed on three separate occasions in the first week of the current month. However, the monthly consumption of the product throughout the country is 26,000 tons. In the worst of cases, he stated, we should have an emergency supply of 9,000 tons. Why then is it difficult to find rice on the market? The minister, who pointed out that Senegal had ensured itself of a regular supply for one year, attributed such shortages to the attitude of uncivic-minded merchants who are holding stocks back. He added that the population had begun to denounce the perpetrators of such practices which conflict with the interests of the country, the nation and the consumers. He exclaimed that "I would like to emphasize this, for it proves that there has never been any shortage, particularly during this period."

As far as sugar is concerned, Djibo Ka acknowledged that certain speculative practices existed. Nevertheless, he let it be known that during the period under consideration the Senegalese Sugar Company had formulated a plan for increasing the area under this crop. This led to a stop in production and created a shortage of 12,000 tons. In order to compensate for it, the government had authorized imports totaling the same amount, equitably distributed between the CSS [Senegalese Sugar Company] and some merchants. The company carried out its assignment (by importing 6,000 tons), whereas the balance, which was to be imported by Senegalese merchants, was not entirely met.

The purpose of the government's action was to encourage the cultivation of sugar to the point of self-sufficiency and to allow local agents to supply this commodity. However, measures will be taken to prevent any recurrence of this situation. After pointing out that Senegal does not impose on consumers unwanted goods, some rules must be observed with their agreement.

Sanctions

In the case of the rice, the current policy will be continued. The state will see to it that the merchants to whom a quota has been allocated "are among the purest of the pure, the most honest and most supportive of the national interest. As to those who will have violated their promises by their own fault (incompetence, speculation or withholding stocks) they will be strictly penalized," the minister pointed out. He added that some may even lose their right to a rice quota. Furthermore, Ka said, SONADIS [National Investment Company of Senegal] stores will be supplied on a priority basis. He also stated that the CSS had resumed activities as of 12 October. The minister refused to say exactly when the situation will become normal again. He pointed out that sugar had begun to reappear on the marketplace. He concluded the subject by calling upon the population to support the government by denouncing suspected merchants and those who place their personal interest higher than that of the collective.

In his discussion of the marketing campaign, Djibo Ka said that there was no contradiction between the strict governmental measures to block the flow of peanuts to the parallel market and the forfeiture granted to some producers who had stockpiled peanuts for speculative purposes last year. He pointed out that strict instructions were given to the customs authorities and the police to prevent Senegalese peanuts from going to another country. The minister had already pointed out that the government opened the marketing campaign at the most suitable times (1 October for cereal crops and 2 November for peanuts) so that the Senegalese rural masses could sell their output through their cooperatives. Along the same line of thought, steps were taken on the material and human levels to ensure that everything develops normally and to prevent failing producers from harming their cooperatives. According to Djibo Ka the millet campaign was inaugurated under excellent conditions.

PREPARATIONS FOR COTTON MARKETING CAMPAIGN

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 19 Oct 81 p 7

[Article by Mbagnick Diop]

[Text] Initiated by all rural development departments as their prime current concern, plans for the marketing campaign are being made at all levels with the necessary care and effectiveness. It is within such a framework that one must situate the information tours that SODEFITEX [Textile Fiber Development Company] officials in charge of organizing cotton-producing farmers have been making in recent weeks.

Because of difficulties connected with the collecting and marketing of cotton subjected to standards of quality, this action is very important. Consequently, throughout the cotton-growing area, which extends from the Sine-Saloum region to upper Casamance and including eastern Senegal, complaints have been formulated by cotton producers, whose hopes were raised this year by rainfall that was relatively well-distributed in time and space.

The complaints have to do with a single subject, to wit, an improvement in the purchasing system by perfect organization of markets. It must be recalled that on the occasion of the September visit of Amadou Bator Diop, general director of SODEFITEX, the farmers outlined the many difficulties linked with cotton marketing. Those in the Sine-Saloum region seem to be the hardest hit by problems that affected the operation last year. And yet, the dispute -- if it can be called that -- between organizers and farmers during the previous season essentially had to do with standards of quality for cotton, which is classified into three categories depending on how clean it is.

On this precise subject, it must be said that it is the farmers who are in the wrong, for rather than being careful about their harvest, they prefer to give the task of picking the "white gold" to workers who do not put their heart in the task. In order to avoid any repetition of these errors, SODEFITEX officials go from village to village with technical recommendations aimed at improved harvesting and marketing. One theme is recurrent: forage based on cottonseed, which will support the Livestock Protection Operation.

Increased Efforts

As they told the general director of SODEFITEX, the farmers have told organizers that the increased efforts required by cotton growing are not fairly compensated.

While hailing the government's determination, a determination that has resulted in an increased price to the producer, the farmers once again formulated their wish for a hike in the price of cotton, which they find too close to that of peanuts. In fact, this is a wish deserving of well-meaning examination because agricultural statistics have shown that with equal yields, one hectare of cotton requires between 35 to 50 percent greater efforts than one hectare of peanuts. Consequently, given the current price structure for agricultural products, a day of cotton work is undervalued.

With respect to delays in the marketing of cotton during the previous season, it should be emphasized that they will not reoccur because SODEFITEX has learned its lesson and has worked out a purchase structure responding to the needs of cotton-producing farmers. Some 800 collection points will be opened beginning on 16 November throughout the five regions, made up of 14 sectors, constituting SODEFITEX' field of action.

It is hoped that with this structure, the Sine-Saloum region, which will have nine trucks and four crews, will undertake its cotton marketing campaign in earnest. The system will be further improved by giving responsibility to cotton producers associations (ABP), to which, beginning on 16 November, certain powers will be transferred, including the marketing and shipping of the cotton crop. These associations will number 116, with 25 in the Sine-Saloum region. Their profits will enable them to make collective investments.

With respect to the classification of cotton based on how clean it is, farmers have pledged to respect recommendations so as to have a high-quality crop. This is a commitment in keeping with the cotton program because, as the general director of SODEFITEX said during an interview, there are world standards of quality that every exporting country must respect.

As shown by preparatory work, the cotton marketing campaign that will begin on 16 November looks promising. The purchasing structure, made up of scales, trucks and crews, was designed on a scale that Sammy Lucien Chaupin called "the battle of the white gold."

HABIB THIAM ANNOUNCES RESULTS OF AFFORESTATION

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 16 Oct 81 p 5

[Speech by Prime Minister Habib Thiam in Dagana; date not given]

[Excerpts] Here in Dagana, at the close of an agricultural and forestry season watched with a great deal of hope by the entire nation, we have now come to the symbolic conclusion of the national afforestation campaign, a campaign to which our chief of state, President Abdou Diouf, attaches very great importance.

In choosing Dagana to close the 1981 afforestation campaign, we thereby emphasized the place of subregional cooperation in that action. Indeed, Senegalese and Mauritanians live side by side in Dagana, foreshadowing that immense undertaking of the integrated development of the valley begun by Mali, Mauritania and Senegal.

In his speech at the opening of the campaign, the secretary of state for woods and forests quite rightly insisted, in Diourbel, on the integration of forestry actions into economic and social development actions. Here in Dagana, in the heart of Walo in the river valley, the integration of agriculture, livestock raising, fish farming and forestry and afforestation is possible. It is the guarantee of success and makes it possible to get the most out of future development. Thanks to it, the productivity of workers will reach a high level in a healthy, improved environment where it will be pleasant to live.

Within such a framework and perspective, we shall in a few weeks, only a few kilometers from here, begin work on the Diama Dam, which the entire river region impatiently awaits. It is a dam that will enable Senegal to enter a new era because it will give our country the decisive weapon for fighting drought. I am speaking about harnessing water.

The forestry program in the subregion and that of the OMVS are essential to the well-being of the people.

The completion of this program will mean a large population increase and without any doubt, migratory movement toward the subregion. The already meager plant resources will then be hard pressed to meet the need for wood to burn. An initial generation of forest projects must therefore make the conservation and development of natural vegetation possible, particularly the gonakies forests. However, natural forests alone will be insufficient to meet needs for wood. Furthermore, the vast areas being irrigated for crops will have to be protected from the drying winds and dust deposits. For that purpose, windbreaks will be needed.

That is why a second generation of forestry projects involving afforestation will be called for. Some of the projects will be irrigated in order to produce massive amounts of wood within a short period of time on reasonable areas of land. In general, from 15 to 20 percent of the land will have to be reserved for afforestation and the planting of fruit trees.

But actions in the valley will serve no purpose if the great Sahel is neglected, abandoned to the devastating effects of pasture fires and abusive use. That is why programs for the development of grazing land and plantations of forage and gum trees will be an indispensable complement to valley programs.

It is within this overall framework that one must view the forestry program in the Senegal River Valley. Its execution must be concomitant with, even previous to, strictly agricultural development actions.

At any rate, Senegal intends to pursue this programming and pledges to work, in cooperation with its partners, in order to launch afforestation actions in the subregion, very rapidly and at a very high rate of annual completion.

Aid From Friendly Countries

We are pleased with the substantial aid received from friendly countries and nongovernmental organizations, which has enabled us to carry out major afforestation and fish farming projects.

Using financing from France, tests on the natural regeneration of the gonakies forest and irrigated afforestation have been undertaken in Dagana and Podor departments.

In Dieri and the forested and grazing area, Canadian financing permitted the completion of large experimental plantations of various gum and acacia trees.

In the same area, the development and afforestation project that began in 1975, thanks to the Federal Republic of Germany, has made it possible to set up 3,913 hectares of plantations to date in the Louga and river regions.

In 1979, American financing made it possible to begin a major program of intensive fish farming in Dagana and Podor departments, a project aimed at solving problems caused by the drop in continental fish production. Considering the success obtained, the program will be extended to the entire river valley (departments of Matam and Bakel) and to the regions of eastern Senegal and Casamance.

In the Gandiolais area, the fixation of dunes, using Canadian financing, has made remarkable progress. From 1979 to 1981, 390 hectares of primary dunes were held in place by the planting of filaos. The 1981 campaign alone has covered 240 hectares.

Finally, decentralized actions at the grass-roots level are becoming increasingly important with financing from nongovernmental organizations such as the International Union for the Protection of Children (UIPE) in REvane and with the action of Human Promotion, SODESP [expansion unknown] and SAED [Company for the Development and Working of Land in the Senegal River Delta and Valley].

New actions are in the stage of advanced negotiations and will soon be undertaken. They include the following:

The European Development Fund (EDF) will finance a program of 2,500 hectares of acacias in the Department of Podor. This program is aimed at restoring the acacia ecosystems that have been greatly damaged in the area by recent years of drought.

In the same department, a program of 6,000 hectares of plantings and regeneration will be financed by Holland. This project attaches great importance to the development of fruit trees.

It is through the combination of all efforts on the occasion of the afforestation campaigns that we can intensify our actions and attain, or even surpass, the objective of 10,000 hectares per year between now and the end of the Sixth Plan.

The 1981 national afforestation campaign has so far made it possible to attain the following results: 4,998 hectares of plantations under government administration; 4,495 hectares of individual and village community plantations; 220 kilometers of plantings along roads; 320,000 plants distributed to the people, some 20 percent of which are fruit trees; and 100 kilometers of windbreaks.

The effort therefore amounts to 9,500 hectares of plantations and the planting of over 8 million trees.

The development of grass-roots, community and village action will assuredly be the most decisive element of our success in the struggle against the expansion of the desert. I therefore hail the action of the people, which has made it possible to achieve these results. I congratulate the positive action of the secretary of state for woods and forests, Cheikh Cissokho, and his departments and encourage them to continue on this path with even greater determination and energy.

Mr Mayor, if the planting and afforestation is to be intensified in the valley and in Dieri, we must not neglect the cities, particularly rural communes such as Dagana, which are propelled into rapid development with the expansion of the valley development program. These communes must be ready to meet their new destiny.

That is why they must begin now to view their development within the framework of plans that always include the vegetation element. This integration must take the form of forests around populated areas, parks with trees, nurseries.

Within such a framework, the government is ready to support their efforts.

At any rate, I am confident that Dagana will remain a modern city in a green background, a challenge to the desert, a city that season after season will become more beautiful, more highly developed, more modern, still firmly rooted in its prestigious past and yet, one of the doorways to the future of Senegal that President Abdo Abdou Diouf intends to build for our country.

It is with this hope that I harbor for Dagana, but also for all the rural commune cities and hamlets of Senegal, that I urge all of you to take up the task of afforestation and planting.

Having completed the planting, we must then protect the trees. In addition and in general, following the relatively abundant rain that God in his great mercy has given us this year, we must do everything to protect our crops and pasture against fire. I am convinced that the great majority of the Senegalese people will maintain their noteworthy efforts that they began during this year drawing to a close, and in declaring the 1981 national afforestation campaign officially concluded, I now open the national campaign to fight forest and brush fires.

RESIGNATION OF PDS ACTIVISTS--Kolda (APS)--Sixty PDS [Senegalese Democratic Party] activists from the departmental convention of Kolda have just resigned from the party and will join the Socialist Party of Senegal. In a statement to AGENCE DE PRESSE SENEGALAISE, Sambayel Aly Boury Balde, coordinator of the departmental convention, emphasizes that the leaders of the PDS have seriously violated the path set forth for them, that of the taking of power by democratic means, thereby infringing upon state security. The 60 PDS members decided to join the Socialist Party, he said, because the democratic opening "courageously instituted in Senegal by President Abdou Diouf is real." Consequently, Sambayel Aly Boury Balde states, "we commit ourselves to work actively behind the secretary general of coordination of the Socialist Party of Kolda, for the political strengthening of the department and the triumph of the Socialist Party." DIPLOMATS EXPECT FOOD STOCKS TO RUN OUT IN JANUARY

Nairobi THE WEEKLY REVIEW in English 6 Nov 81 p 12

[Text] LAST March a serious alarmed Tanzanian President Julius Nyerere told his countrymen that they were facing the worst famine in 20 years. Some people might die, said the Tanzanian leader, who had made an emergency fact-finding tour of the four regions around Lake Victoria that had been hardest hit by famine. The crisis, which he termed as the worst faced by his government, was made even worse by the serious shortage of foreign exchange to import food. "We are facing the prospect of serious famine and we do not have the money to avert it," Nyerere told students at Dar es Salaam University. "We don't know what we are going to do." Nyerere also was perturbed by what he called the "indifference of many Tanzanian officials".

Nyerere had predicted the worst if the rains did not come in the next three months. Some rains did come, and in July an apparently relieved Nyerere told his countrymen that the worst might be avoided. The Tanzanian leader said that although the country did not have adequate food reserves, the fear of famine had been reduced due to the last season's harvest. Western diplomats appear not to share Nyerere's optimistic assessment. They even think the Tanzanian president may have been wrongly appraised of the situation. Nyerere is said to have "been told that there will be shortages, but not serious ones". That, the western diplomats were quoted as saying, was far from the reality of the situation, which is said to be much worse. They say that food stocks are so low they will run out by January.

Intriguingly, officials of the country's ministry of agriculture seem to agree with the assessment by the western diplomats. The ministry's principal (permanent) secretary, Mr. David Masanja, was quoted last week as saying that the situation was desperate. He believed maize stocks would run out by December. The ministry's documents also show that all maize stocks will be depleted by January or February and that the country will need some 170,000 tonnes of imported corn to avoid famine until the next harvest in June.

Nyerere's July assessment indicates that he might not have been informed of the country's food situation by the ministry. And for some unexplained reason, the ministry has not taken any steps to obtain food aid. Masanja was quoted as conceding that no requests for food aid had been made. His reason was that the government was looking into the possibility of buying food on the open market. That possibility is, however, thought to be remote considering that Tanzania's foreign reserves are almost nil.

Western diplomats are bewildered by the lack of action. They were quoted as saying that they had even taken the initiative of asking the ministry to make requests for food aid, but that had received no response. "We can't ask our governments for food unless we have a request from the Tanzanian government," one diplomat was quoted as saying. In the past five years Tanzania has bought a total of 276,000 tonnes of maize from the United States and has received another 116,100 tonnes in food aid. It also bought 55,000 tonnes of rice from Japan last year. Japan announced this week that it will be rushing a similar amount to Tanzania in response to the reports of imminent famine.

The western diplomats fear that even if the government was to act now, it may be too late to stave off famine. The deadline for applying for US food aid, for instance, was October 1. The diplomats also say that the matter is likely to be complicated, were the Tanzanians to approach the US, by the Reagan administration's apparent coolness to new aid demands and big US commitments in grain deals to the Soviet Union.

Past food aid has, ironically, contributed to the present situation. Shipments from the US imported with them an avoracious insect, prostephanus truncatus, which has devoured food in central Tanzania, putting some one million people on the list of those threatened with famine. The insects are said to have destroyed 30 per cent of stored maize in the Tabora region, necessitating the need for some 40,000 tonnes in food aid to prevent famine in the area.

The fact that the food shortages may not have been of the government's making will not absolve the authorities from blame, especially if a major famine hit the country leading to a high number of deaths. Nyerere should be clearly aware of this. In March he pointed out that "the Amin war (with former Ugandan dictator Idi Amin in 1979) did not threaten me as the present food situation". The question doing the rounds in diplomatic circles is whether some individuals are deliberately creating a food crisis to create political problems for Nyerere. Some western diplomats think so. Others wait for time to provide the answer. ■

On the occasion of the friendly visit which His Excellency Army General Gnassingbe Eyadema, president-founder of the Rally of the Togolese People, on the invitation of Comrade Kim Il Sung, grand leader and president of the People's Democratic Republic of Korea, and desirous to strengthen the ties of friendship between the two countries and to develop economic and technical cooperation relations further, the government of the Republic of Togo (henceforth to be referred to as the "Togolese Party") and the government of the People's Democratic Republic of Korea (henceforth referred to as the "Korean Party") have agreed on the following:

Article 1

At the consultative meeting of the Ministers of Agriculture of African Countries which participated in the symposium of nonaligned and other developing countries on increasing food and agricultural production, Comrade Kim Il Sung, the grand leader, made an effective contribution to the agricultural development of these countries through the creation of agroscientific institutes in African countries.

Thanks to the concern shown by Comrade Kim Il Sung, the grand leader, the Korean Party will set up in Togo an agroscientific institute which will use some of the already irrigated 120-hectare area, which is part of the 800-hectare irrigation project under way.

The Korean Party will provide the agricultural machinery needed by the institute and assign agricultural scientists and technicians who will train technical cadres while engaging in joint research.

Article 2

The Korean Party undertakes to build in Lome, on the basis of an interest-free long-term loan, a soccer stadium for 50,000 spectators, which will include an official rostrum for 3,000 people, a 5,000-seat annex and benches.

To this effect, in the first quarter of 1982, the Korean Party will assign to Togo a mission for the study of the building of the soccer stadium, as a result of which the two parties will agree on the size and location of the stadium and on other specific problems, taking into consideration Togolese reality and the delivery possibilities of the Korean Party.

In order to ensure the implementation of the project, the Korean Party will draft a plan and provide the necessary equipment, materials and technical cooperation for the implementation of the project.

The Togolese Party will be in charge of the construction of the project. It will provide the necessary information, the manpower and the necessary local raw materials, the internal furnishings and equipment, other equipment not produced in Korea and some materials.

Article 3

The Korean Party will provide economic and technical cooperation on the basis of an interest-free long-term loan for four irrigation projects covering 1,300 hectares as suggested by the Togolese Party.

In the course of the implementation of said projects, the Korean Party will make it possible for Togolese cadres to undergo on-the-job training in the areas of irrigation, dam construction, land management and operation of irrigation facilities. Said irrigation projects will be implemented on a sequential basis following the completion of the current 800-hectare project.

The Korean Party will formulate the plan and provide the necessary equipment, materials and technical cooperation for the implementation of these projects.

The Togolese Party will be responsible for the execution of the project. It will provide the necessary data for the formulation of the project, the manpower, the necessary local construction materials, transportation facilities on its territory and equipment not produced in Korea.

Article 4

In order to advance the implementation of the 11 September 1974 agreement concluded between the governments of the two countries, the Korean Party will build a plant for the repair of agricultural machinery, which will be able to manufacture agricultural tools meeting Togolese conditions and repair agricultural machinery.

To this effect, the parties will reach an agreement on the capacity, size and range of repairs of the plant and on other specific practical problems, following on-site studies by a study mission which will be assigned to Togo by the Korean Party during the first quarter of 1982.

Article 5

The equipment and construction materials to be supplied by the Korean Party in accordance with this protocol will be delivered CIF/Lome Port. The Togolese Party will assume the cost of port storage of the equipment and materials supplied by the Korean Party and the cost of their transportation on its territory.

Article 6

The Togolese Party will repay the Korean Party the loan granted by the Korean Party in 25 equal annual payments, beginning 1 year after the commissioning of the project.

Article 7

The Togolese Party will exempt from all customs and other fees the equipment and materials supplied by the Korean Party on the basis of this agreement protocol.

Article 8

The Togolese Party will meet the cost of the work, living conditions and transportation on its territory of the technicians assigned by the Korean Party for the implementation of this agreement protocol. No taxes will be levied on said personnel.

The specific problems related to the technicians' salaries will be the subject of a separate agreement by the interested agencies of the two countries.

Article 9

With a view to the use of the loan as per the present agreement protocol and for the purpose of its repayment, the Togolese Bank of Commerce and Industry of the Republic of Togo and the Foreign Trade Bank of the People's Democratic Republic of Korea will open a special commission-free account. Practical banking problems related to the regulations pertaining to and the management of the account will be the subject of a separate agreement.

Article 10

The specific problems related to the implementation of this agreement protocol will be resolved with a separate protocol to be concluded between the interested agencies of the two parties.

Article 11

The two parties will set up a mixed commission in charge of the implementation of the present agreement protocol.

The mixed commission will meet alternately in Pyong Yang and Lome once every two years.

Article 12

Changes and amendments of the present agreement protocol may be made only on the basis of the joint written agreement of the parties.

Article 13

This agreement protocol will become effective as of the date of its signature and will remain valid until the full implementation of the obligations assumed by the two parties based on the present agreement protocol.

Drafted in Pyong Yang on 4 October 1981 in two copies, in French and Korean, both texts equally valid.

SUCCESS OF MUGABE'S BALKAN TRIP REPORTED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 21 Nov 81 pp 1, 6

[Text] THE Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, returned from his successful Balkan trip last night with agreements in principle for major joint development projects.

Addressing a Press conference following his arrival at Salisbury airport, Mr Mugabe said he and his delegation had high-level discussions to boost co-operation between Zimbabwe and Yugoslavia, Romania and Bulgaria.

The Balkan states had sophisticated technology in agriculture, industry and roadbuilding which would be of major benefit to Zimbabwe.

All three of the countries had approached him for the launching of joint funded projects between governments.

"There are vast areas where we shall soon be translating discussions into concrete form. So the financial aspect . . . can be reflected in terms of the actual projects undertaken."

Agreements were not yet finalised, but would be vigorously pursued at the ministerial level.

"This is a matter where various ministers must now engage themselves, so relations can be made much more meaningful."

The joint projects would include the training of Zimbabweans to manage them, once the assisting country had handed them over.

Zimbabwe had favourable trade balances with all three countries, and was considering ways of increasing trade in both directions.

Of Bulgaria he said: "There are very good prospects for increasing our exports of tobacco. They also want to buy our cotton and various other products which are produced in this country."

Mr Mugabe said he was impressed at the sophistication of the countries he visited.

"We have a lot to learn from them. From the organisation of projects, organisaton of labour, organisation of inputs. And the level of technology they have achieved.

"Many will tell you in the West that these are poor countries because of socialism. Far from it. You have to visit these countries to see the level of development in them.

"And we were impressed ourselves. As socialists we find the performance very appealing to us and very inspiring indeed."

Mr Mugabe and his delegation were met at a chilly and windswept Salisbury airport by the Deputy Prime Minister, Mr Simon Muzenda, Chief Justice Fieldsend, Government ministers, the defence commanders, and members of the diplomatic corps.

[Editorial: "Successful Visit"]

[Text] THE Prime Minister returned yesterday from a very successful tour of the Balkan States where he procured development aid for this country. A large number of our people do not know the great contribution the Balkan States made to the success of our liberation war.

Of course there are a horde of good reasons why the Prime Minister should have undertaken this particular trip at this time. As a people, it is important that we show our sincerest appreciation and gratefulness to the Balkan people for having helped us to survive and overcome some very difficult and decisive periods of our lives. Without their practical aid, it wouldn't have been possible to stop Ian Smith from singing his cacophonous tune of "not in a thousand years".

Besides, in the face of what South Africa is doing to us, no person would have so eloquently put and defended this country's political principles with determination, energy, dignity, honesty and courage to the outside world than our Prime Minister.

MUGABE SIGNS FOUR ACCORDS WITH SOFIA

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 20 Nov 81 p 1

[Article by Davison Maruziva]

[Text] ZIMBABWE and Bulgaria have signed four co-operation agreements in the fields of radio, television, air services and economic development and co-operation.

The agreements were concluded immediately after a 45-minute final round of talks, marking the end of the visit here by the Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, and his delegation.

The delegation is expected to return home this evening after a two-week official visit to Yugoslavia, Romania and Bulgaria.

The Prime Minister and President Todor Zhivkov signed the economic development and co-operation agreement, while Dr Witness Mangwende, the Minister of Foreign Affairs, and his Bulgarian counterpart signed the other three co-operation agreements.

The air transport agreement is for air services between and beyond the borders of the two countries.

Immediately after the signing, Mr Mugabe was interviewed by Bulgarian radio and television.

The Prime Minister said the purpose of the visit was to consolidate the friendship between ZANU (PF) and the Bulgarian Communist Party, between Bulgaria and Zimbabwe, and between President Zhivkov and himself.

Mr Mugabe said there were very positive forms between Zimbabwe and Bulgaria. The two countries had one ideological line — the socialist line.

The visit, he hoped, would assist in reinforcing and establishing a socialist society in Zimbabwe.

On South Africa, the Prime Minister said its aggressive character was not only directed at Zimbabwe, but at all its neighbours.

AGGRESSION

"All South Africa's neighbours are complaining about its aggression and its refusal to accept the democracy around it, which poses yet another threat to its system of apartheid.

"We will continue to give support to the fighting progressive forces in South Africa so that they can intensify their fight against South Africa. It is this posture that South Africa opposes," Mr Mugabe said.

Zimbabwe had a duty which was Africanist, internationalist and humanistic, to fight for democracy wherever it did not exist. South Africa had carried out a number of aggressions against its neighbours and had recruited 5 000 dissidents who were being trained to invade Zimbabwe.

But before this, South Africa was already using its agents to carry out acts of sabotage in Zimbabwe.

"Apart from these South Africa has been imposing economic measures of trying to strangle our little republic by ensuring that the transportation system does not operate as smoothly as it should."

The Prime Minister called on the international community to condemn South Africa and to take measures to make it redirect its thinking. South Africa was standing in the way of Namibian independence and Zimbabwe's view was that its intransigence had to cease so that United Nations Resolution 435 could be implemented.

NKALA REPORTS RUMORS OF RF PLOT

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 25 Nov 81 p 1

[Article by Elton Mutasa]

[Text] THE Minister of Finance, Senator Enos Nkala, yesterday accused the Republican Front and other minority parties of trying to destroy Zimbabwe's economy by spreading false and alarming rumours against the Government.

He said the Government would take strong action against such people, "in the national interest".

Senator Nkala was reacting to the countrywide rumours that he had been arrested for misappropriating Government funds.

He said another rumour was that he had been shot dead. People believing such lies by "these unscrupulous and destructive elements", were as much to blame.

"There is a well knitted plan by the Republican Front and other minority parties to destroy the well-being of Zimbabwe's economy," Senator Nkala said in an interview.

The rumours against him were also intended to undermine public confidence in the Government and those involved "had their full meal of a well orchestrated and systematically organised character assassination".

"Since I have been the major object in their attempt to destabilise Zimbabwe and its people I must warn them that the Government's axe will fall on them in the most vicious manner."

Senator Nkala said the RF — supported by an external enemy — had sent messages to South Africa, Brit in and other European countries that he had stolen $13 million of the Zimcord funds and was already under arrest.

"The reason for trying to destroy me was that I had been too hard on the whites and I had to go one way or the other, so they project that the Government was being reckless in its administration of the country's finances."

Senator Nkala said he would not be deterred from taking preventative measures to protect Zimbabwe's economy and its people.

"I am more determined than ever before to hit hard those who intend to undermine our economy, public confidence and the general well-being of the loyal people of Zimbabwe."

He said that if the move was an attempt to "frighten me from taking preventative measures — then they are mistaken.

"I am working on much stiffer measures against economic saboteurs and I will meet them half way. If they want a race with me, we will have it.

"I have gone through difficult circumstances before and I have always become much more effective in the face of enemies and organised opposition."

He said he was checking reports about irregular practices by people intending to leave the country for South Africa.

He said his ministry would not hesitate to act against such people who wanted to see the economy of Zimbabwe collapse for their own selfish ends.

"I can assure them that I will hit them so hard that they can never forget. We are a Government and we will rule firmly. This must be absolutely clear to those who may think that we are weak and can do whatever they want."

MINISTERS TO DISCUSS CASE OF ESCAPED SOUTH AFRICAN 'SPY'

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 20 Nov 81 pp 1, 12

[Text] Two Government ministers will meet today to discuss developments in the case of the escaped South African spy suspect, Captain Frank Gericke.

The Minister of State in the Prime Minister's Office, Mr Emmerson Munangagwa, said yesterday he would meet the Minister of Home Affairs, Mr Richard Hove, to discuss police and intelligence information on the escape of Gericke and the disappearance of Detective inspector Fred Varkevisser.

Details would be released after the meeting.

Police yesterday issued an artist's impression of the unidentified man who was with Inspector Varkevisser when Captain Gericke was released from jail on Sunday.

Anyone who can recognise him from the drawing and has seen him recently should contact the law and order section of the CID immediately on Salisbury 790898.

The man is about 5 ft 6 in and of slim athletic build. He is aged about 40, has a tanned complexion and short, dark, curly hair, bald on top and is clean shaven.

He was last seen wearing long grey trousers, open neck shirt, and a black suede or leather jacket.

Police sources said Inspector Varkevisser was earlier this year assigned to investigate the assassination of the African National Congress representative in Zimbabwe, Mr Joe Gqabi.

Inspector Varkevisser vanished with his family--his wife, Marisa, and two children, Jason (9) and Kelly (5)--after obtaining the release of Captain Gericke.

Captain Gericke was Matabeleland's foremost bomb disposal expert.

As officer commanding 1 Engineering Squadron, he gave lectures and advice to members of the public on what to do in bomb-scare situations. It is understood that Captain Gericke, who was divorced, had been reunited with his wife.

A source close to his former wife said yesterday that she had been greatly distressed by the arrest. Before his escape she had consulted a Salisbury lawyer.

Mrs Mary Varkevisser, Inspector Varkevisser's mother, said yesterday: "I know he is innocent. He wouldn't do that. He wouldn't help a spy."

Mrs Varkevisser, a nursing sister at Gwelo hospital for many years, who lives with her husband on Woolhara farm near Lalapanzi where her son was brought up, was upset yesterday.

"I spoke on the telephone to my son on Sunday at 6 pm," she said. "I rang him and asked him to get some farm machinery spares for my husband and he said he would.

"I told him that Dad was having trouble on the farm and he told me not to worry. He said he was going to Bulawayo on a case the next day and when he returned he would try to get to the farm and sort things out.

"I had read that play about the little girl who was kidnapped and told him to look after Kelly and he told me not to panic. It was a cheerful, normal conversation we had and there was nothing unusual. Certainly there was nothing to indicate they were leaving."

She said that her son coached the police in rugby. "His real names are Frederick Gordon Neil, but we call him Derek and the police call him Fred," she said.

"My husband is a second-generation Zimbabwean and Derek is a third generation Zimbabwean. None of us have any contact with South Africa. We don't speak the language. My son is fine, decent and upright--everything that is good--and I know he would not do anything like this."

He was dedicated to his work with the police and in May was sent on a 10-week course at the Police College in Exeter, England, she said.

Her son and his family were discovered to be missing by their domestic worker on Monday morning at their home at 12 Creswick Road, Hillside, Salisbury.

She rang the wife's mother in Salisbury who later rang Mrs Varkevisser, thinking that perhaps one of them had been taken ill.

"What they are saying about my son is not true for that is not my son. There is something very wrong," she said.

[Editorial: "Fire Him"]

THE escape from custody of Captain Frank Gericke and the subsequent disappearance of Detective Inspector Varkevisser and his family, which reads like a thriller story, is a national disgrace.

The people of this country must have been shocked by the news and a great many questions remain to be answered. Clearly, the Minister of Home Affairs who is responsible for the police will finally have to tell all.

Was Inspector Varkevisser alone in plotting and facilitating the escape of this man? In any case, who assigned him to handle this inquiry and was it the same person who assigned him to handle the Joe Gqabi investigation?

The nation has been groping in the dark and the situation will inevitably result in lack of confidence in our police force. Indeed, the public at large has become disillusioned and disappointed by these developments. Last week the Minister of State in the Prime Minister's Office, Mr Munangagwa, said the explosions at Inkomo Barracks, which caused the country to lose about $36 million in arms, was caused by "South African military and underworld individuals. The placing of devices in the depot had been done by an internal agent acting for an external agent".

In our view, internal agents are those that facilitated the escape of Captain Gericke, those that assigned Mr Varkevisser to handle the case and those that made the decision to have this case transferred from Bulawayo to Salisbury. It is inconceivable that this was a one-man job.

Just how faithful is the present police force to our Government? We feel the Commissioner of Police should be fired for the escape of these people. The blame lies squarely on his doorstep.

The fortunes of Zimbabwe are in our hands now, to make or mar. Why should we continue to depend on the skills of people who are bent on destroying us?

RAIL LINK TO BEIRA TO REOPEN NEXT WEEK

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 26 Nov 81 p 1

[Text] The rail bridge over the Pungwe River on the Beira-Zimbabwe line, damaged by saboteurs on October 29, will reopen to traffic on Tuesday. This was announced by the national director of Mozambique Ports and Railways, Dr S. M. Bhatt, in Salisbury yesterday.

He also said the Beira-Feruka oil pipeline, which is suspended from the road bridge, would almost certainly be in commission by the end of December.

There was evidence that the damage to the bridge had been the work of South African agents intending to hamper the progress of the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference and dislocate transport links between Zimbabwe and Mozambique, he said.

At a conference in Salisbury entitled Transport and the SADCC, Dr Bhatt said that socio-economic development in the region depended largely on transport and communications.

Regional co-operation on transport matters was essential if economic dependence on South Africa was to be reduced and a successful alternative offered.

Problems faced by Mozambique port and railway authorities included:

- Shortages of skilled artisans, supervisors and middle management.
- Poor communications facilities.
- Transport inadequacies.

Seventy-five percent of all goods entering Mozambique ports were in transit, he said, and rehabilitation of its rail network was under way.

This included improvements to the Chicualacuala-Maputo section and the Machipanda-Beira line. Both were vital for Zimbabwe's imports and exports.

Moving goods through Mozambique worked out at about 23 percent cheaper than using Durban or Port Elizabeth in South Africa and Zimbabwean merchants saved as much as 56 percent by using Beira instead of Durban.

Bottlenecks

Asked about bottlenecks, he said that once a reliable and efficient communications system was in operation, delays could be monitored more effectively.

Feasibility studies on building silos at Maputo were being carried out by French consultants and a coal terminal at Matola would take 2½ years to complete after project approval.

He dismissed suggestions that his department was over-optimistic as to its cargo handling ability and said that Mozambique ports and rail links were under-utilised by neighbouring countries.

BRIGHT FUTURE FOR COAL EXPORTS SEEN

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 26 Nov 81 p 17

[Text] ONE happy result of higher oil prices is Europe's increased interest in Zimbabwe's thermal coal, the Minister of Transport, Mr Josiah Chinamano, said in Salisbury yesterday.

Opening a two-day seminar on transport, he said, prices being paid for coal today were high enough to cover transport costs between here and Europe.

Consultants were to be commissioned to assess the market and recommend how best to transport the coal.

"The figures being contemplated are enormous and if realised in some eight years' time then spectacular changes will have to be made to the infrastructure," Mr Chinamano said.

Not only the old routes through Beira and Maputo would be considered, but also the west coast, pipelines and barge traffic.

Mr Chinamano said his ministry had problems in the movement of goods by rail.

"The major problem facing Zimbabwe at present is the inability to meet all the requirements of our various customers.

"In brief, the problem is due to a shortage of railway locomotives, which has been exacerbated by a shortage of skilled artisans," he added.

However, a number of steps had been taken to ease the problems.

Canada and the United States were supplying 60 new diesel locomotives, and these would be in Zimbabwe in the first half of 1982. Another 22 locomotives were to be re-engined by British firms.

Mr Chinamano also thanked neighbouring countries for their help.

"We are hiring 12 locomotives from Mozambique, four locomotives have been offered by

TOBACCO CROP FOREIGN EXCHANGE EARNINGS FORECAST

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 24 Nov 81 p 1

[Article by Gareth Willard]

[Text] Last season's flue-cured tobacco crop will earn Zimbabwe about $220 million in foreign exchange and the crop now being planted could bring in more than $300 million, the chief executive of the Zimbabwe Tobacco Association, Mr Bert Barnard, said yesterday.

Western Europe was still the largest market, but took less than half the crop, while the Middle East, the second largest group of customers, was taking an increasing share.

"Tobacco is our largest single export, earning more than gold," Mr Barnard said in an interview.

"And the industry as a whole—farmers, packers, merchants, manufacturers and so on — directly employs more than 118 000 people.

"If we take an average of six people to a family that means more than 700 000 Zimbabweans rely directly on the crop and including all the support industry that figure probably rises to a million."

Of the money earned by Zimbabwe, about 55 percent went in local currency to the farmers while the rest was earned by merchants or spent on storage, transport and other facilities within the country.

The quota system for growers was cutting the stockpile, said Mr Barnard. At the beginning of the year 118 million kg was in stock. About 120 million kg had been moved last year.

In the last season the growers produced 67,5 million kg which, when prepared for storage, weighed about 52 million kg. This brought the year's stock to around 170 million kg.

Tobacco shipments were running at a higher level than last year and when the next season's crop was ready there should be around 50 million kg still in stock. This would be cut to single figures by the time the 1982/83 crop reached the floors.

"We need some stocks so we can dispose of tobacco at any time of the year." The ZTA planned to increase the crop by 10 percent a year. The new season's target was 96 million kg and, if all went well, that for 1982/83 would be around 105 million kg.

The 1979/80 season produced a record crop of 122,5 million kg.

Transport was not a serious problem for the industry. Being a high-value, low-bulk crop it was in a very different situation from maize. "The railways are obviously doing all they can and the tobacco industry isn't complaining."

There would be adequate coal stocks for the curing. "We need 22 000 tonnes of coal for this season's crop and the railways are up to schedule. There shouldn't be a problem as deliveries take place between the beginning of July and the beginning of March.

Mr Barnard had just returned from a conference of the International Tobacco Information Centre (Infotab) in Brussels. Representing the manufacturers and producers of Zimbabwe he was able to make useful contacts with other delegates at the 27-nation congress.

"We seem to have a bad Press overseas. People were astounded I was leaving my wife and family at home. They seemed to think civil war would break out any minute.

"I was really surprised at what they thought, and assured them there was peace in the country. In fact when I finished telling them what was going on they said we could do things that they couldn't do in their own cities.

"It is important in the tobacco industry for outsiders to know we can assure continuity of supply. We are at the mercy of world markets, as we export 96 percent of our crop.

"Every country's tobacco has its own particular flavour and if manufacturers are going to blend with Zimbabwe tobacco they want a continuous supply to ensure the flavour doesn't change."

WORK SPEEDS UP AFTER PM'S TOUR

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 24 Nov 81 p 10

[Text] BULAWAYO.

AS a result of the Prime Minister's tour of Matabeleland four weeks ago a number of projects seem to have been speeded up, especially in Binga.

Telephone interviews with district council chairmen in the province showed that the Prime Minister was not only an attentive listener to the people's grievances but was eager to see immediate and practical solutions to their problems.

Time and again the Prime Minister said the people had a right to demand, not to beg for, services from the Government. "This is your Government. You do not beg from us. You order us because we are at your service," Mr Mugabe told local authorities.

The executive officer in the Binga district council, Mr Aaron Bundu, said following requests to the Prime Minister on roads, schools and fishing camps, Mr Mugabe ordered the 11 fishing camps to open immediately.

Mr Bundu said the Prime Minister had ordered road construction units stationed in Tjolotjo to grade roads in Binga. "These have arrived now," he said in a jubilant voice.

On the issue of schools, Mr Bundu confirmed a Government day school would be built at Manjolo, while Kariangwe would have an upper-top school.

In Wankie the district council chairman, Mr A. N. Chiyasa, said the request for two upper-top schools at Jambezi and Wankie would receive attention when the director of education, Mr Tanyongana, went to Salisbury on Wednesday.

In Gwanda, the district council chairman, Mr Z. K. Sihwa, said the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance, Senator Enos Nkala, had assured him funds were available to reconstruct 75 schools.

MINISTER EXPLAINS NEW COURTS' ROLE

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 20 Nov 81 p 4

[Article by Maxwell Chivasa]

[Text] The Ministry of Justice and Constitutional Affairs aims to establish about 300 community courts and 1 500 village courts to create a uniform system of justice throughout Zimbabwe.

The minister, Senator Simbi Mubako, said in an interview, that the primary courts were not replacing travelling magistrates — only district commissioners' and chiefs' courts.

About 1 100 village courts and 50 community courts had been set up throughout the country.

The village courts are presided over by officers chosen from the people of the village, preferably elders who understand customary law.

Each court has two assessors. Both presiding officers (vakuru) and the assessors work part-time, but receive an allowance from the ministry.

"We give presiding officers only a general idea about how to try cases. They have been nominated by their own district councils and we do not want to impose anybody who might have been very unpopular during the war."

Village courts are empowered to try civil cases, whose fines do not exceed $200 but have no criminal jurisdiction.

The minister said about 400 more village courts were still to be established. During the past few days he had been touring Matabeleland and Victoria provinces, conducting seminars with the "vakuru".

Senator Mubako said people who were tried in village courts could appeal to the community courts through the appeal system that corrected and checked the fairness of the judgments. Soon the ministry hoped to introduce an inspectorate of three as a further check.

In the envisaged system, the community courts will monitor all the village courts around them. These courts are not limited in their jurisdiction to try civil cases dealing with customary law only but also have criminal jurisdiction and can impose a fine of up to $50.

Presiding officers in the community courts have been trained, unlike the chiefs and district commissioners who had other functions in politics and land administration.

Senator Mubako said the community court presiding officers (vatongi) followed a syllabus to understand the course of the law.

"It is important to have people to deal with justice only, like our magistrates. So we created a system of administering the African customary law by professional justices who had no other functions," he said.

The former system of district commissioners, chiefs and headmen had to change and give way to the new system of justice divorced from political administration.

They had become unpopular due to the change of circumstances and various "kangaroo" courts had flourished throughout the country.

But, said the minister, kangaroo courts were unpopular with opposition parties, though popular with members of the ruling party.

"We could not continue with kangaroo courts in an independent state since these were party courts. You don't expect members of opposition parties to feel that justice is going to be done by a court presided over by the chairman of a ZANU(PF) branch.

"There were many complaints from the minority parties that they were not receiving justice, and the Government felt it important to have an entirely new system because of the political realities of the time," he said.

Presiding officers had acquired sufficient knowledge of the law, particularly customary law, and had developed the skill to decide cases or settle disputes, Senator Mubako said.

Decision-making processes were taught in practical classes where the trainees sat in on court proceedings and wrote a reasoned judgment.

Trainees took part in mock trials, some presenting cases, while others sat as presiding officers, passing judgment.

Since the presiding officers' duties included monitoring the surrounding village courts, the trainees tackled appeals from the village courts, and prepared appeals to the magistrates' courts.

The presiding officers' training course at Domboshawa is headed by Mr S. A. Brobbey and Mr A. A. Foster, both from Ghana. Helping them are university lecturers and Government officials.

The first presiding officers were appointed in June when the district commissioners were still in office and they worked jointly for a month. Since then they had been trying cases on their own.

Senator Mubako said: "There was a smooth change-over and we are all very satisfied. The people all over the country are satisfied with the tremendous improvement and we've had good reports from lawyers and the laymen too."

REPORT ON VOTING AREAS PRESENTED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 21 Nov 81 p 1

[Text] THE four-member Delimitation Commission presented its report on the 80 provisional parliamentary common-roll constituencies to President Banana yesterday.

Zimbabwe had been divided into 80 provisional constituencies so that people can register as voters.

Mr Justice Fieldsend, who presented the report at State House, said it would not be used in its present form "for any other purpose".

Voters had two years to register. Then a second commission would be appointed which would alter or adjust the boundaries of any constituencies if there was an imbalance.

The next general election, which under the Constitution should be before April 1985, would be held on the rulings of the second delimitation.

"The need for these two steps is that there is not sufficient information available as to the distribution of voters over the country to allow a sufficiently accurate delimitation to be completed now," the Chief Justice said.

Once voters had registered it would not be difficult to adjust the scheme.

The first delimitation commission took five months to complete its report.

The report had "as far as possible" taken into account physical features and community interest and tried to ensure an equal number of voters in each constituency.

It tried to make registering easy and speedy and had kept to existing administrative boundaries when able to.

BALANCE

"In some cases we have had to merge districts or parts of districts with others to obtain a fair balance," the report said.

The commission had to assess the population in each constituency and relied on a map of the 1969 census, information from Zimcord and estimates from the Department of Census and Statistics.

It also used figures from the election and recent city council elections.

When the commissioners started their work, they kept to provincial boundaries but found this more difficult as they progressed.

"We consider that to treat the provinces as separate entities would tend to be divisive rather than unifying."

Some people might have been offended to see a district taken away from a province and added to another, or they might think one province was being favoured over another.

About 37 967 voters should register for each constituency, with about 3 038 100 eligible voters in the whole country.

Salisbury district was divided into six provisional constituencies; one almost wholly rural; three partially rural and two urban.

There are also two provisional constituencies for Chitungwiza.

DIVIDED

The district of Bulawayo has been divided into three provisional constituencies, all containing both urban and rural areas.

The cities of Gwelo and Umtali have one constituency each with other constituencies covering the rural areas of Gwelo and Umtali districts.

The other three members of the commission were: Mr David Zamchiya, a former Minister of Health under the Muzorewa administration, Mr Douglas Sagonda, principal of Nyatsime College and Sister Mary Aquina, a university lecturer and member of the Riddell Commission.

BANK COVER NEEDED FOR EXITING VEHICLES

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 27 Nov 81 p 1

[Text] PEOPLE who take their cars out of Zimbabwe on holiday will from December 28 have to produce bank guarantees, relating to the age of the vehicle, of up to $6 000.

Restrictions on the export of cars by emigrants were introduced on May 18, but the Minister of Finance, Senator Enos Nkala, said yesterday these laws had been abused

Emigrants were permitted to take one vehicle per family provided that it was four years old and had been owned for at least two.

"Regrettably, some people have felt it necessary to avoid these restrictions by ostensibly taking their cars out of the country on a temporary basis, for example for holiday purposes, and not bringing them back," said the minister.

As from December 28 new restrictions would apply to the temporary export of vehicles falling into tax class 1 of the Vehicle Registration and Licensing Act, for example, light motor vehicles, motor cars, vanettes, panel vans and small pick-ups, which were less than four years old.

BREAKDOWN

Senator Nkala gave this breakdown of bank guarantees related to the age of the vehicle:

Under one year old — $6 000.

One year and less than two years old—$5 000.

Two years and less than three years — $4 000.

Three years and less than four years—$3 000.

Banks were to issue guarantees to travellers subject to satisfactory security being lodged with them and against payment of a commission.

Whether that security was in cash or securities, or the result of arrangements with employers on behalf of employees, would be a matter for negotiation.

Special arrangements had been made for members of the public service and the uniformed forces, the minister added.

At border posts, vehicle registration books and the bank guarantee had to be presented to customs officials. The guarantee would be stamped on exit and re-entry, after which it had to be returned to the issuing bank.

If the guarantee was not discharged the sum involved would be paid by the bank to Government.

Responding to the minister's announcement, the Confederation of Zimbabwe Industries said that it could not support any further restrictive legislation.

The CZI had discussed with ministry officials the possibility of guarantees being issued through financial agencies as well as commercial banks, but its proposal had been rejected.

The chief executive, Mr Tony Read, said many people would find establishing the necessary security inconvenient and the commission charged a further unexpected cost.

He hoped CZI members would follow the example set by the Government regarding agreements on behalf of their employees with commercial banks.

Commission on Older Cars

THE Minister of Finance, Senator Enos Nkala, announced yesterday that emigrants owning vehicles over eight years old may apply through their banks for authority to export them.

This easing of the current restrictions on the export of cars and other light vehicles also applied to handicapped persons with specially adapted cars and those vehicles imported by new immigrants or those under a "no currency involved" licence which had not changed ownership.

POST AND TELEPHONE RATES TO INCREASE

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 27 Nov 81 p 1

[Text] NEW post and telephone charges gazetted today raise the fee for a local letter from 5c to 9c and the cost of a local phone call from 4c to 6c.

In a statement last night, the Minister of Roads and Road Traffic, Posts and Telecommunications, Mr Daniel Ngwenya, said the Posts and Telecommunications Corporation was running at a loss on the present tariff rates.

"It is not the Government's policy to subsidise the postal and telecommunication services, and the Government is firmly resolved to improve and expand services in the rural, urban and business areas.

"Therefore an increase in tariff rates is unavoidable. Regular small increases in rates are undesirable because of the need to print stamps and agree on international rates with other countries. Consequently a substantial increase now is essential."

Even with the increases, the postal services would continue to show a loss. But this, as was the case with most similar organisations, could be made up with telecommunications surpluses.

The PTC was about to embark on a $140 million, three-year capital investment programme. The corporation was under tremendous pressure to expand into the rural areas and to improve its services in other areas.

Rural telephone systems were damaged during the war and much of the equipment in the country was old and needed replacing.

TRANSPORTATION PROBLEMS TO CONTINUE

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 27 Nov 81 p 3

[Text] EVEN with the introduction of new locomotives, Zimbabwe's transport problems would not be resolved, Mr M. J. M. Coley of the Transport Operators' Association said yesterday.

Speaking at the ACCOZ/CZI seminar on transport and the SADCC in Salisbury, Mr Coley said the delivery of 60 new locomotives next year and the electrification of the railway line between Gwelo and Salisbury would help the situation in the long term.

But two major problems would still be the "tremendous staffing problems caused by mass migration", in the national railways, and the overhaul time for old equipment.

He appealed to the Government to improve the shortage of foreign currency.

The road transport industry had been called upon virtually to subsidise the railways in the movement of imports, exports and internal traffic which had been considered suitable for railing, he said.

"We are doing this with no more than a 20 percent increase in our national fleet capacity."

He said the transport industry was in the same position as the railways because they were working at maximum capacity with major breakdowns being a common occurrence.

"The majority of our experienced mechanics have left the country and in this regard the industry is faced with a major crisis."

He said it was regrettable that black Zimbabweans had not been trained, but the situation existed and would remain for the next five to seven years while training was undertaken.

The three truck assembly plants in Zimbabwe would produce many more trucks if the foreign currency was available, he said.

It was a great shock to the transport industry to learn there would be an introduction of German, Swedish and Italian vehicles.

"I am surprised that we have not learnt our lesson in this regard from Zambia who allowed a similar situation to develop and as a result today there are hundreds of good vehicles off the road because of the lack of foreign currency to import the spares."

He said the same situation could happen in Zimbabwe. — Ziana.

OFFICIAL PRAISES ROLE OF CHINESE WOMEN

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 27 Nov 81 p 6

[Text] THE Deputy Minister of Community Development and Women's Affairs, Dr Naomi Nhiwatiwa, says she was highly impressed by the role played by women in Chinese society during a recent two-week visit there.

She and a four-woman delegation went to China on an invitation from the All China Women's Federation, to visit some of the community projects there.

"The situation of women must change so that they are free enough to give the best of their abilities. This is one of the truths that is consistent with our political idiology.

"When people feel that they are being closed or locked within, they are certain to be lazy and not bother to learn to be efficient," Dr Nhiwatiwa said.

Women's rights had to be protected, she said and called for laws to protect those rights.

In China women worked hard and were dedicated to their work, whether it was digging gardens or sweeping. This was because their interests were recognised and efforts were made to promote their activities.

"We observed the manner in which the workers were treated, the role of women in these projects and the manner in which their interests were taken care of.

EFFICIENT

"We experienced this at all levels and the result is that they have very efficient, punctual and dedicated people because their needs are seen to," Dr Nhiwatiwa said.

She had seen a small tractor which she was going to include in her report. The tractor could pull carts and was capable of being used by Zimbabwean women in rural areas.

Dr Nhiwatiwa and her delegation had been impressed by the type of agriculture on communes, where work was constantly researched and evaluated in order to improve the quality of the output.

"We hope they can teach us something of their agricultural techniques. A small plot produces an unbelievable crop."

Her delegation had also seen some bio-gas plants being used and she said if the technique was to be implemented here it would need further research to simplify it or to train the rural people in its proper and efficient use.

FACILITIES

Saying that she had been impressed by the child-care facilities in China, Dr Nhiwatiwa said the report by her ministry on pre-schooling was almost completed.

"We had a conference recently which was attended by delegates from Kenya, Zambia, Malawi and Tanzania and we got a lot of ideas.

"All the research work has been put together and the report will be out early next year at the latest."

They had looked at the planning of pre-schools, their role, their structure, requirements and curriculum.

Once that was completed, work on training centres would start.

In China, she had seen a factory that had been started by six women but was now exporting its embroidery work to more than 60 countries. Dr Nhiwatiwa called for quality control in the work of the women engaged in craft work.

"We should encourage women to aim for the best, and once they know that they are going to sell their items they will begin to make quality products."

Her ministry was now discussing the proper methods of distribution and the establishment of a body that could coordinate and collect all the goods. The women would be paid when their items were collected.

FILLING STATION SUPPLIES REPLENISHED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 27 Nov 81 p 1

[Text] SALISBURY'S petrol shortage eased considerably yesterday as tankers moved around the city implementing a Government directive to boost supplies to filling stations.

Queues for petrol, which on Wednesday left people waiting for up to three hours for $5 of fuel, were still in evidence around the city, but on a considerably reduced scale.

Mr Cecil Gowie, president of the Zimbabwe Motor Trade Association, said the problem was basically logistical, with a limited number of fuel tankers trying to deliver all over the city.

There was "a bit of a run" on stations that had just received fuel, but generally the situation had improved tremendously, he said.

Mr Gowie confirmed that the cut in the allocation from the oil companies to filling stations had been decreased from 25 percent of regular supplies to approximately 10 percent which means that petrol retailers are now receiving 90 percent of their quotas, instead of only 75 percent.

Mr Gowie also confirmed that the MTA, the oil companies and the Ministry of Industry and Energy Development held detailed discussions yesterday, particularly over the petrol supply position for next month.

He said he believed a statement was likely to be given in the near future by the Government, which was now considering all aspects of the situation.

The petrol supply available to motorists in the capital was now "quite reasonable", largely as a result of the voluntary rationing system introduced by filling stations, which had done "remarkably well" to improve the situation, said Mr Gowie.

Mr Gowie cautioned motorists against "panic buying" and hoarding, which he said had not been at all necessary during the past weeks.

"Had people adjusted to the situation of a slight reduction in availability, there would have been no necessity for the tremendous queues which formed."

In return for the public's co-operation, filling stations would do their utmost to ensure that sufficient petrol was distributed, he said.—Ziana.

NHONGO EXPRESSES CONFIDENCE IN ARMY INTEGRATION

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 21 Nov 81 p 1

[Text] SOME units of the Zimbabwe National Army still have to be fully integrated, but this will not be very difficult, the commander of the army, Lieutenant-General Rex Nhongo, said yesterday.

Addressing troops of the 2:1 battalion, General Nhongo said there was no longer any ZIPRA or ZANLA. Everyone who wanted to be in the army was now in.

"Already some units have brought together former ZIPRA, ZANLA and former army. But some units have to be integrated.

"The experts are still looking at the ways of going about it. Early next year we should start to fully integrate the units which have not integrated but it is not as difficult as the initial p' 'e."

Problems of transport and pay were being sorted out and all pay dimcultie should be solved nex month.

He told the battalion that soldiers had to be friends of the people. They were not allowed to drink in public in uniform no could they travel in ser vice dress.

If they were drinking in a bar and a fight broke out, and a uniformed man struck someone, people would say the national army was hitting people.

He would have no sympathy for soldiers who were arrested when misbehaving. "A soldier who doesn't love the people in his heart isn't a good soldier."

Soldiers should be proud of their skills and training.

The general was speaking at Ellanda Barracks north of Salisbury where the 2:1 battalion is based. It was the first infantry unit to finish second-phase training and was regarded as operational, an army spokesman said.

The commanding officer, Lieutenant-Colonel Smile Madubeko, said training would continue and he hoped to take his men out on battalion and brigade exercises for more intensive combat drills.

General Nhongo said that just two weeks ago he had reviewed the passing-out parade of the last integrated battalion. Now he was watching the first battalion to be integrated pass out of advanced training. He ordered the men to continue to progress.

The commander of 2 Brigade, Brigadier Ian Stansfield, said the demobilisation exercise would have little effect on 2:1 as men would be posted from other, newer battalions to the unit to fill any gaps.

"High number battalions will be disbanded eventually and their remaining men sent to 2:1, 2:2 and 2:3."

On parade were 350 men and 22 officers. In his report to General Nhongo, Colonel Madubeko said 120 men and three officers were on border patrol. The band of the Corps of Signals also paraded.

AIR FORCE TO GET FIRST BLACK PILOT

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 24 Nov 81 p 1

[Text] THE Air Force of Zimbabwe will have its first black pilot on December 11, an air force spokesman said yesterday.

Answering questions about the absence of black pilots involved in the Air Force '81 Show in Salisbury last month, "despite the fact that the air force is supposed to be non-racial", the spokesman said: "It must be acknowledged that the show demonstrated a high degree of skill and professionalism, a situation which cannot be achieved overnight."

He said there was a higher percentage of blacks in all branches of the air force, except among the administration staff, pilots and technicians.

"With regard to training pilots and technicians, a very substantial effort has been made to recruit and train black Zimbabweans and to accommodate those who have received a modicum of training outside the country," he said.

NO SHORT-CUT

"There is no short-cut to producing a professional military pilot or skilled technician. It takes a full two years for a pilot to be trained and five years for a technician to become qualified.

"The first black recruits to train as pilots were inducted into the air force in 1980, as pilots of No. 37 pilot training course. The course consisted of five white and six black cadets.

"Four whites and five blacks have been suspended for failing to reach the required standards. The remaining two members, one white and one black, will qualify as pilots on December 11.

"A number of other students, all black, are also undergoing pilot training. These men are experiencing difficulty as they do not have the required academic background to undertake flying training.

"Every effort is being made to bring these men to the required standard," said the spokesman.

"In the technical trades 57 percent of the men undergoing training are black.

"The air force, of necessity, has to demand a high degree of professionalism from its pilots and technicians. A mistake can be costly and can result in the possible loss of life and very expensive machinery.

"To prevent this we can accept only the very highest standards. This is not just a cliche to exclude blacks from the force, but it is the very tenet of our operational effectiveness."

PRESIDENT ON DECENTRALIZATION OF PRISONS

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 20 Nov 81 p 4

[Text] DECENTRALISATION of prisons will mean the rehabilitation of prisoners without creating a drain on the country's resources, President Banana said yesterday.

Opening a new $2 million prison complex at Wha Wha, Gwelo, President Banana said the imprisonment of offenders in urban areas exposed them to public curiosity which would only make them more bitter and hostile to society and the prison system.

Rural prisons were more rehabilitative because they housed convicts in more relaxed country surroundings, and could teach them useful skills ranging from market gardening to building and carpentry.

"What this amounts to is that the image of prisoners' hard labour so often portrayed in cartoons, that of breaking rocks and sewing mailbags, has no place in the new Zimbabwe."

And the convicts could contribute to their upkeep through productive work, eventually producing a surplus for the benefit of society.

While it was important for prisoners to be housed properly and made productive and rehabilitated, prisons should not be regarded as holiday camps.

"It must be made equally clear to him (the prisoner) that he can be forgiven for his offences provided he earns such forgiveness by contributing to society and refraining from the commission of further offences."

President Banana commended the prison service on the implementation of its new integrated rank structure, and said he was satisfied with the progress being made in the unification of prisoners' conditions.

The opening of the new prison would enable the old Wha Wha complex to be used as a young offenders' institution.

"This will undoubtedly assist in keeping first offenders separate from hardened criminals, and thus avoid the contamination of persons who have been sent to prison for the first time."

The President was accompanied by the Mayor of Gwelo, Councillor Patrick Kombayi; the Deputy Mayor, Councillor M. C. Chipandambira; the chairman of the finance committee, Mr A. C. Chipamaunga; and the Town Clerk, Mr Alan Robinson.

The President mentioned that at one time, he, like many others present at the ceremony had been incarcerated in Wha Wha prison.

AGRICULTURE TO BECOME COMPULSORY SCHOOL SUBJECT

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 23 Nov 81 p 1

[Text] AGRICULTURE will soon become a compulsory, examinable school subject to prepare pupils to make a living from the land, the Deputy Minister of Education and Culture, Senator Joseph Culverwell said yesterday.

Speaking at Marist Brothers Secondary School, Dett, during a prize-giving ceremony, Senator Culverwell stressed the need for agricultural education while there was still "plenty of good agricultural land to be developed, and many school leavers cannot find jobs in the city".

Clarifying the Government's policy of "education with production", he told the gathering that he was not "advocating a return to the school plot or gardening or handiwork activities of the past".

"What I mean by education with production is the production of marketable goods or produce on a large scale at school level."

He added that education with production should not be confined to agriculture.

"There is no reason why schools should not produce their own bread, milk, uniforms, paper products, or build their own classrooms.

"Such activities could teach children that wealth comes from labour.

"The young must be taught that mental work is inseparable from manual work, and that to continue to separate the two is to continue Zimbabwe's mental colonisation."

The deputy minister stressed the importance of discipline and criticised the recent teachers strike as showing a lack of discipline.

"Their action represented an attitude of mind whose valued judgment was upside down. Money had become more important than children. Individual interests had been put above those of the nation.

"Such an attitude was more mercenary than that of a hired soldier, especially when my ministry was busy trying to work out ways and means of removing the salary anomalies which we inherited from previous administrations."

He said that until teachers were a "disciplined group" they would remain "professionally unproductive".

He told teachers to raise their grievances through the proper channels, and urged them to re-examine the ethics of their profession and place the interests of the child before their own.

Where necessary, teachers should improve their qualifications to O level or university degree. — Herald Reporter-Ziana.

RESETTLEMENT OF JOMUPANI SQUATTERS DETAILED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 25 Nov 81 p 1

[Text] The Deputy Minister of Lands, Resettlement and Rural Development, Mr Moven Mahachi, told squatters in Jomupani yesterday not to invite more relatives and friends into the area now that the Government has committed itself to resettlement there.

Addressing a meeting attended by more than 800 people about 70 km north-west of Gatooma, Mr Mahachi said the intensive resettlement scheme to be launched in the area was not intended to turn it into another overcrowded communal land.

The programme took into account the need for the Government to undertake the initial development before people moved into that area.

About 3 000 people were living in the Jomupani area, but the Government planned to resettle only 250 families on three farms--Long Plam, Grandur and Everglades--which are next to the Hartley Parks and Wildlife land.

The proposed number of families--504--was reduced because of the water supply. So far, five villages had been completed by the plot demarcation team and people would be moved into these soon.

Twelve boreholes would be dug and fitted, and seven kip tanks constructed when the resettlement programme was completed.

A spokesman for the squatters, Mr Phainos Mujuri, appealed to the deputy minister to allow makeshift grocery shops in the area to continue operating. Police had ordered them to close in September and people had to travel to Gatooma to get essential foodstuffs.

Mr Mahachi corrected Press reports which said that resettled people were not allowed to bring cattle into the resettled area.

"People will be allowed to bring their cattle when there are ample water supplies. We are afraid that your cattle will die of thirst as there is little water," he said.

SIX HUNDRED FAMILIES TO BE SETTLED

Salisbury THE HERALD in English 25 Nov 81 p 5

[Text] SIX hundred squatter families from the Karoi district have qualified for resettlement, the local resettlement officer, Mr Virimai Mutasa, said yesterday.

He said that last week he issued certificates from his ministry to 250 families squatting at Kasimure farm, near Karoi.

Mr Mutasa said the Kasimure squatters who have qualified will be moved to a farm bought by the Government. However, he would not disclose the farm's location at this stage.

The squatters at Kasimure have come from all over the country, some as far as Mtoko and Sipolilo. More than 100 of the families are of Malawian, Zambian and Mozambican origin, most of whom have been made redundant by farmers.

WAGE

One Malawian who refused to be identified said: "I had to squat on this farm after my employer had fired me because he said he could not give me the minimum wage. Where would I have gone? Zimbabwe is now my home and I cannot go back to Malawi."

The resettlement officer, Mr Mutasa, yesterday began allocating land on Nyamakate farm, in the Karoi area, which has about 1 500 families squatting there. Each of the 350 who have qualified for resettlement, out of a total of 1 500, are to get 12,5 ha each.

FARMING

An irate squatter said that although the Government had decided to make it a co-operative farming area on its intensive farm system — with a separate village site, farming area and grazing area — the people thought it would be turned into a communal farming area as in nearby Urungwe.

The squatters had written a five-point resolution in which they stated that they did not want co-operatives; they wanted to choose their own grazing, farming and village site.

Indiscriminate squatting has hit Karoi over the last few months. Some genuine squatters are people who have been dismissed from the farms and have nowhere else to go because they came into this country as migrant workers. But some people are from communal lands all over the country, who have heard that cheap land is available in Karoi.—ZIS.

BULAWAYO PAY BOOST--Bulawayo City Council has awarded its employees a pay rise which will cost $1 900 000 a year. It gives the lowest grades a 12 percent increase, the middle grades 10 percent and rises tapering down to 3 percent for heads and deputy heads of departments. The council already pays more than the minimum wage: $100 instead of $85, the acting Town Clerk, Mr Mike Ndubiwa said. There were 3 132 people in Grade One, and 1 031 in Grade Two. The pay rise, which takes effect from December 1, was approved by the council in committee on Wednesday. The previous pay rise was in April, when the lower grades got an increase of 14 percent and the other grades were given 8 percent. [Excerpt] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 20 Nov 81 p 5]

MINERS IN COURT--A total of 180 employees of the Lomagundi smelting and mining plant near here appeared in the Sinoia magistrate's court yesterday on a charge of contravening the Law and Order (Maintenance) Act by taking part in an illegal procession. All pleaded guilty and each was fined $80 (or 80 days) with half the sentence conditionally suspended for five years. The Zimbabwe Information Service reported that the procession took place yesterday morning after the men refused to board a covered lorry which was to take them from their homes at Alaska Mine to Angwa Mine, where they work. They wanted a bus.--Ziana. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 24 Nov 81 p 9]

GASOLINE LINES--Queues of a kilometre or longer were a common sight at garages throughout Salisbury yesterday. Many garages in the city centre and the suburbs were not open for petrol while others only opened for a few hours. Most motorists were getting $3 to $5 worth of petrol after waiting for at least 15 minutes. The queues formed early yesterday. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 24 Nov 81 p 9]

PETROL SELLERS--Salisbury's petrol retailers met last night to discuss the need for a Government-controlled petrol rationing system for motorists. They expect a firm

Government decision today to help avert continuing fuel shortages at garages. This emerged after a two-hour emergency meeting of the Mashonaland branch of the Motor Trade Association held behind closed doors at a Salisbury hotel. No statement was issued after the meeting. A MTA spokesman said later the retailers' grievances would be relayed to the Ministry of Industry and Energy Development this morning. Ministry officials did not attend. The spokesman said retailers complained about suffering the wrath of irate consumers over the continuous petrol shortage. "Retailers also feel the low fuel reserve stock is not a short-term problem," the spokesman said. Meanwhile, service stations continued to run out of their monthly quota of 75 percent of normal consumption. Queues of about 40 cars long were seen at many service stations which still had stocks. A Salisbury retailer said the supply could improve without hoarding or panic buying. The service station owner, who declined to be named, said: "Because our allocation has been limited to 75 percent, we are trying to control the sale of petrol so that our rations can last." GOVERNMENT LOAN FLOAT--The Government is to float a long-term loan of $40 million, paying 13 percent interest a year, to finance economic, social and administrative services in Zimbabwe. Subscription lists for $100 of the local registered stock, or multiples of $100, would open on December 8, at 9 am and close when the loan was fully subscribed or, at the latest, 11 am on December 11, a Reserve Bank statement said. The purchase price would be the face value of the stock and applications had to be accompanied by $10 for each $100 asked for. The loan would be redeemed at par on December 8, 2006. BORDER POST HOURS--Six customs posts on Zimbabwe's northern and eastern borders will now open from 6 am to 6 pm daily for tourist traffic, a Government statement said last night. The hours for clearing commercial traffic will remain at 8 am to 4 pm on Mondays to Fridays and 8 am till noon on Saturdays. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 27 Nov 81 p 1]

FUEL PANIC--Despite the recent panic over petrol supplies, diesel and petrol were now back to normal--"in fact, better than at any time since UDI"--the Minister of Agriculture, Senator Denis Norman, said yesterday. He told Norton farmers that the fuel panic was an example of what happened when people listened to rumours. Senator Norman urged commercial farmers to commit themselves to the future, despite the problems they faced and would continue to face. They should draw inspiration from the last season when great difficulties had been overcome, record crops produced and brought under cover in good time, and record prices paid to farmers. The external transport situation would soon start to improve and there was a ready market for Zimbabwean produce. A big aid deal could be forthcoming soon which could result in large quantities of maize being bought to help other developing countries. Senator Norman warned farmers that the money situation would become even tighter. Because of the foreign exchange position, there would be continuing problems in obtaining new equipment and spares. But both these situations would improve. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 27 Nov 81 p 4]

SECURITY UNIT--Salisbury City Council will borrow $395 245 to provide facilities and equipment for the enlarged municipal security unit which is taking on 750 ex-guerillas. The finance and development committee recommended the money be borrowed to buy furniture, equipment, transport, accommodation, communication equipment and an identity system. At its meeting last week the council agreed, with Councillors John Evans and Susan Colquhoun dissenting. Councillor Arthur Wilkins had disagreed in the committee but did not vote against the motion in the council. Councillor Evans said: "The city should not borrow money to employ people we don't need." The loan still has to be advertised. [Text][Salisbury THE HERALD in English 23 Nov 81 p 3]

CITY STATUS FOR CHITUNGWIZA--Chitungwiza yesterday became Zimbabwe's third largest municipality, after Salisbury and Bulawayo, and regulations were gazetted to cover the change in status from an urban council to a town council. Chitungwiza lies south of Salisbury, on the other bank of the Hunyani, and the two municipalities are separated by a 5 km pollution control belt. With a population of more than 300 000, it covers the suburban areas of St Mary's, Zengeza and Seke, as well as the Seke industrial zone. The existing urban councillors automatically become town councillors according to yesterday's regulations, and they will shortly have to elect one of their number as the first mayor of the town. Unlike Salisbury, where are councillors are elected at a general elections, Chitungwiza has, and will continue to have, a system of rotational elections with some counsillors having to fight for their seats every year. The next election will be in August next year. In yesterday's regulations President Banana directed that existing valuation and voters' rolls should be kept and all by-laws, regulations, rules and orders would remain in force as if they had been made by the town council. The chairman of the old urban council, Councillor Robert Kambeu, promised early in April that he wanted to steer the town to municipal status. Although smaller than Salisbury and Bulawayo, Chitungwiza has more than twice the population of the city of Gwelo, the next largest municipality. PLOT UNCOVERED--Six people have been arrested in Bulawayo after police uncovered a "plot to endanger the security of the State", the Ministry of Home Affairs announced yesterday. The full text of the ministry's statement reads: "The Ministry of Home Affairs announced today that police investigations in Bulawayo have revealed a plot to endanger the security of the State. "A ministry spokesman said that during searches of premises and vehicles, a quantity of war materials, including firearms, ammunition, mines, explosives and detonators, were discovered. "Six whites, comprising four males and two females, have been arrested and are being held in custody in connection with this plot. "These arrests are not linked with the recent escape of the South African spy, Captain Gericke." [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 21 Nov 81 p 1]

SUSPECTED SPY ESCAPES--The Prime Minister, Mr Mugabe, last night declined to comment on the escape on Sunday night of the suspected South African spry, Captain Frank Gericke, who was being held for questioning. But he promised newsmen at Salisbury airport after his arrival from a tour of the Balkan states that he would spell out his views on the incident after being fully briefed by the Ministry of Home Affairs. "You will get my comment and it will be abundant comment in practical terms too," he said. Last night it was not immediately clear whether a meeting planned between Mr Richard Hove, the Minister of Home Affairs, and Mr Emmerson Munangagwa, in charge of state security, on developments relating to Captain Gericke's escape, had taken place. Captain Gericke, of the Zimbabwe National Army, escaped from police cells on Sunday night, apparently assisted by Detective Inspector Fred Varkevisser of the CID who, who his family, has also disappeared. RECORD MONTH FOR JOBS--The number of people employed in Zimbabwe in June, excluding self-employed and those on small-scale farms, rose to a record 1 048 000, according to the latest Government statistics. In March the figure was 1 019 000 and the increase of more than 2,8 percent was due to greater employment in commercial agriculture and manufacturing, the two largest sectors. The cost of living for the lower-income families rose 2,04 percent in the third quarter while that for the richer people rose 5,24 percent. The percentage rises for the first nine months was 10,78 for the poor and 15,06 for the rich. Transport costs rose dramatically for the rich and poor alike. In August 38 006 people visited Zimbabwe, the bulk of them--33 611--on holiday, and a total of 6 735 stayed for less than one night. More than 31 520 residents returned to Zimbabwe in the same month. The net loss through emigration was 1 269 in September with 1 625 people leaving and 356 immigrating. The net loss for the year is now 9 718 compared to 7 989 by the same time last year. HEALTH CHIEF--Salisbury City Council's health, housing and community services committee has recommended the deputy medical officer of health, Dr Lovemore Mbengeranwa as the successor to Dr Tony Davies, who has given notice to resign. The committee chairman, Councillor Tony Gara, said Dr Davies had given several reasons for resigning, among them his worry that the city's health services were deteriorating and that he did not have adequate powers to prevent this. "I don't really want to go into more detail. We on the committee are totally satisfied that Dr Mbengeranwa is highly competent and can sort out any problems. We wouldn't have recommended him otherwise," Councillor Gara said. Dr Davies's resignation was discussed at the meeting of the committee on Tuesday evening. Should the general purposes committee endorse the health committee recommendation and the council agree, then Dr Mbengeranwa will become the first black municipal department head in Salisbury. TRADE OFFICIALS POSTED--Six Zimbabwean trade representatives leave soon to take up positions at diplomatic missions in Lusaka, London and Brussels, a spokesman for the Ministry of Trade and Commerce announced yesterday. Mr Richard Galloway and Mr Mwariunesu Machona start work as trade commissioners in Lusaka on November 30. On December 9, Mr Alex Kububa and Mr Christopher Hawkins leave for Brussels, where Mr Hawkins will be the first secretary (economic) and Mr Kububa will be an economic counsellor. Mr Maxwell Rusike leaves for London on the same day and will be the senior trade commissioner at Zimbabwe House. Accompanying him will be trade commissioner Mr Charles Chitambo. ARMY WORKSHOP--Zimbabwe's present situation resembles the time after independence when "misguided individuals were hatching all sorts of plans", the Minister of State in the Prime Minister's Office, Mr Emmerson Munanyagwa, said last night. He was opening a $2,25 million army workship in Msasa, Salisbury. The Government had succeeded in stopping these people then and "the reason is that the people are behind us", he said. South Africa was "sowing new seeds of mistrust among Zimbabweans of all colours". The Msasa workship will employ about 500 men to repair and maintain all army vehicles in the Salisbury district. It has bays for 40 vehicles, and the commanding officer is Major Steve van Blerk. The complex is the first stage in a five-phase plan. Other buildings for spares, supplies and a depot to house army vehicles are to be built on the 162ha of land. Another army workship, at KG VI Barracks, will close and send its equipment to the new complex. [Excerpt] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 26 Nov 81 p 1]

BONN AID--West German aid will benefit the District Development Fund's road and bridge reconstruction programmes to the tune of $9,9 million in its current financial year. This money has been committed to Zimbabwe by the aid arm of the West German government for its 1981/2 infrastructural reconstruction and development. Last year's aid was for water supplies as well as roads and bridges. This year, the Norwegians have the water protfolio. DDF management last week gave two German aid officials a guided tour of their peojects in the Lowveld and Matabeleland and showed them just how aid money was being spent. Visits of this nature are made regularly by representatives of donor countries and agencies to check on reconstruction progress. Meanwhile, preparatory work on the DDF's Hunyani Skills Centre site is scheduled to begin at the end of this week. Training manager Mr Hamish Harvey is however concerned that overdue rains will delay construction of the $500 000 centre. [Text] [Salisbury BUSINESS HERALD in English 26 Nov 81 p 1]

MUNICH FAIR--A delegation of four Zimbabwean representatives left for Munich, West Germany, on Monday to attend the weeklong Home and Craft Trade Fair, starting on Saturday. Members of the delegation were from the Ministry of Trade and Commerce and from Gallery Africa and Zimbabwe Weavers and Craft. The Zimbabwean participants will exhibit leatherwork, paintings, soap stones, ivory, tableclothes, wooden sculptures, baskets and crochet. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 25 Nov 81 p 3]

ACP TALKS--The joint committee of the consultative assemblies of the European parliament and the African, Caribbean and Pacific (ACP) states will hold a four-day conference in Salisbury in February next year. This will be the second such meeting in Africa. The first was held in Freetown, Sierra Leone, in February this year. At the conference, parliamentarians of the European parliament and ACP countries as well as ambassadors of ACP countries in Brussels will review implementation of the Lome Convention. They will also look at problems faced by EEC and ACP countries and a series of resolutions on various topics, including Southern Africa, will be adopted. Zimbabwe's Ambassador to Belgium, Mr Frederick Blumeris, said the conference was very important because the European parliament was acquiring an increasingly executive role. The parliament now had veto powers over the EEC budget, and had therefore become one of the more important institutions of the community as far as Third World countries were concerned. CO-OP COMPLEX--Marandellas. The Minister of Agriculture, Senator Denis Norman, yesterday opened the $190 000 John Rutherford complex of the Mashonaland Farmers' Co-op here. Agriculture, he said, was Zimbabwe's backbone and small-scale farmers had to unite to make the country prosperous. Farmers had to do their level best to stay on the land. The chairman of the Mashonaland Farmers' Co-op, Mr Eric Robinson, said the complex was named after Mr Rutherford because of his services to the organisation. FURNITURE EXPORT CURB EASED--Emigrants may now export furniture which is more than four years old, Senator Nkala announced yesterday. Senator Nkala said: "Since I introduced restrictions on the export of furniture by emigrants, I have received many representations both on grounds of hardship and of the sentimental value people attach to their furniture. "I have, therefore, reviewed this matter and have decided that with immediate effect emigrants may export those items of furniture which are over four years old." Senator Nkala said the onus of proof of the furniture's age lay with the emigrant, and had to be acceptable to the exchange control authorities. "Where there is any doubt whatsoever as to the age of an item of furniture, approval will not be granted. "In any event, approvals which are granted will be restricted to one of each item." ARMS CACHES DISCOVERED--Police and the army found two arms caches at the weekend--at Selukwe and in Bulawayo. The cache found in Selukwe was arms and ammunition probably left behind by auxiliary forces based at the Donga camp, a police spokesman said, and included grenades, rifles and loaded magazines. The cache was found close to Donga police station. More grenades and cartridges were later found at Timberlands, near the Railway Block mine in Selukwe. Policemen patrolling in Bulawayo's western areas on Sunday discovered another arms cache under a bridge in Pumula North. The find included one AK rifle, two RPD light machineguns, one RPK rifle and three RPG 7 rockets. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 24 Nov 81 p 10]

UNIONS TO MERGE--Two trade unions in engineering and metalwork merged at a meeting here on Sunday. A statement released after the meeting said the General Engineering and Metalworkers' Union and the Zimbabwe Motor Industry Workers' Union had merged in pursuance of the ZCTU ideal of one industry-one union. Delegates from Salisbury, Bulawayo, Gwelo, Fort Victoria and Que Que attended the meeting at which an interim committee was chosen to prepare a constitution for the new union which still has to be named. The merger meeting was addressed by Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions deputy secretary-general, Mr I. Nedziwe, and Mr Paul Kanyago, of the International Metalworkers' Federation of Africa which is based in Kenya. Mr Kanyago promised the new union support from the IMFA in workers' education and organisation. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 24 Nov 81 p 9]

HOME POWER PLANS--It will take another eight to 10 years to electrify all houses in Salisbury unless more staff can be recruited into the municipal electricity department, the city council was told at its last meeting. A report by the director of community services, Mr Bev Taylor, to the health, housing and community services committee said 16 133 municipal houses still had to be wired and connected. Almost 30 000 houses in the high density suburbs had a power supply. In the last financial year just 1 458 had been electrified, less than half the previous year's total, and 1 587 still had to be wired from the last programme. The present year's programme, for which $500 000 had been budgeted, had yet to be started. The committee was told the delays were caused by staff shortages and the priority given to new houses in Warren Park. If no new housing schemes were started it would take about five years with existing staff to electrify all houses. In practice, unless more staff could be recruited, it would take eight to 10 years to do the job. The committee drew the attention of the general purposes committee, which is responsible for staffing, to the delay. It was told by the city electrical engineer, Mr Philip Wrigley, that everything possible was being done to alleviate the problem. [Text] [Salisbury THE HERALD in English 23 Nov 81 p 1]

MALI PRESIDENT VISITS UPPER VOLTA, COMMENTS ON CHAD, SAHARA

AB201856 Ouagadougou Domestic Service in French 1300 GMT 20 Nov 81

[Text] The main item of this midday newscast is the arrival in our country of the Malian head of state. Gen Moussa Traore arrived in our capital this morning from Bamako accompanied by an important delegation. The authorities and people of Ouagadougou accorded the Malian head of state Gen Moussa Traore a resounding welcome. All along the route, large crowds turned out to see the presidential motorcade right up to the entrance of the presidential palace. At the airport, in fact, many people turned out to welcome the Malian delegation: state and administrative officials, diplomats and a very large group from the Malian community. After being welcomed by his cilleague Col Saye Zerbo, President Traore greeted the personalities of the Malian community before entering the VIP lounge where he was interviewed by the press. It was our colleague Ouatama Lambe who asked the first question.

[Begin recording] [Question] Mr President, welcome to our country. The national press would like to ask you a few questions and the first one is within which context should we view your visit to Upper Volta 10 days from the deadline fixed for the submission of the findings of the technical committee entrusted with making concrete proposals in connection with the border dispute?

[Answer] First of all, I should like to thank my brother and friend, President Saye Zerbo, the members of the Military Council as well as those of the government for the very warm and enthusiastic welcome extended to me and to the members of my delegation. One should not think that each time the head of state of Mali comes to Upper Volta it is to discuss border problems. Concerning border problems in fact, 10 days from the date on which the report is to be submitted, and before the meeting of the ministers of interior of Mali and Upper Volta, I will simply say that I cannot say anything on this matter since the report has not yet been submitted. The aim of this friendly visit to Ouagadougou is to exchange views. The most important aspect of this visit is to further strengthen friendly relations of cooperation existing between Upper Volta and Mali. This means that even if we discuss border issues, we are not discussing a conflict. There is no conflict between Upper Volta and Mali. It is the settlement of a border issue between Upper Volta and Mali.

[Question] Mr President, you took power exactly 13 years ago. Can you tell the Upper Voltan people today what you have achieved during this time, keeping in mind particularly that there are young men in the cabinet now ruling the country?

[Answer] Yes, in fact, the army took power in Mali 13 years ago. And it has also been 3 years since Mali returned to normal constitutional life. You are asking whether the present cabinet ruling in my country is homogeneous. I will answer positively. If this is not the case, we must reshuffle this cabinet to make it much more homogeneous in the supreme interest of both Mali and the people of Africa. This has to be so because we in Mali believe that we must work constantly and relentlessly within the framework of the African solidarity. I wish to stress "within the framework of the African solidarity," because this is one of my country's preoccupations. The road has been very long with so many obstacles, particularly the world economic situation, the energy crisis, the numerous effects of the drought--as you know, at the time when the army took power in Mali, the drought had been hitting the Sahel countries for several years already and this did not make the task easy for the soldiers. Today, I can state that, in any case, the army has tried its best in Mali. The balance-sheet is not entirely positive but it must be noted that a lot of progress has been made in Mali within the framework of economic and social development.

[Question] On your way back to Bamako the other day, after the Franco-African summit, you stated that important measures had been taken by France to see that Mali returns to the West African Monetary Union [UMOA]. Can you give us an idea about the measures which have been taken and can you anticipate when Mali will return to the UMOA?

[Answer] You know that, in 1967-1968, the governments of France and Mali signed some financial agreements under which France asked Mali to return to the UMOA and Mali agreed. Many years have passed and the governments of the two countries have agreed that Mali should return to the UMOA. Some measures were to be taken and have been taken to enable Mali to return to the UMOA. Most important were the question of the management of the Malian state sector, the implementation of Mali's budget and also the effect on Mali's external accounts. We have taken care of all these. Since France believes Mali should return to the UMOA, Mali sees no inconvenience in doing so. But there is a legal problem between Mali and France and it is up to France to decide if Mali will return to the UMOA or not.

[Question] Mr President, the inter-African peacekeeping force in Chad started arriving in Ndjamena some time ago. Can you tell us Mali's view on the mission of this inter-African force?

[Answer] In July 1980, at the Freetown summit, Mali was one of the rare countries that asked for the setting up of an inter-African force to intervene in Chad. We tried all avenues to ensure that these troops were sent to Chad as soon as possible and in order to avoid the irreparable. We also said that in case this inter-African force could not be sent, and in case it could not aid this force, the OAU should call on the United Nations to furnish it with logistical support. More than 1 year has passed. Now, after the withdrawal of the Libyan troops, we notice unfortunately that the forces of Hissein Habre have continued to fight in the interior of the country. If this inter-African force had arrived in time in Chad, we might not have witnessed the present situation in Chad. That is the view of the Malian Government on this issue.

[Question] Mr President, what is the opinion of the Malian authorities over the recent developments in the western Sahara situation, particularly following the Guelta Zemmur events? Also, has Mali changed its view on the issue of self-determination for the Saharan people?

[Answer] You know, one of the fundamental principles of the government of the Republic of Mali concerning self-determination is intangibility. So, from 1960, when we got our independence, to the present, we have always worked toward peace and international security. This peace can only be achieved through the self-determination of the people. So, Mali's stand has not changed on the issue of the western Sahara. The change in stand after the Guelta Zemmur event was because of our belief that as long as the western Sahara issue is not solved, there will be other incidents like that of Guelta Zemmur. This should not, however, compromise the decision of the continental organization on the western Sahara issue.

[Question] Mr President, the obsession of most Sahel countries is certainly the drought. [Words indistinct] the agricultural season. Can you tell us if the Malian people are optimistic.

[Answer] You are putting this question to the current chairman of the Inter-State Committee to Fight the Drought in the Sahel [CILSS] and I must now speak on behalf of the Sahel people. I am going to speak on behalf of these Sahel people now, and not on behalf of Mali. Generally speaking, if the wet season has been satisfactory, it is only in relation to previous years. Otherwise, I can say that the drought is still prevailing. For example, in Cape Verde, it rained only three times during this wet season. This is very serious. So, the CILSS will still need aid. I said in Rome, and repeated in Kuwait and in Taihif, that since we cannot help each other to fight the drought in the Sahel, the Sahel people will continue to ask for this aid, which will contribute to the fight against hunger in the world. OAU FORCE DOCUMENT TO BE SIGNED IN NAIROBI

[Text] Nairobi, 28 Nov (AFP)--Six African states will sign an agreement here today defining the role of the proposed interAfrican peacekeeping force in war-torn Chad, Organisation of African Unity (OAU) deputy secretary-general Peter Onu said here Friday.

The agreement will set a timetable for deployment of the force and create an observer group of six other African countries, chaired by Kenya. he said.

News of the agreement came only a few hours after a first contingent of Senegalese troops flew into Chad in readiness for the setting up of the peace force. Some 700 Zairean soldiers are already there. Nigeria has 2,000 troops on standby to fly to Chad but has been waiting for the outcome of the Nairobi conference.

The Nairobi meeting was intended as a meeting of the leaders of the six states who have agreed to make up the peace force, plus Chadian President Goukouni Oueddei. But only Mr Goukouni turned up and his fellow African leaders--of Nigeria, Senegal, Zaire, Benin and Togo--merely sent their foreign ministers or other officials. Guinea sent no-one.

The agreed timetable is:

--by December 2: establishment of the force headquarters in Ndjamena and division of Chad into operational zones.

--by the 10th: arrival of support troops for headquarters, while troops already in Chad are sent to the operational zones.

--by the 17th: all military contingents should have arrived in Chad and taken up their assigned positions.

The meeting adopted the wording of a resolution at the last OAU summit to define the force role as supporting Chad's interim Government of National Union (GUNT) in its efforts to maintain peace and security and not interfering in Chad's internal affairs.

Mr Onu dodged the tricky question of whether backing the Goukouni government might be seen as taking sides in the civil war which largely pits the president against the forces of former defense minister Hissene Habre.

The text of the agreement also followed the OAU resolution in saying the force should take over Chad's defence while the national army was being put together.

The Nairobi meeting reiterated an appeal to neighbouring countries to do nothing to upset the delicate situation by backing rebels.

On the cost of the operation, the meeting decided that OAU President Daniel arap Moi should once again ask world bodies to contribute, but friendly countries outside Africa should make bilateral arrangements with individual force members. France and the United States have already begun helping Mr Goukouni.

Apart from the action of Zaire, Senegal and soon Nigeria, Benin has said it will send troops. But Togo and Guinea have not yet confirmed they will do this, despite their initial pledge.

[Excerpt] The third quarter of the socialist competition plan, which since January has involved 163 enterprises of Luanda Province employing 36,764 workers, in this next to the last stage achieved 71 percent of a planned production. This was reported yesterday by the UNTA [National Union of Workers of Angola] provincial secretary Antonio Fundoes during a meeting at the 1 May movie theater.

In the next to the last stage which coincided with the demonstrations marking National Hero's Day in memory of the lamented Comrade President Agostinho Neto, 20 enterprises were highly rated, as well as 3,638 workers, of whom 77 were characterized outstanding; 215 days of voluntary work were registered during this period. Also, as had already been stated in the report on the first 6 months of the socialist competition plan, many enterprises, in total defiance, continued not sending their production plans to the UNTA socialist competition national department.

This state of affairs was one of the chief obstacles to the implementation of the main objectives that are at the origin of the socialist competition plans. As a matter of fact, according to Antonio Fundoes, in spite of the existing difficulties in supplies of water, electricity, raw materials and essential goods for the workers, it has been found that many enterprises show the same difficulties that were present at the beginning of the socialist competition. "Everyone," said the UNTA provincial secretary, "says that they have difficulties but nobody tells how to solve them!"

In view of the large number of enterprises (56) that failed to provide any type of information since the beginning of the socialist competition plan, Antonio Fundoes added that all this leads to the belief that there is a great lack of organization within these production units. "All this leads one to believe that the director does not have close communication with the trade union commission and vice versa and therefore the production assemblies, the vital base of socialist competition, are not being held."

Many enterprises, some of them of economic interest, have been disqualified because of insufficient data. In this last quarter, even though it is rather late to straighten out the present situation, the enterprises make a little effort to present their data before the end of the year to make the final report on the socialist competition. Antonio Fundoes also thought that enterprises in good standing and those that have fulfilled their duties should try to increase even more their production so as to have a good number of outstanding workers, to increase the number of vanguard workers.

SOUTH AFRICANS FIND NO COOPERATION IN INVADED AREAS

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 17 Oct 81 p 9

[Interview with Cuvelai Municipal Commissioner Clemente Kassima by Achille Lollo]

[Excerpt] Cuvelai, 29 September--We approached Cuvelai Municipal Commissioner Clemente Kassima to analyze the behavior of South Africans in that municipality and the reaction of the people. We asked him:

[Question] Clemente Kassima, this municipality was one of the first to be reached by the barbaric wave of hoodlums who, in this manner, cut the roads linking Ondjiva to the north of Cunene, where this municipality is located, namely the communes of Mupa, Evale and Anhanca. Therefore, when the armored vehicles column came, what was the reaction of the population?

[Answer] When the enemy arrived we had already been alerted because from the time of their approach near Evale, the people came to inform us. Once the South Africans occupied the area between Evale and Mupa, they tried to use the psychological weapon to distort information and to attract the population. However, in fact this attempt did not succeed because before the invasion we had alerted the population against such a maneuver.

We explained that the racists could appear to be peaceful especially to obtain military information about our defense forces,the ODP [People's Defense Organization] and our organizational and administrative structures.

As a matter of fact, the people of the Evale commune did not cooperate with the enemy. At Mupa also, when they entered the settlement, they did not find anyone. The same happened in various mukundas [agglomerations] in nearby areas. The racists did not find anyone because the entire population fled before they arrived.

[Question] We know that the racists occupied Mupa and that they installed a mobile command post there. During those days, what happened in the commune?

[Answer] They stayed 3 days in the commune waiting for some person to appear. Later they tried to advance toward the north, almost 15 km, but they had to go back because no one appeared.

So, they went toward Nehone, which they had previously surrounded to prevent a large portion of the population from fleeing.

In those days they opened all the doors of the warehouse of domestic trade, health, construction and cooperative by shooting the locks. Then they entered the warehouses, and began throwing everything on the floor breaking the glass bottles containing medicines, slashing the bags of corn and opening cans of milk with their rifle butts. Finally, if that were not enough, they trampled the plastic bags of biscuits with their boots. They did not leave anything undamaged that could be used!

The cattle were scattered in the underbrush, the pigs were decimated, and I do not know why they cut the throats of the chickens and strung their heads on a wire that was close to the commune headquarters.

They destroyed our hospital, damaged the DINAPROPE [National Cattle Products Distributing Company] and the domestic trade warehouses. These places were even machinegunned from helicopters. Now our ODP has recovered the cattle that the racists scattered and therefore did not have time to gather and take to the illegally occupied territory of Namibia.

The people have already returned to the communes, but continue on the alert because it is possible that the enemy will attack again. I can assure you that the racists, when they came here, were by themselves. They did not have anyone to contact, with whom to talk. They were alone.

[Question] To conclude, can you tell us how many troops the South Africans used to destroy the economic structures of Mupa, Evale and Cuvelai?

[Answer] Well, they entered Mupa with 80 AML/90 Ratel armored vehicles and special Hippo trucks. They were supported by 10 PUMA A/330 helicopters which landed on a Mupa soccer field. Later they received other reinforcements, and a column of 120 armored vehicles went to Nahone where there were other contingents of the Pretoria racist army.

Photo captions:

1. During the day we hid in the jungle because the South Africans were making several landings near villages (?agglomerations) but we were always in position of fighting watchfulness.

2. This is a war of movement, conducted with rapid movements and tactical operations, that the racist enemies cannot dominate or influence because they do not have popular support and they already know that sooner or later the historic lesson of 27 March 1976 will be repeated.

CRISIS SITUATION SEEN IN SOUTH AFRICA

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 11 Nov 81 p 12

[Article: "Crisis in the Values of Apartheid"]

[Excerpts] In spite of the fact that the massive South African information organs and their European partners are attempting to cover up the tense climate prevailing in the large cities of South Africa, the partisans of the apartheid regime can no longer hide the crisis situation in which they find themselves.

This is not an economic crisis, because the South African subsoil still provides the resources to maintain the structures of this artificial state, but everything leads us to believe that we are faced with a giant with clay feet.

Gold, diamonds, coal, etc., all these riches cannot provide ideological assurance and they do not guarantee the continuity of the principles on which the state was created.

South Africa is living at this time what sociologists have defined "a crisis of a society's existential values," and as a result, there are no solutions or alternatives for it without fundamental changes within society.

This crisis began when the ANC succeeded in organizing the spontaneous movement of the student and working masses of black, mulatto or Indian origin.

The success of the ANC guerrilla attacks is not an isolated case. On the contrary, we are confronted with a complex definition of a process of national liberation active in all its forms.

In South African reality, this is what has determined the crisis in the values of the Boer society, in its Calvinist perfectinism and British efficiency.

Reactions are palpable and unmistakable: in Boksburg, in the vicinity of Johannesburg, a businessman shot a black worker to death and wounded three more during a small demonstration against the exercrable living conditions to which black workers in South Africa are subjected.

If this incident is analyzed separately, one reaches the conclusion that such actions are no more than criminal events. However, including this fact in the analysis of the behavior of the racist classes toward the black majority, the question is obvious: "Does the violence practiced by state institutions not suffice any longer for private citizens, who have now started to shoot black demonstrators in the streets?"

Indeed, this is the kind of situation that sociologists such as Milton and Ferrarotti would like to analyze closer, since "violence coming from those who have promoted the establishment of political institutions based on violence is destined to die violently by the hand of those who were always subjected to such a regime and repressive social behavior."

At present, South Africans are attempting to disguise the crisis of apartheid by exporting to Angola, Namibia, Zambia and Mozambique the war they have failed to win within their own borders against the downtrodden black population that has now started to rebel.

If further proof is needed for this situation, it is enough to relate an event that typifies even more the situation of internal crisis affecting the South African regime. We are talking of the jailing of British newsman Steplan Barden--a resident of South Africa for 18 years (during which he worked for South African radio)--because he recorded a brief program on the workings of apartheid for Australian radio.

U.S. ACCUSED OF PERPETUATING 'BACKWARD' SOUTH AFRICAN REGIME

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 15 Nov 81 p 1

[Excerpts] The capital of the People's Republic of Angola has been the seat of an international conference of solidarity with peoples, youth and students of Southern Africa since 13 November. This conference is slated to end today.

The fact that this important forum has taken place in our country is proof of the innumerable efforts carried out by the Angolan people to help the national liberation movement in the southern part of the African continent through the legitimate representatives of the Namibian and South African peoples, the SWAPO and the ANC respectively, in order to overthrow the hideous system of apartheid.

This solidarity conference is taking place at a time when tensions are increasing in the world because of the bellicose and adventurist policy of the Reagan administration which persists in providing political, diplomatic and military support to the backward South African regime in open defiance of the international community.

It is because of this assistance that the racist South Africas launched the present large-scale invasion against the sovereign and independent territory of the People's Republic of Angola aimed at strangling the process of national reconstruction taking place in our country.

International imperialism alone is directly responsible for the present tense climate reigning in Southern Africa. Its intransigence in wishing to perpetuate the domination and exploitation of the peoples and riches of Namibia and South Africa complicates even further the peaceful solution of the Namibian problem.

The Africans' good will in peacefully solving this problem does not meet with the needed understanding by the racists and their allies in Washington. In their view, the solution of the Namibian problem is tied to the recognition of the puppet groups, those belonging to the so-called Turnhalle Democratic Alliance, tools of South Africa installed on the illegally occupied territory of Namibia, and not to the full implementation of resolution 435 of the UN Security Council, recognized by the international community as the sole means to guarantee the genuine independence of the Namibian people.

Mozambican chief of state Samora Machel stated on a given occasion that "Namibia is a thorn in the throat of humanity, for whose extraction there are various doctors and surgeons."

In this case, the Africans want its rapid extraction, while imperialists are only interested in its continued existence to the benefit of their strategic interests in Namibia and South Africa, in total disregard of the suffering of the respective peoples.

COMMENTS, SPECULATION ON OIL MINISTER'S DISMISSAL

London AFRICA CONFIDENTIAL in English No 23, 11 Nov 81 p 3

[Text]

The dismissal, at the end of October, of oil minister Jorge Morais has removed one of the great survivors from the Angolan government. It could be the sign for further shake-ups in the government before the annual MPLA party military parade on December 10. Morais, who acquired the nom de guerre of "Monty" in the MPLA struggle against the Portuguese before Angola's independence, had long been a likely target of any new drive against mesticos or appointees of the late President Agostinho Neto. But Morais' ability to swim with the tide always surprised his opponents. The good relations he cultivated with western oil companies while at the head of Angola's most important economic portfolio, only helped to weigh the balance against him in the end.

The official verdict was that Morais fell because he lost out to Herminio Escorcio, head of Angola's state oil concern Sonangol. Morais had accused Escorcio of acting in collusion with Gulf Oil Corporation (the US oil major which operates the Cabinda oil fields) in an official report he submitted to President José Eduardo dos Santos at the end of September. At least this is the story the disgraced minister himself leaked in a last-ditch attempt to save himself. The report, which the President received just before he set out on his three week trip to Libya, eastern Europe, France and North Korea, also accused Escorcio of malpractice over some of the price discounts offered by Sonangol over the past year. But the presidential decree sacking Morais said he had failed to prove his case. Dos Santos himself, it is noted, spent some time studying petroleum economics in Moscow.

The fight between Morais and Escorcio was an uneven one anyhow. Escorcio is a member of the MPLA central committee whereas Morais, perversely, owed all his prestige to his increasingly shaky position in the government. The last few reshuffles in Angola have shown that, just as in Mozambique, it is the party and not the government that counts — with the best men being taken out of the government to be promoted to control posts in the party apparatus. Those ministers such as Morais, who were not given seats on the central committee at last December's party congress, were in fact left as mere figureheads.

Morais, though, was still left with a coveted job and presided over one of the few sectors that had a success story to tell since indpendence. Until now the Angolans have been careful not to change the top faces in the oil industry in order not to alarm their western partners. The oil industry in Angola is anyway going through a mini-boom with more and more western companies beginning to drill for crude off the coast. The government had already signalled that it felt secure enough to take on the great sacred cow of Angolan oil, Cabinda Gulf Oil. The Angolans clearly want to bring Gulf more into line with other western operators.

On the surface, at least, Morais' departure is being made to look as though it is connected with a scandal. The authorities could certainly do with one. The party's campaign against "liberalism and disorganisation" is in full swing and the year of "discipline and control" is drawing to an end without all that much to show for it in terms of rolled heads. Precisely because of its wealth, the oil sector should be a prime area for party investigators. Since Sonangol is known as a state within a state, Escorcio's troubles may not be over yet. For instance, the Jornal de Angola, the official newspaper, carried an advertisement on August 9 that raised many smiles in Luanda. The gist of it was that of 572 mini cocktail bars imported by Sonangol, only 181 were found in the port of Luanda when the company's trucks went to pick them up. The newspapers appealed to the thieves to return the mini-bars, saying they had in fact been imported to help store medicines for the Angolan armed forces.

The decision to sack Morais was taken at an unannounced meeting of the party leadership in Luanda on October 29 and 30. A member of the powerful Van-Dunem clan, energy minister Pedro Van-Dunem, was given control of the oil portfolio until the appointment of a new minister. A vital question is who else did the party's "control commission" decide to get rid of at its two-day meeting? One head that sits uneasily seems to be that of internal trade minister, Gamaliel Martins. He could make a scapegoat for the increasing food and other shortages now being felt in the capital and regional capitals as supplies are switched to the south and centre of the country where Cuban and Angolan forces are reported to have launched a major new drive against Jonas Savimbi's teetering UNITA movement. The seaside villas one or two Angolan ministers are reported to have kept tucked away outside Lisbon for a rainy day, may soon come in handy ●

DOS SANTOS RETURNS; MEETING WITH DIOUF REPORTED

AB251232 Luanda Domestic Service in English 1130 GMT 25 Nov 81

[Text] The president of the MPLA-Workers' Party and of the People's Republic of Angola, Comrade Jose Eduardo Dos Santos, yesterday returned from the Republic of Cape Verde where he was on a friendly and working visit. The friendly talks held between the two respective delegations centered mainly on their bilateral relations and the international political situation including that of the African continent and in particular the situation in southern Africa.

During his stay in that country, the Angolan head of state met also his Senegalese counterpart, Abdou Diouf, and held talks of mutual concern with him. President Jose Eduardo Dos Santos and the president of Senegal, Abdou Diouf, also discussed other issues in connection with the bilateral relations and analyzed certain problems related to the prevailing situation in the African continent, in particular the situation in southern Africa.

After having manifested their firm wish to continue regular contacts at different possible levels, the two agreed to establish diplomatic relations between their two countries.

Speaking at a dinner given in his honor by the Cape Verdian head of state, President Jose Eduardo Dos Santos congratulated the Cape Verdian people for his visit to their country. During his speech he also focused on the sufferings and exploitation in the struggle against oppression and also matters of international policy.

Commenting on the Angolan late leader, Comrade Antonio Agostinho Neto, and the late leader of Cape Verde, Amilcar Cabral, Comrade Jose Eduardo Dos Santos said the two leaders are known to the world as giants of national liberal movements in Africa and were well known for their positions on the importance of national unity and international solidarity.

The Angolan head of state also pointed out the unexpected (?traditional) attempts by imperialism and NATO to block the advance of national liberation movements and the extent of socialism in the world. Having condemned the extreme position of intimidation by forces of imperialism in an attempt to stop the Angolan revolution, the Angolan head of state called on all African countries and in particular the Organization of African Unity to take strong measures in defending their position.

On the same issue Comrade Jose Eduardo Dos Santos also reiterated his country's solidarity with the Saharan people under their vanguard movement, the POLISARIO front. On the other hand, he said that a just solution to the Namibian problem was possible if the fundamental interests of the Namibian people were taken into consideration in accordance with the UN Security Council Resolution 435.

Meanwhile the Cape Verdian head of state, Aristides Pereira, said the relations which existed since the days of their struggle for independence by the two peoples deserve to be reinforced for progress and social justice. Having reiterated his people's solidarity for the just struggle for the peoples of southern Africa, President Aristides Pereida indicated that the struggle of the Angolan people constituted an example for the Cape Verdian people who every moment are determined to withstand enemies both internally and externally [words indistinct].

In Luanda, the Angolan head of state was received at the airport by Comrade Lucio Lara, member of the Politburo of the MPLA-Workers Party, and other high ranking officials of the party.

BRIEFS

FIRMS NATIONALIZED--The Angolan Government has announced the nationalization of 13 foreign enterprises, most of them Portuguese, operating in the country. These belong to various sectors of the national economy, namely the cereals, pasta, mining, copper, perfumes and cosmetics sectors. One of the firms, the COMBAL, a flour and pasta plant, was nationalized because of its importance to the national economy. These enterprises had been abandoned by their fleeing owners and were under the control of the Angolan state. [Text] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 18 Nov 81 p 10]

DOWNWARD REVISION--Angola will have to revise its economic plans because of the war against South Africa and counterrevolutionaries in the southern part of the country, while investing more in industry, Bento Ribeiro, Angolan minister of industry declared. In a televised speech, he said that the Angolan Government will give priority to industrial investments to produce essential goods for consumption from domestic raw materials. Ribeiro said that industrial investments will increase by one-third compared to last year. The war is requiring an ever-increasing share of the Angolan national income, 80 percent of which is derived from the sale of oil. The Angolan minister attributed special significance to the increase of productivity, mainly in state enterprises, which accounted for 58 percent of total industrial production. About 63 percent of Angolan industry is concentrated in Luanda, whose port is permanently busy. [Text] [Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 21 Nov 81 p 1]

USSR FISHING AGREEMENT--Talks between Angolan and Soviet delegations began in Luanda yesterday to analyze the degree of implementation of the decisions which were made at the fifth session of the Angolan-Soviet Commission for Fishing Cooperation. The meeting will discuss a number of issues with a view to solving some problems existing in this field. The meeting is being chaired by Emilio Guerra, the minister of fisheries, and Yuriy Bystrov, Soviet vice minister of the fish industry. Opening the meeting, Emilio Guerra said: We think that the periodical meetings that are dictated by the existing cooperation must not confine themselves only to analyzing the past. They must also cover new actions based on past experiences. In reply, Yuriy Bystrov said that the USSR had the plan for catching and delivering fish to Angola. The amount of fish delivered so far is estimated to be 63,000 tons. [Text] [EA271300 Luanda Domestic Service in Portuguese 0500 GMT 27 Nov 81]

KEREKOU RECEIVES FRENCH COOPERATION MINISTER

AB202230 Cotonou Domestic Service in French 1930 GMT 20 Nov 81

[Excerpts] The head of state, President Mathieu Kerekou, this morning received in audience in Cotonou Jean-Pierre Cot, French minister of cooperation and development. After this audience, Jean-Pierre Cot defined the purpose of his visit and the subjects which dominated the talks he had had with the head of state, Comrade Mathieu Kerekou, to our colleague Eugene Paddy?

[Begin Cot recording] President Kerekou greatly honored me by receiving me in audience despite the brevity of my visit to discuss relations between our two countries and beyond that to make a general survey of international problems, and particularly African problems. My visit comes within the framework of the invitation the president of the republic extended to me during his recent visit to Paris, where he visited his French counterpart. At that time, President Kerekou, president of the People's Republic of Benin, expressed his desire to strengthen cooperation between our two countries. During the talks he had with the French president, he clearly defined the targets for this cooperation, and it is the duty of the Ministry of Cooperation and Development to draw up the results, that is, to accelerate the projects in concrete terms and work out the mode of cooperation between France and Benin. After the talks I had this morning with by Beninese colleagues, President Kerekou has confirmed this desire.

We have realized that this increased cooperation between our two countries should not simply be verbal cooperation, but should and can be a more concrete cooperation which can make projects move in all fields. We also talked about how "Operation De Zoo"--the great rural development project in which France is involved in model farms and the mechanization of stockbreeding--can be brought together to make it a model project.

A second cooperation sector which is also decisive and in which agreement has almost been reached is the possibility of having in Benin a communication network worthy of a modern country. On this point, financial commitments concluded during this visit should be taken into consideration, because I think they have some significance. A total of 4.150 billion CFA francs will be contributed by France: that is .6 billion CFA francs from the Cooperation Fund, 2.15 billion CFA francs from the Central Fund for Economic Cooperation and a loan of 1.4 billion CFA francs guaranteed by the French Insurance Company for foreign trade. And it seems to me that these figures speak louder than rhetoric from French authorities, not only to help cooperation but also to translate such cooperation into financial deals and achievements in all fields.

What struck me most in our discussions was President Kerekou's broad survey of the whole situation on the African continent. With his special vision, there is no doubt of Benin's political commitment and also the territorial situation as well as great dose of the president's good sense. This vision of the African situation includes the conflicts, the means which a small country like Benin should have and the means which a non-African power like France should have to bring peace to the African continent.

Obviously, our talks centered mainly on Chad. And I would say that on this point, we shared common views. We shared completely similar views and hoped that the efforts to rebuild a united Chad, independent and sovereign with its territorial integrity intact, would be a success through supporting the OAU. NIGERIANS ARRESTED, FIREARMS CONFISCATED

Cotonou EHUZU in French 30 Oct 81 p 8

[Article by Hubert Akponipke: "Gun Runners of Nigerian Origin Turned over to Authorities in Lagos"]

[Text] Linked by blood, language, history, geography, and many other natural bonds extending over many centuries, the Federal Republic of Nigeria and the People's Republic of Benin are two countries doomed to live together.

Therefore, any dispute that might arise between these two sister countries can be settled only amicably, that is to say, without any hot blood or passion. This is what happened yesterday, Thursday, 29 October 1981, in the office of the minister of interior and public safety where, in the name of Benin authorities, Comrade Vincent Guezodje turned over to the ambassador of Nigeria three gun runners of Nigerian nationality.

We remember that, during its weekly meeting on Wednesday, 26 August 1981, the Permanent Committee of the National Executive Council, discussing these gun runners, in particular noted the following:

"The home inspections carried out as part of the investigation led to the discovery of crates containing hunting ammunition in the home of the famous Anthony Kekmezie Ife, manager of the Tonytex International establishment at Cotonou; he as a matter of fact was the middleman, getting a commission for rendering his service. At the same time, other arms and ammunition shipments were intercepted by the Mobile Customs Brigade in the Province of Zou when a Titan vehicle was carrying them to a border station heading toward Nigeria. The extremely detailed investigation made it possible to discover that this was the same network of Nigerian gun runners operating with the guilty complicity of certain personnel in the customs region command of the public security forces."

These three gun runners--Anthony Ekemezie Ife, Anthony Okeke, and Simon Chukwueke --were thus arrested by our Public Security Forces and were yesterday turned over to His Execellency Ambassador Abdoulaye Yaya, ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary of the Central Republic of Nigeria, during a brief ceremony presided over by the Benin minister of interior and public safety, Comrade Vincent Guezodje. Addressing the Nigerian diplomat on that occesion, the Benin minister said in substance: "Considering the various missions exchanged between our two countries, the Benin authorities have decided to approve your country's request, the request of the Federal Republic of Nigeria."

The Nigerian Ambassador, who spoke in turn, expressed his appreciation to the Benin authorities for their understanding in the steps which led to this expedition.

GUINEAN PAIGC 'ILLEGITIMATE'--The Council of Ministers of Cape Verde at a meeting yesterday in Praia declared that the attempt to continue a Guinean PAIGC is "illegitimate and a farce." The government's spokesman, Corsino Fortes, declared at the end of the meeting that to keep the acronym PAIGC is like "a transfer operation: a respected enterprise is received and customers are maintained with a promise for better services," and that the expulsion of Aristides Pereira from the PAIGC is a provocation that should in no way be ignored. The decision to keep the Guinean party with the same acronym is considered in Praia as proof that the Guinean leaders do not wish to reestablish normal relations with Cape Verde. Corsino Fortes also asked: "Could it be possible that Bissau is thinking of intervening in Cape Verde in order to legitimize the "C" of the Guinean party?" ECONOMY SAID TO BE IMPROVING SLIGHTLY

[Article by Bernard Degioanni: "Economy Is a Little Better"]

[Text] Bangui, November 11--Industrial and commercial activity in the Central African Republic is slowly increasing since the Armed Forces came to power two months ago.

Experts from the International Monetary Fund and the French Cooperation Ministry here are not yet talking of a recovery, but say the ailing economy is "slightly better" than it was in the last days of former President David Dacko.

Business is definitely under way again for most local industries: representatives here of French manufacturers of utility vehicles and mopeds saw sales rise by 50 per cent and 10 per cent respectively over the same period last year, while the country's only shoe manufacturer has sold 30 per cent more and taken on more labour.

Financial experts consider that it will need at least six months to see significant progress, however. They attribute the present small boom to a new climate of confidence under the military regime after years of corruption and popular discontent.

What is needed equally, the experts say, is the swift establishment of an economic programme based on agricultural production and a cut in public spending, two-thirds of which goes on state employees' wages.

The forced retirement of 1,000 of the country's 24,000 civil servants by next January answers one of the IMF requirements, and tax reductions to aid local industry should also help.

A crackdown on fraud by the new administration has also boosted consumer spending, which has been halted by the fear of looting as well as by inflation.

Ambitious Programme

Head of State General Andre Kolingba and his ruling Military Committee have an ambitious programme, involving improvement of the road network of this landlocked country and development of the rural and social sectors.

Some 1,800 kilometres (1,200 miles) of road are to be repaired by 1983 (notably the links with Cameroon and Chad), cotton production (estimated at 15,000 tons this season) is to be boosted and livestock raising improved.

Training of staff in the health and agriculture sectors is also to be stepped up under General Kolingba's programme, whose giant posters in all public places call stridently for "efficiency, work and sacrifice." (AFP)

LIBYA REPORTED TO HAVE CONTRIBUTED TO PEACE

London WEST AFRICA in English 2 Nov 81 pp 2555, 2557

[Article by Alex Rondos: "'Making' Peace in Chad"]

[Text]

WITHIN days of asking that an OAU-sponsored force should be created rapidly for Chad, the French government also said that it was sending arms to support President Goukhouni's transitional government. President Shagari announced during his return from the Cancun summit in Mexico that Nigeria was prepared to send troops to Chad if invited by the OAU. Senegal, Ivory Coast, and it has even been reported Cameroon, have also indicated they would be prepared to join in such a force. These developments occur during a period of strained relations between President Goukhouni and Col. Gaddafi. And as we go to press, the international media are filled with reports — apparently unfounded — of a coup attempt by the Chadian Foreign Minister Ahmat Acyl, allegedly supported by Libya.

On the evening of Wednesday, October 28, it was reported that a column of Acyl's troops had entered N'Djamena and were supported by Libyan armour. The following morning, AFP, reporting from N'Djamena, said that the city was quiet, there was no evidence of unusual Libyan activity and that President Goukhouni Weddeye was at his residence. Reports that the Libyan number two Major Jalloud had arrived in N'Djamena were confirmed, but the purpose of the visit was to attend one of the regular consultations (JANA claims) between the two governments. The visit might have prompted some unusual troop movements by local Libyan forces and those of the Forces Armées Populaires of the Transitional Government of National Unity. The ensuing tension has caused a number of the capital's population to flee across the river to Kousseri in Cameroon.

Ahmat Acyl has suffered military reverses in the last weeks when he took on the followers of the Minister of the Interior, Mahamat Abba Said. There have also been suggestions that the days of Acyl's close identification with Libya are over and that Tripoli was no longer intent on using him as they did in the past. This may have prompted Acyl into a last fling for the power he has always coveted so conspicuously.

If Libya were involved in any coup attempt, it would have been to forestall the well co-ordinated initiatives currently being undertaken by France, leading members of the OAU with the diplomatic support of Washington to assist President Goukhouni. The timing and extent of diplomatic activity over Chad suggests that tension was mounting there to a dangerous degree.

There is little doubt that Major Jalloud has used the occasion of his visit to exercise considerable pressure on President Goukhouni. In an interview on Chad radio on the morning of Thursday, October 29, Major Jalloud accused the French of interfering in the internal affairs of Chad and of trying to impose the inter-African peace-keeping force of the OAU.

The official French confirmation that "certain logistical support" was being given to the Transitional Government of National Unity was made on October 26.

The French government has now said that 25 tonnes of ammunition and Kalashnikov-style rifles have been sent from the military base at Bouar in the Central African Republic. Though the weapons are not part of the normal French military arsenal, Paris says that they were "seized" during recent actions in Chad and the Central African Republic.

Earlier at the Cancun summit France had appealed to the OAU to send an inter-African peacekeeping force into Chad. The US Secretary of State has already lent his support to the French appeal. Earlier last week, the French ambassador in Khartoum handed over a message to President Nimeiri from President Mitterrand in which the French leader explained France's policy adding that it had received the support of the United States.

The announcements were made at a time when it was reported in Paris that President Goukhouni was under pressure from Libya to take steps to implement a "merger" between the two countries. The Chadian President had also noted in an interview with reporters in N'Djamena that while his government welcomed the Libyan presence in Chad, there had been problems with the Chadian public. He said that Libyan troops had committed certain "errors", though he would not elaborate. Col. Gaddafi had announced shortly after the French appeal to the OAU that while the threat from Sudan remained he would not remove troops from Chad, and President Goukhouni has echoed those sentiments.

It is clear that the latest developments spearheaded by the French President are designed to give the Chadian leader the confidence with which to act independently should he feel under particular pressure from Libya. It should also give more substance to the GUNT, which is still not receiving sufficient aid from Libya to pay salaries for civil servants, let alone re-establish some of the basic infrastructure in the capital.

The next step centres on the prospects of the OAU peace-keeping force. President Moi of Kenya, the OAU Chairman, has indicated that he will travel to Libya to discuss the Chadian problem with Col. Gaddafi and the implementation of an OAU plan for the establishment of a peacekeeping force to replace Libyan troops. The offer from Nigeria is timely. However, the inclusion of Senegal (definitely) and Ivory Coast (reportedly) and possibly Cameroon (which has, however, constantly called for a UN involvement) makes for a peace-keeping force of decidedly contrasting ideological hue to that proposed almost two years ago composed of troops from Congo, Benin and Guinea. The OAU appears to be eager to promote the latest initiative. M. Edem Kodjo, the Secretary General of the OAU, has also said that he would agree with bilateral agreements between Chad and governments sending members of the peace-keeping force.

As to the financing of such a force, which some suggest might reach N'Djamena before the end of the year, the French Foreign Minister, M. Claude Cheysson, has recommended recourse to the United Nations. France appears ready to offer extensive logistical support and has already informed its air force to prepare to transfer Nigerian and Senegalese troops to Chad.

The implications of the French, Nigerian, Senegalese and OAU initiatives are far-reaching. France finds itself in the welcome position of being able to re-establish its presence in Chad decisively and uncontroversially; it will reap considerable goodwill for the disinterested and legalistic approach it has taken in supporting the GUNT in the last few months. The fact that at least one of Chad's neighbours, Nigeria, will participate in such a force, if it is created, puts paid to one of the early conditions of a settlement in Chad; namely that bordering countries must not be involved in such peace-keeping efforts. Libya, of course, had broken with that agreement and it now seems that the OAU will follow the Libyan pretext of a bilateral agreement to justify, legally, the Nigerian involvement.

It is interesting to observe that there has been no Chadian response to proposals about the composition of the peace-keeping force. And there are Chadians who wonder whether the latest OAU initiative might not be presented to President Goukhouni as a fait accompli whose primary motive is anti-Libyan. The US would not object to the composition of the force and it has even been reported that Algeria is prepared to support it diplomatically.

The success of the peace-keeping force would depend to a large extent on Sudanese reactions. It is argued that an OAU force in Chad would reduce the tension between Libya and Sudan. This is to presume that the OAU force would be deployed along the eastern frontier to separate Hissen Habre's Forces Armées du Nord and the GUNT troops — a large and costly operation. The hope must be therefore that Sudan would cease to support Habre on the condition that the Libyan threat is physically removed from that frontier. It is noteworthy that in the last few days the anti-Libyan propaganda has abated considerably. Indeed, the removal of a Libyan presence in Chad might serve to induce many of Habre's supporters to support the GUNT.

However, a greater dilemma remains. By coming into Chad in support of the GUNT, the Libyans have played a decisive role in bringing a semblance of peace to the country. They have already embarked on a training programme for the integration of the Chadian army; perhaps the most decisive element if the peaceful future of Chad is to be guaranteed. If Libya were to withdraw, would it still continue to train the army? The continuation of Libyan involvement with the Chadian armed forces would scarcely meet with the approval of some OAU members.

The Libyans, in other words, have a fulfilled role in Chad which the OAU force would have to continue. That is to say; not simply keeping opponents apart on the battlefield in the hope for some negotiated solution but rather in the active removal by military action of those elements in the country which oppose the government legally installed under the Lagos agreement of 1979. Those who support the OAU initiative will have to convince a number of Chadians that although the departure of Libya might be welcomed by a large majority, the peace to which Libya has undeniably contributed will be guaranteed for the future. Will the GUNT supporters favour a neutral peacekeeping force as against an apparently favourably partisan Libyan support?

The removal of the Libyans on its own will scarcely guarantee the success of the OAU force. If the departure of the Libyans serves to reconcile some opposition elements and their external backers to the GUNT and to solicit the type and scale of international assistance that will reconstruct the Chadian state and guarantee its future stability, than a great deal will have been achieved. Years of prevarication, neglect and exploitation of the conflict have made the task a daunting one.

MILITARY SITUATION IN EASTERN SECTION REPORTED

AB281455 Paris AFP in French 1420 GMT 28 Nov 81

[Report by AFP special envoy Jean Paul Rodrigue]

[Text] Ndjamena, 28 Nov (AFP)--Government authorities are completely silent about the situation prevailing in eastern Chad this weekend, but some evidence, although fragmentary, makes it possible to have a precise idea on the fighting going on in the region.

About 30 wounded people have been evacuated so far from Abeche and Oum Zoueir to Ati, central Chad, before being transported by DC-4 to Ndjamena.

Admitted to the capital's central hospital, they are mostly very young people; soldiers of the Revolutionary Democratic Council [CDR-pro-Libyan] of the Foreign Minister Ahamat Acyl or in the Integrated National Army [ANI] under training.

In spite of the surveillance on them, two of them told AFP how the town of Abeche (25,000 people) was attacked by Hissein Habre's FAN about 10 days ago. According to these accounts, part of the local population, apparently trained by Habre's supporters who had infiltrated into the town, attacked the garrison at the first bombings.

The FAN began to attack the airport, one of the wounded said. After two futile attempts, they returned to the garrison and succeeded in entering the town. Since we did not have heavy weapons, we prefered to withdraw, leaving them inside, and encircled the town.

The two men were not able to say what the situation was after they had been wounded. According to them, the FAN had old light armored vehicles, the AML type, and double-barreled 14.5mm canons.

Now, 10 days after these events, the situation in the east is described on Saturday as stationary by Chadian military sources. The authorities affirm that Abeche is controlled by government forces, but admit that the situation is difficult, because reinforcements of men and ammunition go daily through Ati, halfway between the capital and Abeche.

The ANI woefully lacks air transportation and logistic support, government circles continue to emphasize. In reality, the only operational DC-4 at the disposition of the army and which has made several roundtrips this week between Ndjamena on the one hand and Ati and Moundou (in the south) on the other hand was (?imobilized due to) a motor breakdown, it was learned from a military source.

In its latest issue, the weekly UNITE (government-owned) deplored the rebel infiltration in the east and wondered about the OAU's game.

The Libyans having left, wrote the paper, the inter-African peacekeeping troops should have automatically filled in the void. This has not been the case...instead it is the rebels--aided by Egypt and the Sudan--who are occupying the places that were vacant, UNITE stated bitterly.

LIBYAN PRESENCE OUTSIDE CAPITAL INTENDED TO LAST

Dakar AFRICA in French No 134, Oct 81 p 35

[Text] When he recently received Goukouni Oueddei at the Elysee, President Fracois Mitterrand of France undoubtedly wanted to legitimize the head of the Chadian National Union Government. The new Socialist administration, for whom the presence of the French Army in Chad was the absolute worst, hopes that its political support and increased economic aid will make the GUNT [Transition Government of National Union] less dependent on its embarrassing Libyan protector. But France's new policy in Chad runs the risk of having the opposite effect. By supporting Goukouni, Paris is indirectly endorsing the Libyans. In fact, a year after the defeat of Hissein Habre's Northern Armed Forces and his departure for exile, there is still no Chadian Government.

A bitter internal fight is taking place within the ranks of the government. Since April, Acyl Amat's supporters are killing or being killed by supporters of Goukouni and by those of Minister of Interior Mahamat Abba Said. Goukouni only has one faithful ally, Adoum Togoi, a military commander without troops. Most of his ministers have left Ndjamena. What is more, people in the president's entourage do not conceal the fact that the departure of the Libyans will result in the disappearance of the so-called Transition Government of National Union.

Ndjamena is a front where the Libyans want to keep a low profile. But outside Ndjamena, prefects and district chiefs are appointed by the Libyan command post of Sebha, completely disregarding Goukouni Oueddei. Outside Ndjamena, Libyan presence is intended to last. With Goukouni acting as an intermediary, Libya is asking the French to come to the Chadian capital to legitimize its presence elsewhere and to act as a screen that will attract a certain amount of international aid.

SUPPLIES FOR SENEGALESE TROOPS UNLOADED

AB271647 Paris AFP in French 1537 GMT 27 Nov 81

[Text] Ndjamena, 27 Nov (AFP)--On Friday at midday, a DC-3 aircraft of the Toulouse-based private air company Hemet Exploration unloaded a stock of ammunition, foodstuffs and medications at the Ndjamena airport. The items are for the Senegalese contingent of the Inter-African Peacekeeping Force.

Coming from Doula, Cameroon, the aircraft, which was chartered by the French Ministry of Cooperation, left immediately for Garoua, in northern Cameroon.

Supervising the unloading exercise was Colonel Lavabre, military attache to the French charge d'affaires in Chad, now based in Kousseri, Cameroon. He later presented the consignment composed of in particular several dozen cases of ammunition and hand grenades to Lt Col Thierno Ndiaye, who had just arrived in Ndjamena with a first unit of 150 Senegalese troops.

The Hemet explorer aircraft landed in Ndjamena for the first time 1 week ago. Reliable sources say Chadian authorities wanted the plane to carry out transport missions between the capital and the east of the country.

The same sources indicate that the three Frenchmen, members of the DC-3 crew, refused to carry out such missions in view of the insecurity prevailing in the east of the country.

It will be recalled that a DC-3 of the same company was shot down this year over Mozambique by a surface-to-air missile that had been mistakingly fired by the Mozambique army. All passengers and the crew members perished.

SPAIN ENCOURAGING COOPERATION OF OTHER WESTERN POWERS

Dakar AFRICA in French No 134 Oct 81 pp 43-45, 102

[Article by Attilio Gaudio: "Equatorial Guinea between Dispair and Hope"]

[Excerpts] Equatorial Guinea is again in the headlines following the discovery of "large" oil fields off the coast of Rio Muni where the Spanish company GEPSA [Guinean-Spanish Petroleum Company] is operating and where other foreign oil companies are rushing to request from President Teodoro Obiang Nguema licenses for prospection and exploitation. Even now there is talk of Equatorial Guinea becoming a member of the African club of oil producing countries following on the footsteps of neighboring Nigeria, Cameroon and Gabon.

A Tense Political Situation

Two years after the fall of the bloodthirsty tyrant Macias Nguema and after a reversal of alliances which led the new regime to call for the departure of the Soviets and to reopen Rio Muni and the island of Fernando Poo to the Spaniards and to other countries of the European Community, the social and political situation remains very tense with ethnic rivalries, fear and corruption thriving and with the refusal of members of the opposition to the former dictator to go back to their country.

It is difficult to put an ideological label on the new regime. The president continues to be surrounded by a Praetorian Guard of 300 Moroccans who are fast losing the support of the local army. His opponents are not too far wrong in saying that President Obiang allows himself to be manipulated by the military and by his tribe which, unfortunately, is the same as that of the despised former President Macias Nguema. The example more often mentioned to illustrate this is Obama Nsue Mangue, currently ambassador to Gabon. A summary of his career should have provided enough grounds to shoot him after merely establishing his identity. In July 1970, he was a member of the "Youth Marching with Macias" delegation to the Youth World Congress in New York and became notorious for the many rapes committed within his delegation. In 1975, when Nsue Micha was reassigned from the Secretariat of State for Security to the Directorate General of the Ministry of Justice, Obama Nsue was put in charge of national security as head of internal policy (B. Ochaga held that post shortly before he was assassinated) and as head of the PUNT [Workers' National Single Party] in Fernando Poo. He was as important in the civilian sphere as T. Nguema Mbasogo was in the military sphere.

In December 1976, during the affair of the high-ranking officials, Obama Nsue gained notoriety by killing many cadres arrested on orders from Teodoro Nguema Mbasogo, including Nsue Micha and Minister of People's Education Ochaga Ngomo who was also the permanent secretary of the PUNT. Obama Nsue Mangue, who always carried a stick, was nicknamed "mbato" (stick) in the country's local dialect. To be pointed out by "mbato' meant a death sentence. Obama Nsue was one of the chief torturers of the Macias Nguema regime.

Equatorial Guinean workers in Libreville are so afraid of meeting Obama and being subjected to who knows what kind of persecution that they do not even dare go to their embassy to comply with administrative formalities.

And what about Alejandro Evuna who was appointed to the post of ambassador to Madrid by President Obiang and had to be recalled in June 1981 after a scandal over hashish trafficking in which his wife was directly involved?

Two years ago, the people of Malabo trought that the nightmare of violence and abuses had come to an end but they are again shutting themselves up in their houses to defend their children and their property from those who should be protecting them.

The April Plot

The affair of the plot and the new repression, entirely fabricated by the government, have contributed to deteriorate the atmosphere. More than 150 people were arrested between 7 and 15 April. They were suspected of attempting to overthrow Colonel Obiang's regime. The "plot" was officially denounced on television by the head of state himself on 22 April. President Obiang thus wanted to justify in the eyes of world opinion his decision to throw many of his opponents into military confinement. But faced with the unexpected repercussions created by this wave of arrests and urged by his entourage to improve the public image of Equatorial Guinea, Colonel Obiang ordered shortly afterwards the release of most of those who had been imprisoned. Finally, he announced that there was going to be a public trial for the "plotters" who were still in prison and that this trial would be open to foreign journalists and jurists.

But while the hearings were actually open to the public, no foreign journalists or observers were invited to attend. The national press never mentioned the proceedings or the verdict passed by the military tribunal.

Also, no official explanation was given about the underlying causes of the "plot" against Colonel Obiang. We only know that after living in exile in Europe for several years, Moises Mba had gone back to Equatorial Guinea a few months ago and started "bribing" Equatorial Guinean officers and civil servants, apparently hoping to win their support in a future confrontation between the opposition and the current Malabo administration. Yet, observers based in the Equatorial Guinean capital are amazed that Mba, whose activities were well known, should have been able to leave the country "with complete impunity" shortly before the April wave of arrests.

Was this important man, after all, nothing but a pawn in a big show intended to remove dangerous enemies of the government? Or was there really a plot? Many questions remain unanswered after the mysterious trial in Malabo.

Colonel Obiang himself had to admit that, contrarily to what was reported in the international press, there had been no attempted coup. In fact, it was all an excuse used by the president to arrest several leaders who were too corrupt, because they belong to rival tribes. Back to prison went not only former opponents of the dictatorship but also men of the former regime accused of being involved in economic and political irregularities.

On 13 June, in Malabo, an Equatorial Guinean military tribunal passed one death sentence and several sentences of prison terms against the "April plotters" accused of attempting to overthrow the regime of Col Teodoro Obiang Nguema. A soldier, who was found guilty of being the intermediary in the distribution of funds to bribe members of the army and a number of civil servants in Equatorial Guinea, was sentenced to death and executed shortly after the sentence was passed.

Thirty other defendants, including Pedro Econg Andeme and Angel Masie Ntutumu, respectively minister of health and minister of interior in the government of the former dictator, Macias Nguema, were released. Others were severely beaten by the soldiers who are the same as before, while others were able to get out of the country.

The horrifying executions carried out on orders from Macias Nguema over a 10 year period, had left the opposition inside the country leaderless. It is estimated that 100,000 people fell victims of the repression.

Abroad, three political movements remain: a movement said to be "Marxist-Leninist" and based in Geneva, a socialist movement in Spain and a liberal nationalist movement in Nigeria.

A formerly Prosperous Colony

All in all, 150,000 Guineans are living abroad out of a population of 300,000 people. Yet it cannot be said that Spain had neglected its colony. All the urban and social infrastructures which can still be found in the islands or in the mainland were built during the Spanish period. Bata--now regrettably famous for the atrocities committed by Macias against the political prisoners held in his "model prison"--still retains the exotic appearance of an old capital city with its cathedral, its handsome school and administrative buildings, its well designed streets with attractive gardens. The only new building was the Panafrica Hotel built in 1970. It is now in dilapidated condition and the same applies to the presidential palace built for the dictator by the Societe Francaise de Dragages [French Dredging Company] also commissioned to carry out the port expansion project.

The pier in Bata can accommodate four 20,000-ton ships. Two other French firms, Chantiers de Bretagne and Alsthom, built a pumping station and storage tanks for hydrocarbons near the harbor.

The Bata Prison was called "the university" by the townspeople because so many intellectuals and administrative cadres were assassinated behind its walls which in the past had held many nationalists imprisoned by the Spaniards. In a frightening report on Equatorial Guinea, a Swiss UNESCO expert tells us that "this was the prison where an attempted coup had taken place in June 1974 and where most of the country's higher cadres were held in 1976 and some of them were killed at the time of the affair of the high-ranking officials." Many people were murdered in that prison on orders from its director, Salvador Ela Nseng, and his deputy, Francisco Edu. Lfogo Bokoi replaced Ela Nseng as director of the Bata Prison. He was executed in Santa Isabel along with Macias Nguema on 29 September 1979. Before being transferred to Santa Isabel, Macias Nguema was "housed" in the model Bata Prison for several days.

In 1978, the city had a population of some 15,000 inhabitants. After the coup of 3 August 1979 Bata was an empty city and people likened it to an African Phnom Penh. Florencio Maye Ela, the military governor of Bata, is the man who led the operation against Macias Nguema's pockets of resistance to make him stand trial for "crimes against mankind." When Maye Ela, nephew of Macias Nguema and commander of the Navy, was promoted to the post of first vice president of the republic alongside with his cousin Teodoro Nguema Mbasogo, Jose Moro Mba, former head of the Youth Marching with Macias Movement in Rio Muni, became the military commander of the Bata garrison.

Malabo (formerly Sanra Isabel), the capital of the Republic, still has a Mediterranean kind of charm. It is a city sprawling around a bay created by submerged craters and crowned by volcanoes covered with green vegetation, among which stands the Santa Isabel Peak thrusting into the equatorial skies to a height of 3,008 meters. One understands why Stanley called the island of Fernando Poo the "Pearl of the Gulf of Biafra." The city's creole population, which suffered severe hardships under the tyranny of Macias, is basically peaceful and friendly. There one finds an ethnic cocktail of Sierra Leoneans, Ibos from Nigeria, Fangs from Gabon, Bubis from Rio Muni, Fanys, descendants of former slaves and of Cuban deportees, and, naturally, the N'Tumus who represent the predominant tribe. In the capital, the Spaniards built an international airport, a sports arena, an episcopal palace, a governor house, several hotels (all of which went out of business after independence) and four movie houses.

Spanish Recolonization

But this charming picture of architecture and colors representing Malabo has become very faded. One only has to walk through the city to be seized by a feeling of distress. The faces of the inhabitants display evasive, impenetrable and totally indifferent looks. The Whites from West European countries who came after the regime changed to prevent this island from totally falling prey to hunger and despair remain within their own circle and are bored to death. The Spaniards, usually so cheerful and friendly, ignore the other foreigners and are living in seclusion inside an absurd ghetto as the Soviets did when Macias was in power. Italian cameramen have told me that the Spanish Embassy is as inaccessible as the Soviet Embassy.

Yet the Spaniards have truly recolonized Guinea. Is it not a fact that on the occasion of King Juan Carlos' visit President Obiang said that "the future of Guinea has no meaning without Spain?" Indeed, money, drugs, food supplies, advisers, teachers, journalists of the Efe news agency, pilots and transportation to Europe, almost everything again passes through the umbilical cord once more connected to Madrid. But the results are disappointing; few Third World countries present such an unchanging and crushing picture of ineffectual independence.

Every key sector of the economy remains half paralyzed: agriculture, timber industry, commerce, communications, water, electrical and medical facilities and the fishing industry on which Macias had imposed a ban under threat of death (while all the fish was looted by the Russians).

The country has failed to come out of the dark pit where it was plunged by the Russian dictatorship and greed. As a matter of fact, the Soviets hesitate to leave. Ambassador Krasnikov remains in contact with Equatorial Guinean civil servants who had been granted scholarships to study in the USSR.

The cocoa plantations which in the past were the wealth and pride of the Spanish colony--a colony considered to be a model of emancipation--are producing now one-eighth of what they used to produce in 1969 (7,000 tons a year intead of 50,000 tons). But the important thing now is to realize that the return of the Spaniards has been instrumental in the serious deterioration of moral standards among the native population. In 2 years they have fallen into the temptation of drugs, cigarettes, pornography and alcohol. The corruption, kept in check under Macias who was not about to share with anyone either riches or power, is now widespread in the country as it is in Nigeria and Zaire.

Spanish financial aid--initially provided indiscriminately and intended to capture the market--was used by the people to purchase cars, to get drunk and to prostitute themselves. Now Madrid realizes the moral burden of its responsibilities and is said to have asked the United Nations to send Spanish judges to Equatorial Guinea to curtail the most serious crimes of corruption. But this request cannot be met because there is no law enforcement authority to carry out the sentences that these judges would have pronounced.

Spain also realizes that it will not be able to solve, by itself, the economic crisis and all the problems of underdevelopment facing the country, and it is trying to rally the assistance of other European governments and voluntary services overseas in spite of the fact that the local currency, the ekele with an exchange rate of two for one peseta, is practically a nonconvertible currency and, therefore, discourages potential foreign investors.

The best efforts on the part of experts from the World Bank, the IMF and the EEC have been ineffective as a result of the apathy shown by the local authorities and by the population, while the current rivalry between Spain and France has made it impossible so far to coordinate the financial aid.

After the fall of Macias Nguema, Madrid tried to corner all technical and financial contracts in every sphere of activity but more often than not it did not follow up its initiatives.

France, for its part, has tried to keep its distance from all potential competitors and to cut the ground from under Spain's feet particularly in the matter of off-shore oil concessions where Ispanoil [Spanish Oil Company] and ELF-Aquitaine [Gasoline and Lubricants Company of France] have conflicting interests. Paris has also attempted to entice Malabo away from the peseta and into the sphere of the CFA franc which is a convertible currency. This would suddenly open the economic doors of central west Africa to France.

Madrid thus realizes that it made a mistake when it refused to allow other potential European partners to participate in the reconstruction of the country and now Spain is said to be willing to accept any kind of cooperation, to welcome members of the voluntary services overseas, to see new enterprises being set up and to have finally abandoned the idea of establishing an administration closely resembling a colonial administration.

EA220250 Addis Ababa Domestic Service in Amharic 1100 GMT 21 Nov 81

[Text] The third regular session of the COPWE [Commission for Organizing the Party of the Working People of Ethiopia] Central Committee has set guidelines on how to develop ideological and organizational work both individually and collectively since this is the basic guarantee for bringing the working people's efforts to fruition. The session set the guidelines to analyze the prevailing objective reality in a statement issued last night at the end of a 2-day meeting held in the assembly hall of the Secretariat of the COPWE Central Committee under the chairmanship of Comrade Chairman Mengistu Haile Mariam, chairman of the Provisional Military Administrative Council and of the COPWE. The statement established guidelines for the friends of the revolution. It was published today in a special issue of the organ of the COPWE Central Committee, SERTO ADER.

In its special issue, SERTO ADER said the meeting listened to our revolutionary leader's report analyzing the prevailing national and international situations and charted an appropriate method of struggle.

The statement also said some of the resolutions adopted by the second regular session of the COPWE Central Committee have been implemented. It added that since some of those remaining will be implemented in the near future and the others require constant implementation, it is essential to wage an intensified sturggle to achieve all of them step by step.

SERTO ADER said in its special issue that it had been pointed out that the implementation of the guidelines established by the third regular session of the COPWE Central Committee regarding major issues is the primary responsibility of all COPWE members and the revolutionary obligation of all working people, adding that since the building of socialism is impossible without this, we should undertake the task of discharging our great historical responsibility with greater determination.

BONGO SEEN DIVERSIFYING COOPERATION BESIDES FRANCE

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3353, 2 Nov 81 pp 2567-2568

[Text]

WHILE PRESIDENT BONGO of Gabon denies suggestions that relations with France are at a low ebb, he has set off on a European tour to Italy, Luxembourg and Belgium saying that he wants to diversify Gabon's trade. This follows announcements by the President that he intends to increase Gabon's participation in the equity of three large French mineral companies in Gabon.

France accounted for some 60 per cent of Gabon's imports in 1980 and an estimated 24 per cent of Gabon's exports. More significant, though, is the size of the French stake in the most important sectors of Gabon's economy. President Bongo said recently that he planned to raise Gabon's participation in three French-controlled companies from the present 10 per cent to around 25 to 30 per cent. The companies involved are Elf-Gabon, a subsidiary of the Elf-Aquitaine group; the Compagne Minière de l'Ogoue, (COMOLIG) jointly owned by US Steel and the French government; and, the Compagnie des Mines d'Uranium de Franceville (COMUF) which is controlled by the French Atomic Energy Commission.

The mining and petroleum sector of the Gabonese economy accounts for some 50 per cent of GDP. However, a closer look at the role of some of the companies selected by the President for greater Gabonese participation indicates the extraordinarily important part they play in the economy.

Petroleum production is dominated by Elf-Gabon, which operates the Mandji field. In 1979 that field produced 8,319,000 tonnes of a total of 9,799,000 tonnes. Production has declined, but recent discoveries mean that output is likely to remain at between five and six million tonnes over the next 15 years, according to some of the most recent estimates. In 1979, 71.5 per cent of exports consisted of oil.

Uranium and manganese each accounted for 7.6 per cent of exports. In 1979 COMUF produced 1,100 tonnes of uranium from the Mounana mines out of the total of 1,252 tonnes. COMILOG saw its manganese exports recover from 1.7m. tonnes in 1978 to 2.3m. tonnes in 1979. COMILOG, which controls managanes production, was in the happy position of seeing output increase by a further nine per cent in the first six months of 1980. These three companies alone represent at least 90 per cent of French industrial assets in Gabon.

As far as the financial management of the economy is concerned, there have been improvements recently, due, to a large extent, to a stiff dose of IMF-prescribed austerity. The foreign debt has been reduced from 50 per cent of exports in 1978 to 28 per cent, estimated at about $950m. The 1980 trade balance showed a surplus of $1,300m., an increase which can be attributed to the rise in price of a barrel of oil, which the Gabonese set last year at a $39 posted price. (No doubt this has been modified in recent months).

The improvement in the economy's performance has given the President a little more room for manoeuvre. However, there is no doubting that the relations once enjoyed with the former French Head of State, Giscard d'Estaing, are a thing of the past. The new French approach of making relations "state to state" as opposed to the Giscardian policy of close personal relations with certain African leaders — among them Bongo — has led the Gabonese President to express publicly his regret.

The apparent antipathy of the French Socialists towards the Central African regimes of Mobutu, Bongo and the recently overturned government of David Dacko in Bangui, also forced President Bongo to reconsider his assumption that he would be able to rely on the French military presence to rush to his defence in the event of any internal political crisis.

The French press has caused him particular anguish by suggesting that matrimonial harmony in Gabon's first family had been somewhat besmirched by an alleged liaison between the President's wife and a painter, M. Robert Luong, whose recent disappearance in France is the object of legal investigations. Previous governments might have stepped in to prevent publication, but the socialists in France have taken no action at all.

Such are the factors which might contribute to a fit of Presidential anti-French pique. Though the President will have to work hard on proving that Gabon is not a French commercial hunting ground, there has been evidence in recent months of increased contact with other potential commercial partners. Some major projects are in the offing, and it is widely believed that the President will encourage non-French investors.

The new airport at Libreville may well go to British companies which have had a good track record in francophone Africa. Taylor Woodrow and Wimpey are expected to be retained for the construction of the second phase of the Trans-Gabon Railway which links the capital to the mining area in Franceville. A new harbour for Libreville is to be constructed by US companies according to reports. A British business delegation is currently in Gabon, led by the Duke of Kent. In September, Mr. Richard Luce, a Minister of State at the Foreign Office, visited Gabon. It is in this context that the President's vist to Luxembourg, Italy and Belgium should be seen.

BRIEFS

'GABONIZATION' ISSUE--Constant Philippe Okouaghe, director general of manpower and employment, had a meeting on 2 November in his office with officials from the construction and public works trade unions. A total of 26 enterprises were represented at this meeting, which dealt with the employment of foreign personnel and the training of Gabonese workers. In the face of the continuing large number of foreign personnel in our country, officials requested a review of this issue in order to find ways and means to alleviate this situation, while at the same time taking into consideration the young people's entrance into the work force. Constant Philippe Okouaghe spoke first, stressing the difficult work conditions while wishing that the enterprises become aware of the need for the "Gabonization" of jobs. A commission was created to control the activities on the recruitment of local manpower. [Text] [Libreville L'UNION in French 3 Nov 81 p 3]

SOCIAL BENEFITS BILL ADOPTED--Libreville, 23 Nov (AFP)--The Gabonese Ministerial Council met on Saturday under the chairmanship of President Omar Bongo and adopted various social measures which will cost the National Social Security Fund 1.5 billion CFA francs in 1982. Family allocations thus increase from 2,000 to 3,000 CFA francs per child a month as of 1 January 1982, while a new monthly allocation of 10,000 CFA francs at the beginning of the academic year per child in primary or secondary school in 1982 is created. In the same way, the ceiling of the old age allowance is raised from 200,000 CFA francs to 300,000 per month. On the other hand, a commission made up of several ministerial departments has been charged with the responsibility of preparing a general report on the provincial council meetings held in the nine provinces of Gabon between June and November this year. This report is to be submitted to the government before the end of the year. The themes discussed by these councils are population and development, the participation of these localities in the process of self-sufficiency in food production, health education within the framework of health for all in the year 2000, cooperative movement and rural development, the party's national mutual held fund, etc. [Text] [AB231244 Paris AFP in French 0920 GMT 23 Nov 81]

'LE SOLEIL' INTERVIEWS JAWARA ON CONFEDERATION

AB241624 Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 18 Nov 81 p 13

[Interview with Gambian President Dawda Jawara by LE SOLEIL special envoy Lucien Sammy Chaupin in Banjul--date not given]

[Text] [Question] Mr President, a document on the agreement for the establishment of the Senegambian Confederation was signed during President Abdou Diouf's official visit to Gambia. What does this agreement mean to the Gambian head of state as well as the Gambian people?

[Answer] This agreement is historical. It is very important for our two people and denotes the willingness of our two peoples to achieve Senegambia. The Gambian people want the union. They have proven this to me during the 30 meetings held throughout the country. I must go to Dakar within the next few weeks at the invitation of President Abdou Diouf. During this visit, we will go beyond the joint communique to sign the agreement itself on the constitution of the Senegambian Confederation. Senegal and Gambia have also wished for this union, even before independence, as evidenced by the numerous accords signed between our two countries. All these agreements--among which we count the executive secretariat of the Senegal-Gambia Committee--have helped to outline the confederation.

[Question] What do you expect from this union?

[Answer] The strengthening of our countries' resources. It is obvious that together, we can do more and better.

[Question] Which are the sectors that you hope to join together?

[Answer] In the first place, we have decided to integrate our armed forces and the security services in order to forestall any destabilization attempt in the region. The other sectors will be discussed later on. They will then be implemented by agreements. These will include commerce, fishing industry, finance and rural development. We will discuss all these in the interest of our two countries.

[Question] Don't you fear the opposition of those whose personal interests and privileges are threatened by the formation of the Senegambian Confederation?

[Answer] We shall try to take care of each and everyone but we will never do so at the expense of public interest. Once the confederation has been established, everyone will be obliged to respect it wholly--its framework, spirit and content.

[Question] There has always been the fear that the language barrier might make the union difficult to realize. What is your opinion on this problem?

[Answer] The language problem does not concern only our two countries. Unfortunately, it is a problem facing the whole of Africa which has been divided by the colonialists. Our desire will enable us to overcome this obstacle. I am an apostle of bilingualism. There is a better way. And that is our good fortune. Our common national languages will serve as a very useful vehicle: the proof of this is that President Abdou Diouf expressed himself in Wolof throughout his official visit here and he was perfectly understood by all the Gambians.

[Question] Why did you have to wait so long before achieving the Senegambian Confederation?

[Answer] Come on, Mr Chaupin. Administering a country and defending the interests of a people demand some constraints. We decided to proceed step by step in order to be able to build a solid union. Today, this procedure has yielded its fruits. Gambians and Senegalese have wholeheartedly accepted the idea of confederation which they know is of absolute necessity because of the results of our multiple agreements. Senegambia has come to stay.

[Question] What about the currency?

[Answer] The problem will be studied and the best solution found to it.

[Question] Do you find it necessary to ask the consent of the two peoples to the confederation through a referendum?

[Answer] To me, a referendum is not necessary since each of the two states retains its national sovereignty. Voting in the two national assemblies is enough to decide on the formation of the Senegambian Confederation.

[Question] How have Great Britain and the Commonwealth accepted the idea of the confederation?

[Answer] They cannot object to it. We have the right to understand one another and to unite. It is also worth noting that the confederation does not in any way compromise the agreements existing between us and Great Britain and the Commonwealth. We have every right to undertake the union between Senegal and Gambia.

[Question] Mr President, we are going to have a look at Gambia's recent past and talk about the coup attempt by Kukli and his group. Was there really any foreign hand in the attempt, as you earlier said?

[Answer] There was a foreign power behind all that; we had traces of it. However, I cannot say which power it is. The trials which will start soon will probably enlighten us more on it.

[Question] To what do you attribute these events?

[Answer] Simply to the ambition of those whom the people do not want and who wanted to seize power through the use of force. The people--the good ones--remained with us. You saw it through the different meetings. Some opposition parties were grossly involved in this affair. This concerns the movement for justice in Africa and the (?National People's Congress) particularly.

[Question] Gambia has appointed foreign judges to try the culprits in the July 1981 disturbances. Why did you not call on the Gambian judiciary?

[Answer] We are a small country. And we do not want people to say that the judgement and the verdict have been dictated by the authorities of the country. There is also the great number of the culprits to be tried. There are about 1,000 people. The trial may last several months because we don't have sufficient judges. The sentences will be pronounced only according to the seriousness of the offenses. I assure you of this.

[Question] How far have you gone with the negotiations with Guinea-Bissau for the extradition of Kukli Samba Sanyang and his friends? Do you think that you will be able to try these people in front of the Gambian people some day?

[Answer] The negotiations are still going on. I am not discouraged about the chances of some day handing Kukli to my country's judiciary to throw light on the bloody events that have bereaved Gambia. Believe me, the whole subregion is concerned. Without Kukli, all that will be done will smack of incompleteness.

[Question] Has Gambia completely recovered from the effects of the July 1981 events?

[Answer] Mostly. We are sincerely grateful to all those who helped us. Presently, all our attention is focused on the future.

REASONS FOR FAILURE OF COUP OFFERED

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3352, 26 Oct, No 3353, 2 Nov 81

[Article by Arnold Hughes]

[26 Oct 81, pp 2498-2502]

[Text]

THREE MONTHS have now elapsed since The Gambia was convulsed by a week-long insurrection. At the time a number of conflicting interpretations of the event were offered: radicals saw the coup as an undisputed attempt to bring about the revolutionary transformation of Gambian society under the leadership of a Marxist vanguard; the Gambian government wavered between seeing the coup as an externally-directed attempt to destabilise a pro-Western regime, involving perhaps Libya and the Soviet Union, and nothing more than banditry posing as social revolution — the so-called "taxi drivers' coup"; other commentators also drew attention to likely foreign backers for the coup.

A full description of the insurrection must await the trials of a number of persons charged with taking part in it; but in the meantime it is possible to provide a more detailed account of what took place in The Gambia on July 30 and the following seven days and to speculate about the origins and intentions of the conspirators.

The coup differed markedly from other illegal seizures of power in black Africa in that it was not a purely military affair. Admittedly, at least half the para-military Field Force participated in the uprising and three of these belonged to the self-styled Supreme Council of the Revolution set up by the plotters, but the majority of the conspirators, and their leader — Kukoi Samba Sanyang — were civilians.

Unruly behaviour of Civilians

The civilian element in the coup became more pronounced once the plotters had seized control of the Field Force armoury on the morning of the coup. Now, in addition to mutinous policemen, hundreds of civilians, including released convicts, were given sophisticated fire-arms, ostensibly to enforce the revolution and confront Senegalese forces rallying to the support of the remaining loyalists and the temporarily deposed head of state, Sir Dawda Jawara. This unusual, large-scale civil involvement altered the character of the insurrection and profoundly affected its chances of success. A relatively disciplined seizure of power now turned into mob rule, with most supporters of the coup turning their attention to drinking, robbery, looting and the settling of old scores, rather than to ushering in the socialist millenium.

Despite attempts to prevent looting, the coup leaders rapidly lost overall control of the uprising and, not only did they fail to put up prolonged resistance to the Senegalese forces which advanced by land, sea and air within 48 hours, they could not even storm the Central Police Station in Banjul, where Inspector General A. M'Boob and 16 loyalist companions (later strengthened by 23 men from the Farfenni Field camp who managed to make their way to Banjul), held off the rebels and shielded senior members of the government who had sought sanctuary there.

The failure to take the Central Police Station was a major blunder for it convinced President Jawara and his ally, President Abdou Diouf of Senegal, that resistance was possible and the 1965 defence treaty could be invoked once again. It would appear that the nearby American Embassy, within the defence cordon established by the loyalists, provided radio links with Dakar for the loyalists.

This was only one of several mistakes made by the rebel leaders. The first, apparently, was the bringing forward by two days of the launching of the coup. The intention had been to seize the President, members of his government and senior civil servants and policemen, at Yundum Airport on the former's return home from England. Fears of a breach in their security led the plotters to strike too soon, with the result that President Jawara escaped capture and was able to return to Senegal to organise resistance to the insurgents.

Other major errors by the plotters included the decision to release convicts — initially, the intention had been to release only Mustapha Danso, the murderer of the Deputy Commander of the Field Force in October last year. But all prisoners were released instead and many of these took up arms against the civilian population not the government, thereby discrediting the coup leaders in the eyes of many of the public, and ensuring a welcome for the Senegalese army.

Radical rhetoric loses support

The ostentatious use of Marxist-Leninist rhetoric in their broadcasts over the captured government radio station also proved counter-productive. It failed to evoke support from radical countries applied to — Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, and the Soviet Union — while it mystified or frightened an essentially conservative and Islamic public. Even worse, it convinced the Senegalese government of the need to support the temporarily deposed Gambian President, lest his country become a base for subversion against its neighbour. Likewise the taking of Gambian and Senegalese hostages produced the opposite effect to that intended.

Such blunders show up the rebel leaders as nothing more than amateur revolutionaries with no credible qualifications to replace the PPP administration, no matter how unpopular the latter may have become. While repeating a generalised Marxist-inspired critique of the government, the rebels failed to take effective steps to replace it. Instead, rebels fought each other, hurried away to loot stores and homes and commandeer private cars. Both military advantage and political goals were sacrificed to more immediate attempts at economic redistribution.

In the meantime, the Senegalese commenced their attack on rebel positions by land from Cassamance, Kaolack and Tambacounda; by air on Yundum Airport; and by sea at Bijilo to the rear of the rebel positions. It is possible that the Senegalese initially did not take the military threat seriously enough; casualties among the first wave of paratroops are reported to have been high. Certainly Senegalese losses were much higher than were officially admitted, as testified by the gift of $1,000,000 to Senegalese casualties by the Gambian President.

Heavy human losses

Equally there is truth in the Senegalese claim that the insurrection could have been ended much quicker but for a concern to minimise suffering, prevent material damage and ensure the safety of hostages. In the event damage to buildings was remarkably light, the looters caused most of the estimated £10,000,000 worth of damage to commercial property. Human losses were tragically heavy, which again singles out the Gambian coup from most other coups in Africa. No real tally of the deaths exist but they must be far higher than official estimates.

Possibly 500 people died in the Banjul area alone and given the widespread shootings within the rebel-held townships on the outskirts of the capital, and the stiff fighting at Yundum and along the road from Brikama to Serrekunda, and at Bijilo, overall deaths of up to 2,000 do not seem unreasonable.

Who were these individuals and groups that brought about such unexpected and unwelcome violence to such a peaceful country as The Gambia? The twelve-man revolutionary directorate were all unknowns, men of little or no education and limited experience.

Their leader, Kukoi Samba Sanyang, is a shadowy, peripatetic figure who mysteriously appears and disappears over the past decade. An academic dropout, failed priest and one-time political candidate for the opposition National Convention Party, he appears to have adopted increasingly militant political views and to have joined a small underground political movement, the Gambia Underground Revolutionary Socialist Labour Party, some time in the early summer. He and others apparently subscribed to vulgarised Marxist notions of revolutionary change, ideas which gave a circulation among youthful elements in the Banjul area. The GURSLP, together with another radical organisation, the Movement for Justice in Africa (MOJA) — which claimed affinities with its Liberian namesake — were banned in October, 1980, on the grounds of being involved in seditious activities, possibly in association with members of the Libyan Embassy in Banjul. Such grouplets sought to give direction to generalised political and economic grievances among the urban populance, being particularly critical of moral and practical shortcomings on the part of the Jawara administration.

Members of MOJA undoubtedly lent their support to the plotters though they probably only joined the coup at a later stage. The leader of the GURSLP, 'Pengu' George, was shot dead by the rebels themselves, either because he was found looting or because he was untrustworthy. This a telling comment about the revolutionary credentials of the coup leadership.

Other coup leaders were drawn from lumpen-proletariat circles in the Banjul suburbs; three were Field Force men of low rank; another was a taxi driver; and one was a drug peddler: not, primafacie the most promising of revolutionary material.

Apart from this unimpressive group of men, there is growing suspicion that members of the legal opposition were also privy to the plot or else joined in the coup. Both the NCP leader, Sherif Dibba, and the leader of another political organisation, Pap Cheyassin Secka of the National Liberation Party, are in detention, charged with aiding the rebels. Kukoi Sanyang is reported to have visited Dibba's house on several occasions during the coup and Secka is alleged to have had a hand in writing the rebel speeches. Their complicity in the plot remains to be firmly established, but numerous armed men, wearing white headbands, the colour of the NCP, were seen roaming the streets of Banjul during the uprising. It is conceivable that elements of the opposition party were involved in the conspiracy: certainly the tone of NCP speeches had become increasingly militant in recent months.

The overwhelming number of rebel activists were from the Banjul area and the Western Division. Discontented youths formed an important element among the rebels, these combined generation and economic grievances against the status quo. Support for the coup had an ethic element as well. Several of the members of the SCR were Jola, as was Sanyang, and the Jola community in the Fonis and the Kombos seems to have welcomed the coup. As the most deprived ethnic group in The Gambia the Jola may have more readily identified with the coup. Support also came from Baddibu Mandinka living in the Bakau area, though there were no disturbances reported from the North Bank Division itself. Gambians of Guinea-Bissau extraction, the Manjagos, may also have played some part in the plot and a number of them were detained after the coup. Apart from these groups, the provinces remained calm and only a few dozen of the 914 detainees held after the rebellion collapsed came from outside of the Western Division and Banjul area.

No evidence of Soviet help

External support for the coup is more difficult to define. The Russian weapons found on the rebels were from the police armoury and, Marxist rhetoric apart, no conclusive evidence of Soviet involvement has yet been produced. Likewise, the authorities have still to present proof of direct Libyan participation in the coup. While the government of Guinea-Bissau does not seem to have supported the rebellion, individuals of Guinea-Bissau extraction did participate. The most notorious was the dismissed Assistant Commander of Police, Bojang, who personally shot dead the Depot Commander at Bakau on the morning of the coup and then broke into the armoury. He was to die in the fighting.

Undoubtedly, the most visible and effective outside intervention was that of Senegal for, without the assistance of Senegalese troops, the loyalist forces would surely have been overwhelmed and The Gambia subjected to an uncertain experiment in socialist reconstruction. If reports of rebel intentions are to be believed, little improvement and possibly great calamity would have ensued. (The absence of damage to luxury homes along Pipeline Road in Fajara is attributed to the coup leaders' intention to occupy them after the revolution was over.) More sinister are reports of rebel documents containing death lists of prominent citizens and even a plan to move part of the population of Banjul to the provinces, in crude imitation of the Khmer Rouge in Kampuchea. If true, such left-wing adventurism could hardly be described as an improvement on the government of the PPP, which, whatever its shortcomings, has never resorted to murder and state terror in pursuit of its objectives.

In most cases it is demand that is sought to be curbed. Given Ghana's high propensity to demand imported goods one major avenue of curtailing demand will probably be a revision of the general rate of exchange — ie. a devaluation, which the IMF has always insisted on and which the Central Bank has fallen in love with but in which government refuses to see wisdom, for political reasons. The record of post-devaluation developments, politically, is not a pleasant one that any government wants to play with.

But the CMB itself has confessed that it could hardly keep its feet at the current rates of exchange.

Estimates have it that with the black market rate of exchange at almost ₵40 to a dollar, it would require a rate in excess of ₵10 to the dollar for the industry to make a break — even with a probable new producer price that is double the current price. The official rate of exchange now is ₵2.75 to the dollar.

Naturally, at producer prices higher than ₵240, the rate of exchange will have to go up. This situation will, by no means, be for the cocoa industry only because other export items notably timber and minerals — the three major export earners — also require a revision in the rates of exchange at which their earnings are converted.

In these circumstances, therefore, and bearing in mind that direct taxes are high already, it is possible that the President's promise of an 'economic package' could very well be dominated by a devaluation, no matter how reluctantly.

[Text]

TODAY, the shocking events of late July seem like a half-forgotten nightmare to the people of The Gambia and there is an astonishing and encouraging air of normality about the capital, Banjul. Even so, there is a natural concern about the country's future and a sadness about the abrupt ending of its proud record of tolerance and stability. For his part, President Jawara has reiterated his personal commitment to parliamentary government and there is every intention of holding the general elections next spring. The President has widely toured the country, and made a point of visiting such well-known centres of opposition as Bakau and Lower Baddibu, in order to seek reconciliation. Large-scale defections from the opposition NCP to the government are the result of this approach as much as of political prudence. One unanticipated consequence may be the absence of any effective opposition to the PPP in the next elections. Whatever happens to its imprisoned leader, there is little prospect of the NCP mounting any real challenge to the government. Neither is any new party likely to be formed by then, while independent candidates have a poor record of winning. Instead, there is a real possibility of sitting NCP members of parliament crossing over to the PPP, or of the governing party winning all thirty-five directly elected seats next year. This would mean a de facto one-party state and additional pressure on President Jawara to legalise the situation by formally declaring his party the sole political movement.

Yet the President is strongly in favour of a multi-party system and his international reputation owes much to his stance in this respect. To declare a one-party state would also threaten to conceal and possibly radicalise existing opposition. In the past, and despite its overwhelming parliamentary strength, the PPP has been consistently opposed by about one-third of the electorate; probably more if opposition voters in uncontested PPP constituencies are included. Lingering bitterness among urban youths must also be expected despite official attempts at reconciliation. It is electoral success rather than an authoritarian back-lash on the part of the government in the wake of the coup which is the more likely to propel The Gambia towards one-party rule.

But there are more pressing political problems to attend to. The first of these is restoring and improving the government's reputation among the public. A policy of reconciliation can only be part of this process: reform is also necessary. While most of the charges levelled against the President and the PPP by the rebels were downright inaccurate or exaggerations, their complaints about corruption and mismanagement in party and government circles have some substance and popular recognition. The President himself has been aware for some time of shortcomings on the part of his Cabinet colleagues and several ministers and civil servants have been dismissed peremptorily. Yet such action has fallen short of public expectation. What is felt to be required is the criminal prosecution and punishment of corrupt ministers; otherwise they are left free to enjoy the benefits of their venality. A tough stance in this matter would greatly enhance President Jawara's stature among the electorate, though it is recognised that this might cause consternation elsewhere.

Another area requiring reform is the party itself. Over the years the PPP has tended to stagnate and grow complacent and "middle-aged", with the result that young people have come to feel that their views are insufficiently heard within the upper echelons of the party, and their spokesmen under-represented in senior positions. Here again the President has made some concessions following the 1977 party congress; itself the first full convention held since independence. Women's needs have been recognised through a National Women's Bureau and the inclusion of several women on key bodies as well as a women's programme within the development plan. A greater role for youth is also needed. The PPP has been revamping its youth wing and younger men have been promoted within the Cabinet and youths, together with women and trades unions, given a voice in national economic planning. Unfortunately, the expectations of young people outpace their qualifications and it has not been easy to find sufficiently well-educated and experienced people to take up senior appointments in the party or government.

While the long-term political security must rest with a politically content electorate, recent events have shown that even a tiny alienated element can almost bring the system to its knees. By itself, urban opposition has only a limited capacity to threaten the government: it was its alliance with mutinous members of the security forces which enabled it almost to topple the administration. The purging and reform of the Field Force and police is one of the most pressing issues in The Gambia today. Under the aegis of some 800 Senegalese troops, measures are being taken to punish and discipline the several hundred police and para-military police who took up arms against the state, or else refused to defend it. The intention seems to be to convert the Field Force into a gendarmerie and to create a small army to be integrated into a Senegambian military force. This will have the immediate advantage of ensuring a permanent Senegalese commitment to The Gambia as well as dividing the security forces into two distinct bodies. The readiness with which the police renounced their oath of allegiance indicates a need to instill a greater sense of duty among them. The abortive coup revealed a mercenary and opportunistic streak among a great many policemen. Many witnesses reported seeing policemen in the van of the looters, shooting off locks to enable the latter to pillage stores.

The future political tranquillity of The Gambia depends not only on a willingness to make political adjustments; it must also rest on effective economic action by the government. Though the rebels criticised the Jawara administration in this respect, more informed and experienced evaluators consider the government to be pursuing realistic and sensible policies with a correct emphasis on rural development. Human failings have not been confined to senior officials; field workers and the farming community must also accept some of the responsibility for the failure to meet targets. In recent years though, it has been the uncertainty of rainfall, and the attendant evils deriving from irregular and insufficient rains, which have greatly contributed to economic setbacks. Instead of an annual purchase of some 130,000 tonnes of groundnuts, sales have plummetted to an abysmal 40,000 tonnes. Government revenues, foreign exchange earnings, as well as farmers' incomes and profits in the commercial sector, have been badly hit. Economic dissatisfaction, particularly the inability to find sufficient satisfactory employment for young people in the rural areas, has fuelled political unrest. The government has long been aware of the connection between unemployment, urban drift and political discontent but only a vigorous agriculture and a successful informal sector can create sufficient job opportunities.

The immediate economic problem has been the cost and dislocation of the coup. The Gambia Chamber of Commerce has calculated losses to the business sector as over £10,000,000; probably an inflated amount and one limited to the Banjul area. Damage and loss outside of this region was extremely slight and farming has not been disrupted. Additionally, the government estimated that some 300,000 needed three-months' supply of emergency feeding. This is a surprisingly high figure, amounting to half the populace, given the restricted geographical extent of the rebellion. Foreign and local response to appeals for aid have been extremely encouraging: individuals, businesses and local communities have given a substantial amount of money and goods in kind to the relief appeal, while an impressive number of countries, ranging across a wide political spectrum, have donated millions of pounds worth of money, food, medical supplies and technical assistance. Saudi Arabia heads the list with over US $10,000,000; Britain has given £600,000; Japan a similar amount; and a number of other Western, Middle Eastern and African countries have added to this, so much so, that the serious deterioration in foreign exchange has been significantly ameliorated. There is little doubt that the cost of the coup, at least in material terms, has been recovered. There remain the financing of the trials of detainees and the long-term contribution to a Senegalese military presence. If foreign contributions to the new Five Year Development Plan are as generous, then the country has every hope of making a good and speedy recovery. Particularly, as from all accounts, this year's rainfall was heavy and fell at the right time. There are expectations of a very good groundnut harvest. In the long run, large-scale aid for constructing the trans-Gambia bridge-barrage may well prove the most decisive measure for restoring the country's tarnished political reputation as well as its economic well-being.

One aspect of the economy does seem to have suffered severely from the adverse publicity accompanying the coup. Tourist projections for the coming season are down, possibly as much as a quarter. The government has allocated money for a more effective promotion of the tourist attractions of The Gambia and the new Information and Tourism Minister is presently in Europe for this purpose. It must be recognised, that though the government attaches great importance to tourism, its contribution to the GNP and employment remains small. Additionally, the old debate about the deleterious effects of tourism has been reopened with the coup.

"Reliance on Senegalese arms"

Finally, the coup has had a major effect on Gambian external relations; the most dramatic of which has been the total reliance on Senegalese arms to restore the government to power and to protect it during the period of reconstruction. There is much talk of a Senegambian association at present, but both heads-of-state have been guarded in their statements. It appears that both sides have re-adopted positions held in the late sixties towards integration: Senegal favours "organic union", with its suggestion of a close political relationship, while President Jawara talks only of confederation, correcting reports of federation earlier attributed to him. How far The Gambia will embrace close association will depend on how quickly political confidence and economic prosperity can be restored. Public opinion has yet to be consulted — perhaps next spring's elections will be used to sound out feelings — but in Banjul at least (once a source of strong resistance to union) a more favourable attitude towards Senegambian association is detectable. At the least, some form of military integration will take place.

Such a departure is likely to affect other areas of activity as well.

The other country most affected by the coup is Guinea Bissau, a country which has always enjoyed excellent relations with The Gambia. Today, relations are strained because of the delay in returning Kukoi Samba Sanyang and nine other rebels, presently in Guinea Bissau. It is widely believed in Banjul that the rebels are being protected by former Gambians, sympathetic to the rebel cause, who occupy senior positions in the military hierarchy of Guinea Bissau. Some form of diplomatic or economic retaliation by Senegal and The Gambia is likely if the rebels are given safe conduct to a third country. This delay, together with suspicion that individual nationals of Guinea Bissau took part in the rebellion, will undoubtedly sour relations between the two countries.

It is far too early to write-off democracy in The Gambia or to anticipate the national demise of the country. Undoubtedly, it has passed through its most severe crisis to date, but there are encouraging prospects of recovery; even if the scars of rebellion will remain, the wounds themselves may yet be healed by such wise ministrations as the decision to have the more serious offenders among the 894 detainees tried by an impartial panel of judges drawn from Anglophone Commonwealth judges.

COMMENTATOR ON KAMOUGUE APPEAL TO EGYPT, SUDAN

AB231148 Accra Domestic Service in English 1300 GMT 22 Nov 81

[Commentary by David Anaglate]

[Text] The fact that Vice President Kamougue made the appeal to Sudan and Egypt at this time shows that Chad's Government, or at least important members of that government, do not accept at its face value the assurances by President Numayri of Sudan that he would discourage Hissein Habre's men from further acts of rebellion. It will be recalled that President Numayri said soon after Chad President Goukouni Oueddei ordered Libyan troops out of his country that the Chad leader's action was a courageous one and for his part, he would restrain further rebellion by Hissein Habre who had been operating from the Sudanese side of the border since his defeat. It is now clear that for Numayri, giving such an assurance was one thing; backing it up with action was quite another; for, his protestations of good will notwithstanding, Hissein Habre's men [words indistinct] and captured three towns in eastern Chad since the Libyans started withdrawing.

It would appear that what Sudan really wants is a foothold in Chad by obtaining for Habre an effective infiltration to that country's government. Indeed, Egypt and Sudan would prefer a Chad Government headed by Habre whom they helped during the civil war. For Egypt especially, that country isolated in the Middle East following her unpopular Camp David treaty with Israel, nothing is too much to attempt if it would lead to the acquisition of another friend in addition to only Sudan and Morocco. This explains, for example, Egypt's offer of arms to Sudan and Morocco in that country's war with the Polisario nationalists.

Obviously, the pro-Habre acts of Sudan are not unknown to the Chad Government, hence its apparent refusal to accept troops from Sudan as part of the African peacekeeping force for, to allow Sudanese troops into Chad could have been to strengthen Habre's position and thus constitute a trojan horse, nay, a fifth column inside the country.

While on this point, one expects that the OAU will clearly spell out its objective in Chad and instruct the countries sending troops there not to seek their own individual foreign policy goals in Chad. In short, the troops must pledge their loyalty to and be ready to fight to uphold the government led by President Oueddei. This is important, because there are many factions and tendencies within the Chad Government--the principal protagonists being President Oueddei himself, the vice president and the foreign minister, Ahmat Acyl. The OAU operations to maintain peace in Chad would fail unless the participating countries resist the temptation of placing their troops behind this or that faction in the country. In this connection, one expects the peace-keeping force to move quickly to the eastern part of the country in order to pull down Hissein Habre's forces.

Vice President Kamougue has said government troops are capable of doing this. If so, one wonders why the rebellion has been allowed to go as far as it has gone. Clearly, some help is required for the government troops and this should be the task of the African peace-keeping force.

'BOLD' LIMANN MEASURES WILL REVAMP COCOA SECTOR

Paris AFRICA AFP in English 12 Nov 81 p 15

[Text] Accra, November 11--Ghana's cocoa industry, the country's main export moneyspinner, is to be revamped following "bold measures" in the past two years to reactivate it, President Hilla Limann told Parliament here Tuesday.

He said 300,000 litres of insecticide and 5,000 spraying machine units had already been imported this year, with a further 200,000 litres on order. In addition, West German loan facilities would be used to order a further two million litres of insecticide and 20,000 spraying units.

The Cocoa Marketing Board's fleet of vehicles was being augmented to curtail the high incidence of smuggling overland, he said. The Government has placed orders for tractor-trailer units, trucks and pick-ups.

Last Friday a new producer price of 360 cedis (130 dollars) for 30 kilos of beans was gazetted. But reports reaching here from the hinterland allege that Ivory Coast agents in Ghana are offering an illicit 400 cedis (145 dollars) cash inducement per bucketful of wet cocoa beans to farmers.

President Limann voiced dissatisfaction with "the extremely high and rather parasitical overhead costs" incurred in running the cocoa industry. They adversely affected the producer price, he said.

He had issued clear guidelines to the Board to cut down drastically its operations in all ancillary and peripheral areas. A team of chartered accountants had been engaged to review the board's operations with a view to removing bottle necks and streamlining administration, Mr. Limann said. (AFP)

UNIVERSITY BRAIN DRAIN--Accra, November 7--The spectre of deserted campuses at Ghana's three universities because of poor service conditions for lecturers was raised today by the Vice-Chancellor of Legon University, Adjei Bekoe. In a matriculation address, Professor Bekoe warned that Legon University and the other two, Cape Coast and Kumasi, faced the prospect of having more of their staff leave for better conditions elsewhere in the near future. At least 160 dons had abandoned their appointments at universities in Ghana in the last three years, he said, warning that more would follow unless urgent action was taken. Figures show that Ghana's university teaching staff, technicians and other professional personnel such as doctors and medical staff have been moving to other African countries, particularly to Nigeria. PALM OIL MILL--The ultra-modern C70m. palm oil mill at Adum-Banso estate of the Benso Oil Palm Plantation, Ltd. (BOPP) is expected to be commissioned in November. The project is a joint venture with Unilever/UAC International, the Ghana Government and Barclays Bank International as shareholders. Management expertise is being supplied by Unilever Plantation Group. Production will begin with a single press which can use 15 tons of palm fruit an hour with 21 per cent of this coming out as edible oil. Agriculture Minister, Mr. Nelson Agbesi, who visited the project site last Thursday to see progress being made, was briefed by the estate manager, Mr. Francis Edmond. Mr. Edmond said BOPP was established in 1976 to clear 24,710,520 hectares (10,000 acres) of forest and plant it with oil palm over six years. So far, 23,272,367 hectares (9,418 acres) had been planted during the past five years. Mr. Edmond added that 1,331 hectares of oil palm planted in 1977 and 1978 was being harvested this year and it was estimated it would yield 3,115 tons of fruit. The BOPP employs about 1,400 workers, including contract labour. About half of the workers are accommodated in two labour villages, built by the company. OFFICIAL DISMISSED--Nana Okutwer Boekoe, chairman of the People's National Party (PNP), the ruling party in Ghana, was dismissed on Wednesday, 25 November, following an amicable agreement between two rival factions of the PNP approved by the country's Supreme Court. His departure represents a defeat for President Hilla Limann's faction and will reportedly weaken the chief of state's position when the party's next congress will nominate its candidate for the 1983 presidential election. FRG SHIPBUILDING ASSISTANCE--The government is to build more fishing, passenger and cargo boats with the assistance of West Germany for use on the Volta Lake. In addition, a plant to assemble pontoons is to be set up in Kete-Krachi. This was announced by the deputy Volta regional minister, Mr Aperku, at a rally of fishermen organized by the National Farmers Council at Kpandu Torkor. He said the government is taking these measures to make life worth living for all Ghanaians. Mr Aperku commended farmers' work and appealed to them to make full use of facilities to be provided by the Volta regional agricultural development project. He suggested that the farmers council should team up with the Volta River Authority in developing the fishing school at Kpandu Torkor. MATTHEWS DISMISSED AS FOREIGN MINISTER

Military Government Dismisses Matthews

AB201500 Paris AFP in English 1451 GMT 20 Nov 81

[Text] Monrovia, 20 Nov (AFP)--Liberian Foreign Minister Gabriel Bacchus Matthews has been discmissed by the military government, the state radio reported today.

His sacking followed a cabinet meeting where he was confronted with allegations of remarks he had made against the government.

A State House communique, quoting head of state Samuel Doe, said Mr Matthews had not worked in the interest of the government.

Mr Doe said he had received numerous reports of actions by Mr Matthews which were not compatible with the aims and aspirations of our government. He was therefore constrained to relieve the minister of his post and thanked him for whatever service he rendered the ruling people's Redemption Council.

Meanwhile Deputy Foreign Minister Christopher Minikon has been appointed to act as minister in the interim, the communique said.

Further On Matthews Dismissal

AB201824 Paris AFP in English 1816 GMT 20 Nov 81

[Text] Monrovia, 20 Nov (AFP)--Observers said the dismissal of the foreign minister appeared to be part of a continuing purge by Mr Doe, the army master sergeant who toppled President William Tolbert 18 months ago.

In September he fired Justice Minister Chea Cheapoo for behaviour incompatible with the administration of the ministry and later had him arrested for alleged embezzlement.

Two days later it was the turn of Finance Minister George Dunye and one of his deputies, who were accused of fraud.

The purge is linked with a drive against corruption and efforts to pull Liberia out of a precarious economic situation.

Army Chief of Staff Leutenant-General Henry Dubar said that Mr Matthews had lost his military rank of major after his dismissal. No reason was given, but defence sources said it is believed to be for the convenience of government.

The government became totally military last July when cabinet ministers and their deputies were given military ranks on the occasion of the country's 134th independence anniversary. Ministers became majors and their deputies captains.

Head of state Doe said the move was aimed at creating an atmosphere of trust and better understanding and cooperation between the army and the former civilians.

Mr Matthews is the only minister to lose his military rank after his dismissal--others have always been reassigned.

DOE SAID TO 'STRIKE HARD AT ROOTS OF TROUBLE'

Paris AFRICA AFP in English 17 Nov 81 pp 1, 2

[Text] Monrovia, November 14 --Eighteen months after seizing power in Liberia Head of State Samuel Doe has a double fight on his hands: to strengthen his still fragile regime and overcome an extremely worrying economic situation.

The 29-year-old leader has weathered two serious political crises since toppling President William Tolbert in Liberia, independent since 1847, on April 13 last year. But an indication of lingering worries is the five-hour curfew that is still in force in Monrovia each night.

Last June Mr Doe--he has dropped his rank of Master Sergeant--foiled a plot against him and had 13 military personnel involved sentenced to death. Only two months later General Thomas Weh Syen, considered the second most powerful man in the Government, and four other members of the ruling People's Redemption Council, were accused of attempting a coup and shot.

In order to strengthen his own authority the head of State does not hesitate to strike hard at the roots of trouble. During the last few weeks there has been a widespread purge against corruption which has not spared his own immediate circle.

Thus on October 29 former Justice Minister Chea Cheapoo was arrested as he tried to flee across the border to Ivory Coast after a warrant had been issued against him for alleged illegal appropriation of property.

Survival Budget

Mr Cheapoo was dismissed a month earlier for "behaviour incompatible with the administration of justice" and imprisoned for allegedly building up a private arsenal, but released soon afterwards.

Also on October 29 Finance Minister George Dunye and his deputy for social matters were dismissed in an investigation into embezzlement of public funds.

On the economic front a four-year development plan was launched in the middle of this year and what Mr Doe called "a survival budget" was adopted.

Reconstruction Tax

This budget envisages expenditure of 431.1 million dollars against revenue of 390 million--more than 43 million up on the previous budget. The extra cash was planned to come from a special "national reconstruction tax" on income, an increase in fuel and beer prices, and especially a rise in the price of the staple food, rice, from 20 dollars to 24 dollars for a 100-pound (45 kilo) bag.

Of the money raised, 230 million dollars is to be spent on the rural sector, where two-thirds of the population live, 109 million on road improvements, energy (41 million), the development of small and medium-size industries (31.3 million), education (50 million) and health (31.5 million).

When the budget was introduced, President Doe said the Government was faced with difficult choices by an economic and financial situation which remained serious.

Iron, Coffee, Cocoa

The Head of State said that apart from difficulties inherited from the Tolbert regime the world economic crisis had seriously affected Liberia. Fuel prices had not stopped rising and Liberian exporting industries had not performed satisfactorily.

One such industry is iron ore. Rising production costs and a drop in demand for steel are to blame.

Similarly the fall in world prices of coffee and cocoa have affected the agricultural sector.

Strikes have also broken out from time to time, in spite of a Government ban on such protests. In September some 1,000 teachers struck, followed in October by 600 workers of the largest iron ore mining company, LAMCO, and 900 nurses at the John F. Kennedy Medical Centre in Monrovia. All were demanding higher wages and better working conditions.

Expenditure Freeze

At the moment Monrovia is calm and internal business appears to be thriving, but problems persist. Last week President Doe decided to freeze all Government expenditures apart from salaries, and forbid Ministers and public services from buying new vehicles for the next six months.

And to show that every little helps on the long and difficult road to economic stability, the state's only Boeing 737 airliner is to be put up for sale. (AFP)

MACHEL VISITS FACIM-81, COMMENTS ON USSR, PORTUGAL PAVILIONS

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 4 Sep 81 p 3

> [Excerpts] Commander in Chief Samora Machel, chairman of the FRELIMO Party and president of the People's Republic of Mozambique, visited the Maputo International Fair [FACIM] yesterday. Accompanied by members of the Standing Political Committee, Central Committee and Council of Ministers, the country's supreme leader toured the pavilions of all countries represented at the fair. The establishment of sound cooperation with mutual benefits for the People's Republic of Mozambique and exhibiting countries was the point most noted by the chief of state during his contacts in the various pavilions. Broadening and strengthening existing relations was another feature noted.

The visit began in midmorning in the FRELIMO Party pavilion, where Samora Machel recalled several particularly significant events which occurred during the armed struggle for national liberation. The exhibit of weapons used to fight the war of liberation served as a basis for recalling memories of that time.

While passing through a section of the exhibit displaying some of these weapons, the president of the republic said: "It is interesting to see the origin of the weapons used to begin the war."

Establishing Outlets for Goods

The great qualitative leap made by the USSR, in terms of its exhibit at the fair, was hailed by Samora Machel. The large and varied range of goods directly covering the basic needs of Mozambicans was a dominant feature. But these items are still not finding their way to Mozambique.

The chief of state said: "We must provide legs for these goods so they can reach us here. We have to organize and provide legs for textiles, fishing equipment, toys and other goods exhibited here, firmly establishing cooperation in agriculture, industry and several other sectors."

With regard to the changes noted, President Samora praised the effort made, recalling that last year's exhibit gave an erroneous idea of the Soviet Union.

Displaying only tractors and cosmonauts could give the impression that the Soviet Union produces only tractors or that its main concerns are space-oriented. The present exhibit demonstrates that this is not true, that the Soviet Union provides for social needs.

The president said: "We congratulate you on your good exhibit this year, which has surpassed all previous ones. Basic aspects were considered and attention was given to women and children."

Concerning the establishment of mechanisms for beneficial cooperation, the president of the republic pointed out a mistake which Land-Rover, a British company, had made.

Countries and companies would place orders with the company and Land-Rover would promise to fill them, but would fail to do so. The president told the company representative: "Many of them instead went over to Jeep Toyota, a Japanese firm, because your company did not keep its word."

After trying to deny this fact, the representative finally admitted it and said that Land-Rover can now fill any order in just 3 to 4 months.

Mixed Companies

In the Portugal pavilion, President Samora Machel applauded the idea of cooperation for the developmental stage of mixed companies. Such a concern was mainly related to the footwear sector, for which the FAL [expansion unknown] group has determined that such a possibility exists.

Samora Machel recommended: "We must plan for the future. We have many problems in the footwear sector. If it is possible to establish mixed companies, what are we waiting for? Let's set up mixed footwear companies."

In the same pavilion, the president of the republic expressed the desire of seeing stronger cooperation in the area of shipping, utilizing the "natural highway," the ocean, linking the two countries.

In this regard, representatives of the National Shipping Company of Portugal noted that relations with Mozambique have been very good and that they had made available to us the vessel "Polana" for rescue operations of the "Castle Glory" cargo in Zambezia.

Samora Machel told the official in charge of the Portuguese pavilion that "permanent contact, permanent and not sporadic cooperation must be maintained" concerning the projects with SOREFAME and SETENAVO [expansions unknown].

PORTUGUESE PRESIDENT WELCOMED IN MAPUTO

EA251306 Maputo Domestic Service in Portuguese 0800 GMT 25 Nov 81

[Text] Official talks between the People's Republic of Mozambique and the Portuguese Republic started at the Ponta Vermelha Palace in Maputo a few moments ago. In his opening speech, President Samora Machel wished the Portuguese delegation a good stay in Mozambique--a liberated zone of humanity--in this land which has been liberated by the people and where we are fighting for the wellbeing of the people against humiliation and racism.

President Samora Machel said the visit by the Portuguese head of state to our country was an historic landmark in the friendly relations of cooperation between the two peoples and countries. He referred to the time of the national liberation armed struggle when the Mozambique liberation front led the Mozambique people to make the correct assessment of the enemy. We never confused the colonial system with the Portuguese people. It was during the national liberation struggle that we said the enemy has no color and no race. Exploitation has no color; it has no race and it has no country.

At the end of his speech, President Samora Machel said the meeting constitutes a further step in promoting relations between Mozambique and Portugal.

In reply, President Eanes said that he and his delegation represent a new Portugal, born from the 25 April revolution, a country which intended to have special relations with all the peoples of the world, including the Mozambique people.

In his speech in reply, the Portuguese head of state emphasized: The various efforts, made from time to time by one or other of us, have led to a new era of relations between our peoples. This era is characterized particularly by the unalterable respect for the sovereignty of our two countries. It is an era within a context of rapprochement, in which political dialogue and cultural dialogue are not only possible but necessary and indispensable for the defense of the convergent interests of our peoples.

General Ramalho Eanes ended by affirming that Portugal is interested in seeing the People's Republic of Mozambique remain an internally stable state. Portugal would also like to see Mozambique enjoying prestige abroad. He said that in the context of respect for the sovereignty of countries and of finding adjusted solutions to mutual interests, Mozambique could rely on Portugal, as Portugal was sure, in return, of being able to rely on Mozambique.

BELLICOSE U.S. POLICY IN CARIBBEAN DENOUNCED

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 10 Nov 81 p 5

[Article by E. Hipolito: "War Clouds in the Caribbean"]

[Text] According to international dispatches, UN diplomats were watching with concern the political situation in Central America and the Caribbean this last Monday, with the tension points centered in El Salvador, Nicaragua and Cuba. In relation to the first country, the problem was aggravated by the North American decision to intensify economic and military support to the dictatorship headed by Napoleon Duarte. The announcement was made by Alan Romberg, spokesman of the State Department, who acknowledged the instability of the Salvadoran Government. A few hours before, the Reagan administration was no longer hiding the fact that the El Salvador regime can only be rescued through more external aid in order to contain the advances of the Farabundo Marti Front for National Liberation.

As for Nicaragua, the government has publicly denounced during the last 2 months the intensification of the subversive maneuvers teleguided from Washington. After the incursions carried out from Honduras by Somoza groups and following a period of relative calm, which was achieved at talks held during the first semester of the year, Honduran military leaders changed their mind and acts of provocation against Managua started again. Tension reached its apogee with the concentration of troops near the Nicaragua border. This operation was launched during the same week that authorities revealed that a plan to assassinate leading members of the Sandinista Front and high government officials had been discovered.

The Central American press then stressed that pressure against the Nicaraguans was increasing as the Duarte government was losing ground, leading the North Americans to compromise other governments in a struggle lost before it even started. It is in such a climate that the Honduran military leaders were publicly announcing the existence of an agreement sponsored by the United States, in accordance with which cooperation in controlling the revolutionaries is carried out in the three countries --particularly on the Salvadorans--with the operation assuming a joint character. It would not be too farfetched to state that this already constitutes a first step toward a future invasion of Nicaragua.

Threat of Intervention

The help given to Duarte by Washington will mean increased political, military and economic support. Thus at an international level, in public or in private talks, the United States will do its best to rescue whatever still remains in the hands of the discredited Salvadoran Government. Moreover, while funds are granted to avoid the country's bankruptcy, the United States will not only send new military equipment, but will also reinforce the human resources at the service of the dictatorship.

The decision was made last weekend by the departments of state and defense and has been taken seriously by the threatened governments. News agencies immediately disclosed that in Cuba, revolutionary leaders had launched a call to the people to remain vigilant in the face of the imminent danger of aggression by the United States, which could also include an actual invasion.

In Nicaragua, the newspaper BARRICADA, organ of the Sandinista Front, announced in yesterday's edition that all troops had been placed on a state of alert, with civilians being called upon to be prepared to face an emergency situation. The Ministry of Interior communique came out on Sunday, when Commandant Tomas Borge stressed the need to strengthen unity in order to "repel the U.S. Government threat."

As in 1961

Some UN diplomats said yesterday that this is an explosive situation, comparing the present climate with the one that preceded the dismal failure of the United States when it attempted to invade Cuba in 1961. The Spanish news agency EFE affirmed, following a series of contacts with Latin American and North American leaders, that "something is brewing." The withdrawal of the U.S. representation in Cuba decreed by Reagan was interpreted as the opening of an action against Havana, an operation that, in the view of some political observers, could even be of a military nature, the same news agency emphasized.

The Cuban ambassador to the UN, Raul Roa, said in reference to the North American accusations that his country had sent soldiers to Nicaragua, that the Reagan administration allegations' sole purpose is to prepare public opinion for large-scale operations against Cuba and Nicaragua. The diplomat's statements mirror Fidel Castro's speech on 24 October, when he denounced a maneuver of the North American government carried out through two newsmen. An article published in the WASHINGTON POST had affirmed that between 500 and 600 Cuban soldiers had recently arrived in Managua during the second half of September on their way to El Salvador.

The Cuban leader denied the paper's statement and warned that it meant the beginning of a large-scale maneuver against his country and Central America. Subsequently, the newspaper GRANMA challenged the U.S. Government, insisting that Gen Alexander Haig--who was behind this "information"--should cite proof of the arrival of the Cuban soldiers. The Cuban request had its own reasons. According to the newspaper, the Havana government verified that Haig had sent to various embassies the statements he had had circulated in the press, affirming that he held proof of them. However, what is certain is that, despite the silence maintained in relation to the Cuban request--which wanted to know when and in what planes the troops had been transported--the State Department firmly insisted in carrying out together with the Pentagon a practically declared war against the revolutionary government of Cuba and Nicaragua.

READER PROTESTS TOURISM OFFICIAL'S ALLEGATION ON COOPERANTS

Maputo DOMINGO in Portuguese 1 Nov 81 p 10

[Text] Dear Sir: I open by apologizing for writing in Spanish, because my Portuguese is not good enough and doubtlessly the similarity between the two languages will make the contents of my letter perfectly clear.

In a past article on tourism, it is alleged that "...we already know of some cooperants who leave the hotel with bedsheets under their trousers. They have already stolen curtains, blankets, sugar bowls, dishes, etc. There are restaurants selling whisky which has not been obtained from the hotel industry, since it has been unavailable since last year. The whisky comes from cooperants who buy it at 300 meticals and then resell it at 5 or 6 times the price."

Since the entire paragraph is devoted to cooperants, it is obvious that the text implies that cooperants are to blame for the thefts and that all the whisky consumed in Mozambique is illegally sold by the cooperants.

In the eyes of a large segment of the population, cooperants are an unfairly privileged group. For a worker earning 2,280 meticals or an office clerk earning 4,500 meticals, the 25,000 meticals of a physician seem tremendously unfair; what they do not understand is that the $740 this represents are only a small part of what he would be earning in his own country.

I personally earn less than I would at home; I take in stride the difficulties of living in Mozambique, the interminable lines, the general scarcity, the problem of my children's diseases, who are studying at the Maxaquene elementary school and not at the International School, where many times they must sit on the floor because of a lack of desks; I do all that with a light heart, knowing that our efforts are contributing in small part toward building a more just society to free the Mozambican people--my brothers--of the evils afflicting them. We contribute toward bringing about in Mozambique what, in our country, is still a utopia: socialism.

For this reason, I indignantly protest these thoughtless statements so thoughtlessly published, as well as others serving the same purpose. Prejudiced statements such as "all Jews are avaricious," "all Arabs are traitors," "all Indians are traders and don't work," "all blacks dislike work," are now joined by the slogan that could be devised after reading the article.

Doubtlessly Mario Trindade denounced to the police these cases of thieves caught red-handed and those whisky contraband sellers when they came to his attention. If he did not, he would be covering up for them. I would like to know how many tens or hundreds of those cases have been proved and what percentage of the cooperants in Mozambique they represent. If they have not been denounced on if they are very few, I would doubt Mr Trindade's intentions in making these statements, since they could have an inadmissible political objective.

I hope this letter will be published and I am expecting an editorial comment on the subject. For personal reasons, I prefer to remain anonymous.

UNEMPLOYMENT, IDLENESS BREED BLACK MARKET ACTIVITIES

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 21 Nov 81 p 1

[Article by Abel Faife: "MK 3, EMOC and Co., Ltd..."]

[Text] The "MK3" and the "EMOC" (Mozambican Black Market Co.) are two satirical names very much in fashion today, born from the well-known sense of humor of the people, which springs up even in such bad and disagreeable issues such as the social plague known as black market.

Statistics provided by experts in demographic problems show that while the country's population is growing annually by 2.6 percent, the population of Maputo is growing at an annual rate of 6 percent. It is, therefore, quite clear that 3.40 percent of people annually arrive in Maputo from rural areas. This percentage represents an average of 26,520 persons who abandon productive work in the fields and migrate to Maputo. These statistics show that an average of 73 persons arrive daily in Maputo.

While numbers vary, the migration from rural to urban areas is a common phenomenon in all the cities of the country. This is a very important factor in the formation of a non-productive class that stimulates the increase in speculation and black marketeering. The people who arrive from rural areas (where they were productive) do not find employment in the city. Since they must somehow survive, they have recourse to all kinds of expedients. Among them the easiest is the purchase and (speculative) resale of products.

Of course, there are black marketeers and black marketeers! Some of them--no less pernicious, of course--are a more or less developed nucleus dealing in small items, whose earnings do not go beyond a few hundred meticals. There are others, however, who are the true "sharks," dealing in more important goods worth tens of thousands of meticals. The latter can provide everything, from fish, sugar, rice and flour to potatoes, drinks and everything else that does not exist on the market.

An operation is being carried out to solve this social problem, but it is still in an embryonic stage. Following an in-depth study of the problem by party and government organs in Maputo, it was determined that a census of all unemployed persons should take place in all the districts of Greater Maputo; this is already being done.

Such a measure will permit a better organization of resources and conditions to involve these people in productive work, channeling them into the green areas program.

This initiative is correct. Only through such action will that parasitic nucleus concentrated in Maputo and other cities be progressively eliminated: non-productive individuals such as these are a burden to all those who work.

In the face of the economic difficulties affecting the country, the lack of training and directives for these marginal individuals can only result in an increase of the contraband circuits.

INCREASINGLY VISIBLE PRESENCE OF NRM NOTED

Paris LE MONDE in French 18 Nov 81 p 4

[Article by Jean-Pierre Langellier]

[Excerpts] Nairobi--During the past several weeks, the armed rebels of the National Resistance Movement (NRM) have intensified their operations against economic targets that are difficult to protect. In the most recent operation, on 13 November a commando destroyed eight buoys marking the access to the port of Beira. This sabotage action is the first conducted in Beira following the bombings by the Rhodesian air force more than 2 years ago.

An NRM spokesman in Lisbon, M. Fernandes, provided the details on how the operation was carried out. According to him, the boat transporting the saboteurs left from the port itself, where these people are employed. He estimated that shipping would be impaired for about 10 days. Indeed, access to the wharves is a delicate operation requiring tugboat assistance even in normal times. The NRM details appear plausible. Is it not President Samora Machel himself who, in a celebrated speech in March 1980, condemned the enemies of the revolution by proclaiming: "The internal enemy is everywhere, in the enterprises, the administration, in the ports...?"

The Beira-Umtali rail line will be repaired by the beginning of December. On the other hand, it will be January before the pipeline--measuring about 300 kms--will again bring oil to Zimbabwe. The Lonrho company, which operates the pipeline, is thinking of "burying" it completely in order to make it less vulnerable to sabotage. The NRM's strategy is clear: isolate Beira from the rest of the country and obstruct the traffic of goods between this port and the landlocked countries it serves: Zimbabwe, Zambia, Zaire and Malawi.

President Machel is accusing South Africa of attempting, through the NRM, to defeat his plans for economic emancipation, whose success, naturally, presupposes the good functioning of Mozambican ports and rail lines. Doubtlessly the NRM, despite its denials, enjoys significant South African logistical support (namely parachute drops of weapons and ammunition). According to reports of witnesses and deserters presented in Maputo, some rebels receive military training in South Africa, provided by Portuguese and former Rhodesian instructors. Rebel leaders reportedly are transported to the field by South African helicopters. The Voice of Free Africa doubtlessly broadcasts from somewhere in the Transvaal. South African planes overfly Mozambican territory with impunity.

Even if the NRM does not hold any "liberated areas," it is increasingly embarrassing to authorities in Maputo. Thanks to its South African "sanctuaries," it seems that it has recovered quite well after the destruction of its headquarters in Sitatonga in 1980 by the Mozambican army. It reportedly numbers from 3,000 to 5,000 men. The southern part of the province of Manica remains its privileged field of action. It now operates south of the Save River and has infiltrated fighters in the provinces of Gaza and Inhambane. The dissident movement enjoys a measure of support among the peasantry, which is often backward and whose traditional individualism it exalts. Its task is made easier by the fact that during the war of independence, the FRELIMO never succeeded in implanting itself well in this central area.

Like Jonas Savimbi's UNITA, the NRM is attempting to completely cut off the peasantry from official distribution circuits. For instance, the people are totally deprived of sugar and salt, that can only be obtained from the government. Thence the FRELIMO's interest in grouping the peasants in "communal villages," where they would enjoy basic services: health, education, use of agricultural equipment, motor pumps, etc. These fortified villages are the favorite targets of rebel attacks.

BEIRA MEETING FOCUSES ON SABOTAGE ACTIVITIES

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 19 Nov 81 p 1

[Excerpt] The objectives and the meaning of the constant sabotage actions by the enemy against economic targets in our country were the focus of the meeting held yesterday under the chairmanship of Armando Guebuza in the provincial capital of Sofala.

In a speech to representatives of the FRELIMO party cells in commercial enterprises and residence localities, the deputy minister of defense, Lt Gen Armando Guebuza affirmed that these sabotage activities are aimed at destabilizing the economic development of the independent states of the region.

Armando Guebuza, who is temporarily substituting for the minister-resident in Beira, Mariano Matsinhe, also included the enemy actions within the framework of the global strategy of imperialism aimed at preventing the development of regional cooperation among the countries members of the SADCC [Southern Africa Development Cooperation Conference].

At this meeting, Armando Guebuza stressed the need for the people of the city of Beira to increase their vigilance under the guidance of their grassroots structures in order to ensure the detection and arrest of all enemy agents infiltrated in their midst.

RAILROAD LINK WITH SOUTH AFRICA DAMAGED

Derailment Described

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 18 Nov 81 p 10

[Text] The sole railroad link between Mozambique and South Africa has been obstructed since last Saturday because of the derailment of a convoy of gasoline and sodium cars which occurred near Ressano Garcia. Rescue operations are made more difficult by the fact that a car carrying 38,000 liters of gasoline fell under the bridge where the derailment took place, precluding any attempt to solder the rails.

The convoy, which was on its way to South Africa, was made up of 19 gasoline tankers carrying about 700,000 liters and 2 cars carrying sodium.

According to a railroad official, the derailment was caused by the expansion of the rails due to the very high temperatures registered last Saturday.

As a result, about 38,000 liters of gasoline spilled from 11 tankers. To date, 70,000 liters of gasoline have been lost, and the bridge has been seriously damaged, the railroad official stated.

A team of technicians was dispatched to the scene of the accident and has started rescue operations. The line has been cleared down to the end of the bridge.

Empty tanker cars have been sent to the spot in order to begin pumping operations for the gasoline. Once this is completed, the bridge will be repaired quite rapidly.

At any rate, it is not known when railroad traffic will resume.

Railroad Line Opened

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 20 Nov 81 p 10

[Excerpt] Rail access between Mozambique and South Africa, which had been closed since last Saturday, has already been opened to traffic since 1730 hours yesterday. The first train carrying 103 passengers passed the bridge that had been demolished since last Saturday on its way to Ressano Garcia. The train left at 1730 hours and arrived at 1818 hours. The line had been closed following the derailment of 11 railroad tankers carrying 700,000 liters of gasoline and 2 cars transporting sodium.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE COOPERATION WITH USSR, PORTUGAL DESCRIBED

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 4 Sep 81 p 10

> [Text] The development of economic-trade relations, basically in the context of transactions between foreign trade organizations, was the subject of two agreements concluded yesterday in Maputo by our country's Chamber of Commerce with the Chamber of Commerce and Industry of the Soviet Union and with Portugal's Export Promotion Fund.

Both agreements provide for the development of bilateral contacts in the area of economic-trade relations, the exchange of information in the area of foreign trade, and holding conferences, symposia and meetings in various fields with a view to broadening both sides' knowledge of economic and technical-scientific development.

Step Forward

The significance of such action for strengthening existing relations between our two peoples and countries was enhanced and both parties' determination to contribute to the development of foreign trade was affirmed by the signing of the cooperation agreement between the Chamber of Commerce of the People's Republic of Mozambique and the Chamber of Commerce and Industry of the USSR, which was attended by the commercial attache of the Soviet Embassy in Mozambique.

Dr Armindo de Brito, chairman of our country's chamber of commerce, pointed out that this agreement constitutes a further front in the joint struggle for cooperation at all levels between our peoples and countries and that in the area of trade, the chambers of commerce of the People's Republic of Mozambique and the USSR have broad possibilities for helping to bring about even closer relations of friendship and cooperation.

The first deputy chairman of the Chamber of Commerce and Industry of the Soviet Union, E. P. Pitovran, in turn noted the significance of this action, stating that it is "part of joint cooperation between our two peoples and countries."

In concluding the cooperation agreement between our country's Chamber of Commerce and the Export Promotion Fund of Portugal, which was also attended by the commercial attache of the Portuguese Embassy in Mozambique, Dr Armindo de Brito described the action as a means to stimulate the development of relations and friendship between the peoples and countries of Mozambique and Portugal in the area of foreign trade.

Dr Leite de Araujo, chairman of the Export Promotion Fund of Portugal, stressed that "we are on the right track in trying to move ahead without preconceptions; the hardest part is past and now we must do everything we can to develop cooperation in the interest and to the mutual advantage of our peoples and countries."

PRIVATE BUSINESSMEN ACCUSED OF DISHONESTY

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 25 Aug 81 p 3

[Excerpts] Dishonest private businessmen in Cuamba and Niassa are threatening to foil the farm marketing campaign. They are forcing the people to barter products, even requiring a 20-kg container of corn in exchange for one bar of soap.

Such actions are not in keeping with the incentives established by the Ministry of Domestic Trade, which this year distributed hoes, machetes, scythes and bicycles, among other goods, in an effort to promote marketing.

Despite all these maneuvers, 56 tons of various agricultural produce have already been marketed in Cuamba.

Beeswax is one product which was put on the market just this year. As a result, only 501 kg have been purchased from the people since the campaign in Niassa began on 6 July.

It should be noted, however, that the wax has a high price on the international market. The latest reports which we have obtained place this product's value at $4,800 per ton.

Of the amount listed above, 380 kg are high quality wax, 103 kg are second class and 18 kg are third class.

Problems

The family sector in Cuamba will not be able to achieve the goals planned, mainly in the case of corn. The primary reason cited for nonfulfillment of the plans is the lack of rainfall during a good part of the season.

It should also be mentioned that a large part of Cuamba's population does not grow corn as the principal crop. They are more involved in raising "mapira" [variety of sorghum or corn in Zambezia] and manioc, which are also basic commodities of the area.

In addition to "mapira" and manioc, the people of Cuamba give special attention to sunflowers and cotton as cash crops, despite the fact that so far everything indicates that the arable land is favorable for growing corn.

In contrast, the private sector will be able to surpass the targets established. It is even expected to offset the family sector's deficit.

With regard to beans and other local produce, everything suggests a significant improvement. There are even hopes that the plans will be achieved early in the season.

UNLOADED FISH CATCHES DO NOT REACH MARKET

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 11 Nov 81 p 2

[Arricle by Leandro Paul]

[Excerpts] The fact that thousands of kilos of fish are unloaded in the port of Maputo every day for the capital's markets and minimal quantities of fish are sold in them seems to be a daily paradox. As a result, the people have only two alternatives: they either don't eat fish or buy it at exorbitant prices.

For 2 years now, fish markets in the capital have had empty shelves. Meanwhile, our waters abound in crab, lobster, whiting, skate and other fish. However, these rarely make their appearance on the market, despite the fact that both state and private fishing companies unload their catches at the port.

Groups of people wait every day at the port for the boats to return. They wish to buy the fish given away to crew members, who then resell it. Joao Chemane, a crew member from the boat "Carapua," told us that "I get 2 kilos of fish every day." There are many fishermen who get part of the day's catch. When queried, they reply that the fish has been offered to them by the shipowners for their own consumption, which is indeed true. Fart or most of this is sold later by crew members in several locations.

Hundreds of containers with thousands of kilos of fish are registered every day at the port. These amounts of fish are intended for sale in the capital's markets. But shipowners sell their catch to fixed customers, without adhering to the regulations issued by the port administration specifying the markets to which the fish should be sold. These same customers then assign the sale of the fish to unemployed persons at speculative prices.

The sale of the fish directly from customer to customer has resulted in ever increasing fish prices. Some of the shipowners reached said that the reason for these illegal transactions is because the price of fish has not been revised, and their earnings do not cover maintenance costs and salaries of the crew. Some of them stated that they must resort to them in order to survive and not stop fishing activities altogether.

CASHEW GOAL UNFULFILLED--The INDOCAJU (Cashew Processing Plant) expects to produce 1,200 tons of cashews until the end of the year, out of the 1,800 tons planned. Among the reasons militating against fulfillment of the plan are the lack of qualified manpower, the lack of spare parts for the equipment and the shortage of water. TARIFF AGREEMENT WITH TANZANIA--Maputo, November 17--Mozambique and Tanzania have agreed to progressively remove tariffs on all exports and imports over the next 10 years, the Mozambican News Agency reported here today. The agreement for a free trade zone between the two African neighbours is to take effect in January. The news agency said the bilateral agreement would have no effect on the preferential trade area agreement that is to be signed next month in Lusaka, Zambia, by 18 Eastern and Southern African states including Mozambique and Tanzania. The Mozambican agency added that, to help accommodate increasing Mozambican-Tanzanian trade, plans were being made to build a bridge across the Rovuma River, which forms the common border. (In April, the Tanzanian Government newspaper DAILY NEWS reported that Tanzania and Mozambique had agreed to increase their trade with each other, worth about 18.75 million U.S. dollars in each of the past two years.) (The newspaper said Tanzania had agreed to import truck and tractor tires, welding electrodes and mosquito gauzes from Mozambique, while Mozambique was to buy coffee and coca beans, aluminium products and textiles from Tanzania). TEXTILE PLANT LOSSES--More than 20,000 contos have been lost as a result of delays in the construction of the TEXMOQUE textile plant in Nampula, the Construtora do Tamega company manager has stated. The lack of construction equipment, as well as other unspecified factors unrelated to the construction company have delayed the completion of the work, which has now been postponed for the end of the first half of 1982, the same official said. However, even this timetable will not be observed if supplies of iron, stone and bricks are unavailable. Needed investments to complete the work amount to more than 220,000 contos, the Tamega manager added. The TEXMOQUE plant covers an area of 40,000 square meters; the production line and the professional training center are already installed, while a cafeteria and office facilities are being completed at this time. REPLY ON CONSTITUTIONAL GUIDELINES AWAITED--British officials say the acceptance by SWAPO and black African states that have concerned themselves with South-West Africa/Namibia of Western proposals for the territory have strengthened hopes of an early settlement of the dispute. The six so-called frontline states--Angola, Botswana, Mozambique, Zambia, Tanzania and Zimbabwe--together with Nigeria and Kenya as well as SWAPO earlier accepted the Western constitutional guidelines in principle. The general secretary of the Democratic Turnhalle Alliance, Mr Johan de Waal, said the alliance was now waiting for the Western contact group to reply to a request for further clarification on the constitutional guidelines for independence. The largest opposition group in the South-West African National Assembly, AKTUR [Action Front for the Preservation of Turnhalle Principles], has told the Western contact group that it does not agree that South-West Africa/Namibia should be a unitary state in the Westminister sense. The chairman of AKTUR, Mr Pretorius, released the contents of a document which his party has handed to the United States and British Embassy representatives in Windhoek earlier this week. AKTUR said the circumstances of South-West Africa/Namibia demanded that it should be a federal state or a number of confederal states. He said that explanations by the contact group indicated that a federal structure or confederation based on ethnic groups would not be internationally acceptable. MAJOR ADAMOU ADDRESSES OPENING SESSION OF DEVELOPMENT BODY

Niamey LE SAHEL in French 10 Nov 81 p 3

[Excerpt] The fourth session of the National Commission for the establishment of the Development Company began its work yesterday morning at the former National Assembly under the chairmanship of Maj Moumouni Djermakoye Adamou president of the above-mentioned company.

The opening cermony, during which we noted the presence of Gen Dupuis Henri Yacouba, grand chancellor of the National Order of Niger and several members of the government and of the Development Company, was highlighted by a speech given by Maj Moumouni Djermakoye Adamou.

"Our meeting yesterday," he recalled, "had the objective of beginning the process which is to lead to the creation of the institutions of the Development Company."

There are three topics on the agenda of this fourth working session:

--Report on the government's adoption of the final report;
--Definition of a strategy for the second phase of the work; and
--Miscellaneous matters.

With respect to the first topic, this involved a report to the members of the National Commission on the different amendments (and the reasons for these amendments) made by the government before adopting the final report.

The second topic relates to the effective creation of the institutions described in the final report. The participants will develop the strategy which will lead to covering the entire country with cooperatives, Samaria and other development bodies. In this context, the subcommission for administrative structures, the subcommission in charge of cooperatives and the subcommission responsible for the Samaria and promotion met yesterday evening.

The recommendations which will be made by these subcommissions will be presented to the various participants today during a plenary session beginning at 1000 hours at the former National Assembly.

"After a hiatus following the first phase of our work and coinciding with the agricultural season which kept many of us in the fields or on the plains, we have returned here more confident, determined and committed to work for the creation of the Development Company.

"We have met today to consider and to set in motion the process of the second phase of our mission.

"The first phase, as you know, ended with the transmission to the government of the results of our investigations and thoughts. You also know that the results of that first phase of our work were included in the final report in the form of pertinent and realistic proposals and recommendations dealing with the definition of a development policy for our country.

"The government, which examined this report with the close attention required by the particular importance of the subject matter, approved it on 17 July 1981.

"Thus, by a national consensus of all the popular organizations on the one hand and between these organizations and the government on the other hand, we Nigeriens, after long and rewarding deliberation, have just determined the shape of our society of tomorrow, as the plan resulting from this consensus will be the line of our future institutions.

"As I remember it, our meeting yesterday had the objective of initiating the process which is to lead to creation of the institutions of the Development Company.

"Taking our inspiration from directives of the chief of state, we will organize the second phase of our mission in the following way:

"--Complete the installation of the structures of the Samaria and cooperatives and concomitantly to exercise surveillance over their balance so that they will evolve symbiotically.

"--Install the structures agreed upon; i.e., the development councils at the different echelons of the administrative organization so that over time our villages, tribes and districts will be covered by development cells which will permit and promote the motivation and mobilization of the people with a view to their participation in every action whose purpose is improving life in the villages, camps or districts and strengthening national solidarity.

"Finally, while waiting to install a more elaborate structure at the state level, indoctrination, information and reconversion of minds, actions should be continued and intensified.

"Ladies and gentlemen, members of the National Commission for the establishment of the Development Company, these, then, will be the four components of the second phase of our work.

"At this time, I should like once again to call upon your patriatism and your high sense of the responsibilities which have enabled us with complete seriousness and success, as you know, to complete the first phase of our mission.

"As for the phase that you will be undertaking, you will have to surpass yourselves even more. The imperatives of national construction require more zeal and sacrifice from us as well as commitment, as this is the most active phase.

"We must now maintain contact with the 9,000 villages which are the rank-and-file cells of our national collectivity."

OPVN'S NEW PHILOSOPHY OF OPERATION DESCRIBED

Niamey LE SAHEL in French No 291, 26 Oct 81 p 9

[Article by Kailou Youssouf: "OPVN: The New Philosophy--Intervene as effectively as possible, when and where needed"]

[Text] After 1 October 1981, no more millet or sorghum will be sold by the OPVN [Nigerian Foodstuffs Office] until April 1982. This new arrangement, which puts the OPVN back on its feet, is intended to insure a good stock of cereals for effective intervention when needed.

"We want the OPVN to have enough cereal in its stores to be able to intervene during the hard times beginning in May and ending, good year or bad, around the middle of August; we also want to be able to set a price that will reflect the cost--something that didn't happen last year." The head of state, who spoke thus at a press conference given to allow him to convey his thoughts about the 1981 agricultural and rural campaign, also said that the OPVN which until now had operated "like a commercial enterprise," should return to "its primary function, to wit, act for the good of the people by maintaining sufficient stocks in its warehouses."

Therefore a new OPVN orientation is needed. From now on the OPVN's intervention philosophy will be geared to price stabilization and building up reserve stocks. There are two stages of price stabilization policy.

The first stage will concentrate on purchases of products made at the end of the agricultural season. At this time merchants tend to buy millet, sorghum and rice by the sack at incredibly low prices. To combat this practice the OPVN director informed us that "....We are acting throughout the entire nation, injecting enough money to buy up surplus production at an advantageous price fixed by the government." These OPVN prices will encourage farmers to produce much more millet, sorghum and rice.

The second stage of stabilization will take place at the moment of need, at which time merchants tend to create shortages on the markets in order to make huge profits. "At this exact moment the OPVN will release its stocks onto the market so as to abruptly bring down prices," said the OPVN director.

In order to have enough grain for this period, OPVN, which has at its disposal 32,239 tons for stabilization, and 12,000 tons of further reserves, has decided to sell no millet or sorghum from October 1981 to April 1982. Last year, during the same period, OPVN sold 28,267 tons of millet and sorghum.

With current stocks (32,239 tons for stabilization and 12,000 tons in reserve stocks), plus an additional 121,000 tons of millet and sorghum (the anticipated sum of local purchases and imports for this year), it can be said that OPVN will be able to effectively battle speculation during the period that the grain is needed.

But until May 1982, how will people in underproductive zones and in the big cities be able to find millet and sorghum? It appears that these deficient zones are currently being studied. Decisions will be made on them after a complete assessment of the needs of the people concerned has been made. That leaves the big cities. Explicit instructions have been given to businessmen to prevent shortages on the markets.

As for the director of OPVN, he asked residents of large cities to make an effort to "produce the cereals themselves by working fields during off hours. They can also aid their relatives in growing crops and get food supplies from them when needed."

For OPVN Director Adamou Souna, "being the head of a family means above all having foresight.

Furthermore, "the tendency to regard OPVN as the family granary must be suppressed," he forcefully emphasized. He then stated that big city inhabitants must take all the necessary measures to create a reserve stock for the family to hold it until the OPVN reopens its doors.

The time of abuse is therefore almost over. But "frequenters" of OPVN fear an increase in millet and sorghum prices on markets where simple negligence on the part of the merchants can cause demand to exceed supply: they wonder at what price they can buy a sack of millet or sorghum? They also wonder how to exercise price control. The commission against expensive living (if it still exists) may again have a lot of work on its hands.

EDF ROAD AID--The Commission of the European Economic Community has just approved financing totaling 5 billion CFA [African Financial Community] francs for two highway projects on National Route No 1 in Niger. This west-east highway, which covers 1,500 kilomerers, from Niamey to Lake Chad, has, since the first EDF, been the subject of numerous Community loans amounting to a total of 18 billion CFA francs. These new projects on the one hand are designed to widen the asphalt road surface from 5.5 meters to 6 meters between Guidan Roumdji and Tchadaoua, that is, a distance of 97 kilometers (for traffic of over 100 vehicles per day) and on the other hand to pave with asphalt a 6-meter wide road covering the present 21-kilometer highway linking Zinder with Mirriah on which over 100 vehicles daily also travel. At Mirriah the new road will join the road which runs to Lake Chad. Henceforth, the entire Niamey-Lake Chad road will be an asphalt-paved road. This is all the more important because the road is part of the Trans-African highway. The projects are scheduled to last 24 months and their cost of about 5 billion CFA francs was approved under the title of nonreimbursable aid from the fifth EDF. CONVERGENCE OF VIEWS--Daouda Diallo, minister of foreign affairs and cooperation, emphasized Friday the convergence of views between France and Niger in "the analysis of political and economic problems in Africa" and in matters of cooperation. In a speech made in Paris at the closing meeting of the Franco-Nigerien Joint Cooperation Commission, the minister said: "French policy echos our own concerns and convictions: development of cooperation, cooperation in friendship and mutual respect for partners." Daouda Diallo also said that President Francois Mitterrand's conception of north-south relations derives from a "very high view of the problems of this world and the future of mankind." In his reply, Jean-Poerre Cot, French minister of cooperation and development, said that the joint commission, with respect to the priorities established by the Nigerien government, had placed particular stress on aid for rural development and the development of transportation and telecommunications. 'AFP' REPORTS EYEWITNESS ACCOUNT OF 25 NOVEMBER EVENTS

[Text] Victoria, Seychelles, 28 Nov (AFP)--The mercenaries involved in Wednesday's brief seizure of the airport on the Seychelles main island, Mahe, were discovered by chance as they tried to infiltrate the country with their weapons, according to reports here.

The Seychelles AGENCE PRESSE, quoting police and customs officials taken hostage by the mercenary force, reported that the passenger terminal and control tower at Pointe Larue International Airport were seized only after arms were found in false-bottomed suitcases.

(One batch of 47 mercenaries later fled to South Africa aboard a hijacked Air India jet, but a group of stragglers is still being hunted in hills around the airport.)

A policewoman who managed to alert police headquarters in the capital, Victoria, by radio before being taken hostage, said that most of the passengers aboard the Royal Swazi Airline charter flight had gone through the nothing-to-declare gate when a custom officer decided to take a closer look at the luggage of one of the remaining passengers.

The mercenaries were boarding two buses to go to a hotel when an official spotted the nose of a gun in one suitcase, and other weapons were found hidden under toys and sweets marked as gifts for the local rehabilitation centre for the disabled.

A police sergeant ordered a thorough search of the rest of the luggage, most of which had been stacked on the buses' roof racks.

Continuing her version of the dramatic events, policewoman Flavienne Pothin said that a big man jumped out of one of the buses and called out get down boys.

Some of the mercenaries climbed onto the bus roofs and started assembling the other weapons.

As Mrs Pothin was alerting headquarters by radio police sergeant Kerchen Esparon grabbed the gun that had exposed the mercenaries and rushed out of the guardroom. The policewoman heard two shots, followed by cries that the sergeant had been hit.

(Speaking from his hospital bed, the sergeant said that he was hit in the shoulder, but in the confusion managed to escape towards Victoria by taxi.)

Meanwhile Mrs Pothin and 100 other people left on the scene were rounded up by the mercenaries and kept in the traffic room, but she had spotted two members of the invasion force stretched on the ground near the buses. One seemed to be dead, the other injured, and they are thought to have been shot by Sergeant Esparon with the giveway gun.

Mrs Pothin said that after the Air India flight arrived, armed men ordered ground engineers among the hostages to service the plane.

Duty station officer Patrick Elizabeth, who was one of the hostages, said that the mercenaries communicated with each other using codes and signals.

Before the Air India Boeing-707 took off, Mr Elizabeth and two other Seychellois who had been forced to service the plane were warned that at least three mercenaries had remained in the terminal building and would kill the hostages if attempts were made to warn surrounding Seychellois troops of the escape aboard the plane.

Mr Elizabeth said that the passengers on the Royal Swazi flight included one woman and their hand luggage carried identical stickers suggesting that they were travelling in a group.

Meanwhile today's edition of the daily NATION printed greetings from the government and people of the Seychelles to tourists stranded as a result of the bungled coup plot.

That you are not at present enjoying your stay with us is the fault of ruthless men who are prepared to destroy the hard work of a people for their own greed the message said. Having just had our way of life threatened and with some of those paid killers still at large, we have been compelled to take such serious precautions which, unfortunately are causing you inconvenience. We are sure, however, that you understand and appreciate that the curfew is for the security of our country and thus yours, too, while you are our guests.

MERCENARY LED SEYCHELLES COUP ATTEMPT

AB271114 Paris AFP in English 1053 GMT 27 Nov 81

[Text] Johannesburg, 27 Nov (AFP)--The 47-strong commando involved in Wednesday's abortive invasion of the Seychelles set out from Johannesburg on Tuesday via Swaziland disguised as a rugby party.

Johannesburg's RAND DAILY MAIL reported that the force travelled by bus to Ermelo, a small eastern Transvaal town about 100 kms (65 miles) from the Swazi border, where the members spent Tuesday night in a motel.

The group leader was Peter Duffy, a photographer in his mid-fifties who worked for the Durban SUNDAY TRIBUNE, the MAIL reported. However, according to informed sources Peter Duffy is a former Congo (now Zaire) mercenary and personal friend of Colonel Mike Hoare, one of the better-known soldiers of fortune from that period.

The Johannesburg daily said that each member of the force wore a badge declaring him a member of the Foam Blowers.

On Wednesday morning the 47 mercenaries--who according to the Johannesburg STAR were hired for 1,000 rands (dollars) with promises of 10 times as much in the event of success--crossed the border and went to Matsapa Airfield, between Mbabane and Manzini, the MAIL continued.

From there the commando took off in a Royal Swazi Airlines Fokker F-28 jet for Mahe, reportedly stopping over in the Comoro Islands.

Captain Umesh Saxena, pilot of the Air India Boeing 707 hijacked by the mercenary survivors to escape from the Seychelles, confirmed that one mercenary was killed and two others wounded during the fighting at Point Larue Airport. He also said that one member of the mercenary force, a former helicopter pilot, remained on the flight deck during the trip from Mahe to Durban to make sure the crew obeyed instructions given by Duffy.

South African police chief General Mike Geldenhuys has confirmed that 44 percenaries were jailed in Pretoria yesterday after their surrender to transport police, but he declined to divulge their nationalities or identities.

THE RAND DAILY MAIL, quoting a well-placed source, said that more than 30 of the 47 hijackers were former members of South Africa's reconnaissance commando regiment, which has frequently operated in southern Angola.

CHANGES IN NATION'S CONSTITUTION EXAMINED

London WEST AFRICA in English 2 Nov 81 pp 2574-2576

[Text]

PRESIDENT STEVENS has told the nation about his wish to retire after the elections, to give an opportunity to a younger person to assume the presidency. The President, who was addressing the closing session of the three-day biennial convention of the ruling All Peoples Congress (APC) at Sucktarr near Lungi, said: "For as long as I live, I will continue to serve the party and do everything within my capability for the benefit of the country. If the boat is in trouble, I shall be there to guide it, but the time has now come when I should give up and allow someone else to carry on." The President reiterated this desire in the four major languages — English, Krio, Temne, and Mende and urged the nation to begin to think seriously about a younger successor.

Dr. Stevens gave the date of the General Elections as "end of January or early in February next year" and said that the timing has had to be changed because of certain constitutional conditions which have to be fulfilled. Parliament he said, has to be prorogued at leat 90 days before the elections. In addition, he went on, the revised party constitution states that civil servants desirous of contesting the elections should give three months' notice to resign their appointments. The President warned all prospective candidates not to allow their followers to make trouble or to molest their opponents, and said the elections must be conducted within the context of law and order. Each constituency, he said will have a chance to choose from two or three candidates.

President Stevens thanked the delegates for reappointing him secretary general and leader of the party. He observed that there had been differences throughout the deliberations but pointed out that there was bound to be differences in any democratic situation. "We must always agree to disagree and concede to the consensus of the majority," he said.

President Stevens finally thanked the army for providing the venue for the conference in the compound of their new barracks at Sucktarr, and urged everyone to join the party and work in the interest of the country.

The convention, which was the seventh since the party was founded in 1960, and the second since the one party system of government came into being, adopted the new 1981 draft APC party Constitution which had already received the approval of the central committee. The Constitution spells out the aims, objectives and philosophy of the party, its membership and organisational structure. It makes provision for constituency branches, district branches, a governing council, a central committee, the national delegates conference, the national secretariat, constituent and affiliated organisations, party institutions and symbols, and the procedures for primary elections for Parliament. Seven working committees were set up during the convention to study and report on the following matters: the organisation of the party; the party finances; paramount chiefs and members of parliament; education; agriculture and other matters; migration and control of strangers and resolutions.

At the concluding session of the convention, the chairman of the Resolutions Committee, Dr. Abdulai Conteh who is also Minister of Foreign Affairs, listed a number of resolutions adopted by the various working committees. These were adopted by the convention.

On the organisation of the party, the convention resolved to enforce party discipline and to prescribe a code of conduct for party and other public officers, to provide necessary facilities for APC women and APC youth organisations, and in particular to establish a standing committee on the structure and functions of the organs of the party.

Regarding the party's finances, the convention stressed the need for a firm financial foundation for the proper functioning of the party. It was resolved that monthly party dues be deducted at source, ranging from 20 cents a month for lowly paid workers to le10 per month for those earning over le10,000 per year. Constituency and district branches were urged to redouble their efforts in the collection of membership dues, etc. Government was also urged to provide annual subvention for the operation of the party.

On paramount chiefs and members of parliament, the convention recognised that the institution of chieftaincy was a vital part of national life, and should therefore play a more active role in the development of the country. It was resolved that paramount chiefs should meet at the national level at least once a year. The convention further recommended that housing and paramount chiefs in keeping with their status; that they should be empowered to recommend appointments of chiefdom speakers and sub-chiefs; and that the method of appointing local court chairmen be reviewed. The convention also believed that paramount chiefs should be protected against harassment and other forms of disrespect; that they should have the power to encourage their people to engage in self-help projects within their chiefdoms, and that government should set up a national commission to recommend how best to improve the institution of paramount chieftaincy. The conference further urged paramount chiefs and members of parliament to co-operate for the development of their areas, and recommended that members of parliament should be provided with means of transportation during the lifetime of each parliament.

The convention passed a 23-point resolution on education which among other things called for standard uniforms for all secondary and primary schools, free primary education at all levels, and the reduction of the high cost of education. It was recommended that as far as possible, text books should be produced locally, otherwise the government should buy text books directly from publishers on behalf of the schools, and that certain textbooks should be utilised for a number of years all over the country. Fewer textbooks should be prescribed for particular subjects.

The convention further recommended that the APC party history and ideology transportation facilities be provided for should be taught in all schools. The present structure of the university is to be reviewed to make it relevant to the needs of the country, and further attention should be paid to discipline in all educational institutions. Indigenous languages were recommended as the media of instruction for all schools.

The convention also passed a 14-point resolution on agriculture which sought to decentralise the functions of the Ministry of Agriculture and Forestry, and unify the land tenure system in the provinces to facilitate the development of commercial agriculture. It was recommended that improved crop storage facilities and low interest rate loans should be provided for farmers.

The growing number of unemployed youth were noted and the convention resolved to establish a national service and a training scheme with an agricultural bias which would provide opportunities for their training and discipline. The convention was concerned at the declining rate of local food convention, and stressed that the country must be self-sufficient and self-reliant as regards food production. To this end, government was called upon to set up a national committee to look into the problem and make recommendations. It was also recommended that agriculture should be taught as a subject from primary schools upwards, and that graduates in agriculture should be adequately utilised by the Ministry of Agriculture.

On migration and control of strangers, the convention expressed concern at the alarming trend in the rate of rural migration into urban centres, as well as the continued increase in the influx of non-citizens into the country, and recommended a number of measures for the consideration of government to stop the situation. These included the immediate reporting to the police, district officers, rural authorities, paramount chiefs, town chiefs, village headmen, etc., of the arrival of strangers; the establishment of permanent checkpoints to examine national identity cards, and the introduction of national registration at chiefdom level.

The convention also requested government in co-operation with neighbouring countries, to secure the effective protection and control of the country's borders, both land and sea. It finally mandated the Central Committee to set up a Standing Committee to ensure the implementation of resolutions taken at national party conventions.

The convention re-elected President Siaka Stevens, founder of the party as secretary general and party leader. Two vice-chairmen were elected for the first time. First Vice-President S. I. Koroma became first vice-chairman of the party and Second Vice-President C. A. Kamara Taylor became second vice-chairman. The former assistant to the secretary general, Mr. E. T. Kamara was elected national executive secretary, and Mr. S. A. Fofana retained his position of national organising and propaganda secretary. Mr. D. F. Shears, Minister of Tourism, was re-elected treasurer.

The convention created an 11-man governing council in keeping to the new party Constitution, and a new 49-man central committee. Regional organising and propaganda secretaries for the north, east, south and western area were also elected.

COST OF OIL--Paying for oil imports takes up most of Sierra Leone's foreign exchange earnings and the country is just managing to exist, President Siaka Stevens told the conference of the All People's Congress (APC). "The little foreign exchange we have left after payments for oil is what we now use to import rice," he added. President Stevens said the drift of farmers from the rice-producing areas and the influx of foreigners uses up a sizeable portion of the country's food supply and causes great strain on the country's economy. Half of the goods imported into Sierra Leone find their way out of the country without equivalent returns in foreign exchange, he added, in an apparent reference to smuggling. AFRIKANER SPLIT MAY PRODUCE SURVIVAL POLICY

[Editorial]

[Text]

IT'S not a bad thing that the volk should be in a questioning mood.

That the rather dour and unshakable Afrikaans churches should have verligte voices in their midst, arguing about matters such as the secrecy of the Broederbond and the validity or otherwise of the country's racial policies in relation to the Scriptures.

From time to time, there have been rows involving theologians that have threatened some of the basic tenets of these churches, but in the end, the traditional and conservative viewpoint has prevailed.

One senses this time, however, that there is a groping in Afrikanerdom for new approaches, new understandings, new policies.

The volk is in travail. Events outside our borders have shaken many Afrikaans-speakers. The enemy is at our gates. Around us are Black States which are mainly Marxist.

They are our enemies, whatever temporary accommodations we may make with them, and they with us, in trade and transport and other facilities.

Rhodesia, which it was hoped would be a White bastion to the north, or under moderate Black rule with strong White participation, has gone Black and the Whites are exiting their once beloved country by the thousands.

UDI, necessary though it was, proved fruitless. The sacrifices of the seven-year war were in vain.

The terrorists not only won, but are feted throughout the world, their past crimes forgotten; their present, undemocratic actions condoned; their threat to turn Zimbabwe into a one-party State shrugged off as being of no consequence; the reduction in living standards and the debilitation of the economy excused.

South West Africa, it now seems, may go the same way under a United Nations-supervised election.

Swapo, the enemy, with United Nations blessing and support, may find itself in power.

The war on the border, if that happens, may then have been in vain.

But we have no alternative but to fight for what we believe in — a South West Africa not subjected to the intimidation and duress of the men with the guns from across the border, but a territory that comes to full independence by the free will of its people as expressed through free elections.

You might ask why we shouldn't fight on, regardless, why we shouldn't defy the United States and the rest of the world, why the Western plan should be allowed to prevail.

It is argued that we cannot hold the fortress forever on our own, at huge cost, and possibly be subjected to sanctions.

Whether this is so or not, we hope that when South Africa finally has to reach a decision, for or against UN Resolution 435 being implemented in terms of the Western plan, it will be the right decision in the circumstances.

For if Swapo takes over, we will find ourselves confined to our own fortress, surrounded on all sides by enemies and with our backs to the sea.

The volk senses the change in its fortunes.

There are those who say stand fast and fight; there are those who say we can still find a compromise whereby we can maintain our traditional values and sovereignty over our own country and affairs; and there are those — a small minority — who are attracted to the idea of helping along the transition to Black rule, which they regard as inevitable, by accepting citizenship for all and the sharing of power.

The basic conflict between traditionalists and reformists is mirrored in the National Party, the political arm of the volk, now riven by verligte-verkrampte divisions, with the verligtes saying change and the conservatives saying don't give up the principles of the past.

At the same time the emergence of a strong Right-wing backlash has demonstrated that many Afrikaners, anxious about the future, are not prepared to yield to the demands of the times for reform, but prefer to maintain White domination, baasskap and power. It is a battle for the heart and soul of the Afrikaner, and in it academics, theologians, businessmen, farmers and workers in the public and private sectors are taking sides.

Afrikanerdom is divided, with some saying forward and others back, and nobody quite certain what is the best course to take.

Since the Afrikaners are the dominant governing White race, the outcome of the conflict has great meaning for the rest of the community.

For who gets the upper hand in the struggle will determine the direction the country takes.

Against this background, the arguments and divisions within Afrikanerdom are not necessarily harmful.

There is no leader with a vision of the future that can inspire the volk.

But out of the conflict of ideas may emerge the kind of policy that will ensure not just the Afrikaner's survival, but that of the country.

We sincerely hope so.

RSA COMMENTARY SAYS UN NAMIBIAN DEBATE 'COUNTERPRODUCTIVE'

LD231240 Johannesburg International Service in English 0300 GMT 23 Nov 81

[Unattributed commentary]

[Text] It is at times like these when the General Assembly of the United Nations begins debating the South-West African issue that the patience and reasonableness of the South African Government and that of the internal parties of Southwest Africa are strained to their very limits.

What is happening in the General Assembly bears no relation to reality. While the most delicate negotiations are being conducted to find an acceptable settlement formula and to strengthen Security Council Resolution 435, speakers in the General Assembly are launching tirades against South Africa and demanding that General Assembly resolution be implemented forthwith. As usual South Africa is not allowed to state its case, nor are the internal parties of Southwest Africa.

The General Assembly would have helped along the negotiations had it tried to demonstrate now that it was indeed impartial and that the United Nations could be trusted as an impartial referee in elections in South-West Africa. Yet this is not happening. South Africa is being condemned while SWAPO remains recognized by the United Nations as the sole authentic representative of the people of Namibia.

Fortunately, the United States realizes the scope of the problem. The American assistant secretary of state for African affairs, Dr Chester Crocker, has said that what is necessary is to develop a dialogue of mutual trust on Namibia. Dr Crocker is not being helped along with his task by the activities of the General Assembly.

The point to make is that the South-West African issue has become an entirely new ball game, particularly since the Geneva conference in January of this year. Then the partiality of the United Nations toward SWAPO was clearly demonstrated and some of the most respected newspapers in the Western world commented on the ridiculous state of affairs where the United Nations recognized no political party in South-West Africa except SWAPO. It is ridiculous because then in Zimbabwe, where there are only two main ethnic groups, the Shona and the Matabele, and the Shona constitute 80 percent of the population, there are two political parties clearly recognized as such. Yet in South-West Africa where there are 11 ethnic groups, with SWAPO drawing support virtually exclusively from the Ovambo, the United Nations believes no other political party has a standing. And again, that despite the fact that in December 1978, 80 percent of the electorate in the territory ignored SWAPO's boycott call and participated in a one-man one-vote election.

This debate by the General Assembly can only be counterproductive.

UNION TROUBLES MAY PLAGUE CISKEI INDEPENDENCE

Johannesburg SOWETAN in English 12 Nov 81 p 8

[Editorial]

[Text] TENSION is building in the Ciskei as the date for its "independence" on December 4 approaches.

There is an interesting corollary between the fight the unions have against the government in the Ciskei and Solidarity's fight against the Communist regime in Poland.

The comparison is made even more lively by the fact that the trade union movement in Poland, fighting against one of the greatest powers in the world, is holding its own with the cheerful support of workers all over the world.

The issues in the Ciskei are minor compared to what is happening in Poland, but what they illustrate is the formidable power workers are able to marshall when the chips are down.

The Ciskeian workers naturally are afraid that as soon as the country gets its so-called independence, Chief Lennox Sebe would give his Security Police carte blanche power to try and crush the workers' movements.

What seems to be happening is the South African Allied Workers' Union (Saawu) is growing in strength and credibility, the more the Government and the Security Police increase the pressure.

On Sunday, trouble flared between the Government and the unions in Mdantsane location, East London. A worker, Ms Diliswa Roxisa, was killed when police fired on a crowd at a bus terminus. Several others were injured.

Although one can understand the puppet government striving its best to look good in the eyes of "mother" country South Africa by keeping the labour situation fluid there, they seem to be overdoing their eagerness.

They are also playing with fire for when workers decide to marshall all their strength there will be trouble of a nature the Ciskei has never seen. This trouble may also not be limited to the Ciskei.

The unions are against independence for ideological reasons and because of the awful working conditions prevailing.

It would seem to us that most sane blacks are against this kind of independence in the first place. What the workers are doing has our sympathy. We also believe they have a valid case to fear for themselves after the so-called independence. They may even have more problems on the shop floor and in their working conditions when the Ciskei government takes over.

We have always been against the politics of homelands because it is fraudulent, out to please only a few seekers of power and their own material advancement, and because it leads to misery for the majority of blacks involved.

Our experience of what is happening in other so-called independent homelands does not make us feel more cheerful about Ciskei's impending plunge. Whether the Ciskei is going to bulldoze itself into poverty and obscurity is no longer at issue.

Our experience of what is happening in other so-called independent homelands does not make us feel more cheerful about Ciskei's impending plunge. Whether the Ciskei is going to bulldoze itself into poverty and obscurity is no longer at issue.

The irresistible force fuelled by the SA government is in motion and when it meets the movable object — our frustrated attacks and perhaps the more invigorating fight from the unions — there is going to be change.

CHALLENGE IS FROM BLACKS, NOT ENGLISH-SPEAKERS

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 25 Nov 81 p 6

[Editorial]

[Text]

IF the Afrikaner volk is anxious about the future, as we suggested yesterday, the English-speakers are no less worried.

They, however, do not have the political power to determine the course which South Africa should take.

In the main, the English-speakers are concerned with Opposition politics — either supporting the New Republic Party, which still controls the Natal Provincial Council, or the Progressive Federal Party, which has its strongholds in the wealthy predominantly English constituencies in northern Johannesburg, nearby Sandton and Bryanston, the Cape Peninsula and some parts of Natal.

In the 1977 general election, with South Africa under extreme pressure from President Carter and Vice-President Mondale for majority rule, many English-speakers threw in their lot with the National Party.

It was not so much an acceptance of the party's policy as a rallying behind the Government to demonstrate that outside interference in South Africa's domestic affairs would not be tolerated.

Hands off S A

A "hands-off-South Africa" manifestation of the patriotism that is as much part of the fibre of the English-speaker as it is of the Afrikaner.

Which perhaps explains why many English-speakers voted Nationalist for the first time.

When the general election was held this year, a great deal of English-speaking support for the National Party had eroded.

Among the reasons for this was the Info affair, with its connotations of scandal assiduously fostered by the PFP and its Press.

Not only were the chief characters besmirched, but also, to a large extent, the Government as well.

Then, although the dangers confronting South Africa had increased rather than diminished, with Rhodesia gone and South West Africa under increasing pressure, the election of President Reagan and the friendly overtures from the United States removed some of the urgency from the debate about survival.

The PFP and its Press also cleverly exploited the teaching crisis, the nurses' salary grievances, the resignation of policemen because of poor pay, the exaggerated claims of a breakdown in government because of the exodus of public servants to better-paid jobs in the private sector, plus the ordinary man's complaints about the soaring cost of living and his anger over an unintentioned, but seemingly callous, disregard for the plight of pensioners.

There was also growing unease about the coming to power of the Mugabe Government in what had been Rhodesia, with the PFP Press pushing hard for acceptance of the inevitability of Black rule here and fostering the impression that we had best come to terms with our own Black leaders, including Nelson Mandela, to escape a fate similar to that which had befallen the Rhodesian Whites.

The English-speakers, other than those who are confirmed Nationalists, who mostly wooed back to the Opposition fold out of disillusionment with the Government or doubts about the Government's ability to change matters.

Where stands the English-speaker now?

He is more anxious about the future than he was in 1977, more uncertain about the policy directions the Government is taking, keener to see meaningful reforms, worried about the Right-wing backlash among the volk, and unsure about the conservative pressures within the National Party against change.

Won't give it up

One senses that the majority of English-speakers, like their Afrikaans counterparts, are not prepared to give up their country to a Mugabe-type regime, voluntarily or because of terrorism.

They are still hoping for a solution that will enable them to live, peacefully and securely, with the Blacks, without abandoning sovereignty over their own affairs or giving up their institutions and standards.

Whether such a solution can be found, whether there is time in which to apply it, will not be determined by the English-speaker.

The solution will depend on the National Party; the time factor is one over which not even the National Party has control.

The future, for good or ill, is still in the hands of the National Party Government — and the challenge is not from the White Opposition, including the elitist, monied and politically irrelevant PFP, but from the Blacks.

And the English-speaker is very aware of his own virtual impotence in this regard.

SUGAR STORAGE INCREASE--The South African sugar industry will increase its storage capacity by 200 000 to 300 000 tons from 520 000 tons at present, Sugar Association general manager, Peter Sale, said yesterday. He told Reuter by telephone from Durban a deal had been concluded to buy land adjoining sugar storage silos in Natal and a decision now only had to be taken on whether to erect another silo or a warehouse. A decision on the type of structure should be made in the first quarter next year, he added. Sale said at present prices, the storage capacity expansion would cost about R17 million, excluding the land purchase. In the past, the industry had come close to being fully stored, so the planned capacity expansion should provide greater flexibility, he added. BLACK YOUTH STONING--About 300 Black youths stoned the cars of dignitaries and other guests at the opening of a new cinema house in Dobsonville, Soweto, on Monday night, and were controlled by police armed with batons. Various guests, including Mr J.A. Proudfoot, a Roodepoort city councillor, were invited to attend the opening of the new Boikotleng Theatre in Dobsonville. The film they had come to see had already begun when a crowd of about 300 Black youths arrived at the hall and demanded entrance. Because the function was by invitation only, they were denied permission to watch the film. The youths became "dissatisfied," according to a police spokesman, and began stoning cars parked outside the hall. The mayoral car, which had brought Mr Proudfoot to the function, was badly damaged and the driver was hit on the shoulder by a stone. He was taken to hospital and discharged after treatment. Police vehicles were also stoned and batons were drawn to ward the attackers off. Traffic officers from Roodepoort assisted the police. Two traffic cars, and one police car were among those damaged. The crowd dispersed when SAP riot units went into action. Plastic bullets were not used or tear gas. According to Brigadier M van Eyck, Soweto's divisional commissioner, no policemen were injured. MUOFHE'S DEATH IN DETENTION--The Azanian People's Organisation (Azapo) is to take legal action against the Venda Government for the death in detention of a black consciousness leader. Mr Tshifhiwa Muofhe, a former member of the now-banned BPC, allegedly died last week, after he and nine others were detained by Venda Security Police. Azapo's legal committee chairman, Mr Ratha Mokgatlheng, said they had instructed their attorney to find a pathologist who will conduct an independent post mortem. NEW BARBERTON GOLD MINE--A full-scale gold mine--the first of its kind in the area--may be started by Transvaal Consolidated Land and Exploration in the Barberton area. The announcement was made by the chairman of TCL, Tony Petersen, in his annual report. Mr Petersen says gold exploration was concentrated in the mountains east of Barberton on what is known as the Barbrook line. "After much initial surface geological work, underground tunneling were carried out. The results in recent months have been encouraging and a mine treating about 60 000 tons of ore a month may be a possibility," he says. Further additional drilling and development will be carried out during 1982 and 1983 and thereafter a decision will be made on whether to go ahead with the mine. Exploration in the area is being carried out by Barbrook Mining and Exploration, in which TCL has a stake of 50 percent. It is not only in the exploration of gold that TCL has been active in the past year. The coal reserves of the group also nearly doubled from the previous 600-million tons to about 13 000-million tons. Mr Petersen says the long-term future of the group as one of the major coal producers in South Africa is therefore assured and further exploration in the coming years should result in its total holdings increasing further. He says the group has also submitted tenders for the supply of coal to future Escom power stations and has also applied for additional coal export allocations. DETENTION OF MXENGE CLERK--Durban--A Durban lawyer, Mr Patrick Maqubela, who was formerly articled to murdered attorney Mr Griffith Mxenge, was taken away by police yesterday following a swoop on his offices. Sources said Mr Maqubela was detained by three men when he arrived for work this morning. The secretary of the Allied Worker's Union, Mr Sam Kikine, whose offices are on the same floor said the incident has angered some members of the union whom Mr Maqubela was to have represented in a court case yesterday. "About 30 of my members rushed down after Mr Maqubela and the three men but they managed to get away. Later a number of White policemen rushed into the building to the lawyer's offices," Mr Kikine said. Police reinforcements, including dog handlers, sealed the building, not allowing anyone to enter. Meanwhile, a crowd had gathered outside the building. There were no incidents. Mr Kikine said Mr Maqubela was later brought back to his office escorted by armed policemen and dog handlers. "They conducted a thorough search of the office," he said. The police also searched through my case which was in Maqubela's office. They then seized thousands of pamphlets advertising the memorial service for Mr Msenge on Thursday. He said Mr Maqubela was again taken away by the police. A spokesman for the Security Police in Durban said he had no comment to make.--Sapa [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 25 Nov 81 p 11]

COUNTRY EXPECTED TO RATIFY PANA CONVENTION

AB261830 Paris AFP in English 1652 GMT 26 Nov 81

[Text] Dar es Salaam, 26 Nov (AFP)--Tanzania is expected soon to ratify the convention of the Pan-African News Agency (PANA) and make it possible for the agency to begin operations by next year.

An official of the Government Information Department said here today that Tanzania has already paid its dues to PANA and that the next move will be to ratify the convention next week.

So far 12 African countries have ratified the PANA convention, but two more signatories are required to make the convention effective. The proposed African News Agency was supposed to have been operational by now but has been hit by several problems, including the poor telecommunications network in the continent and lack of competent manpower to facilitate its operation.

The organization's director-general, Cheik Othuman Diallo, said on his departure for Khartoum that the establishment of the agency was one of the first resolutions by the Organization of African Unity (OAU) at its inception in 1963, but that it was not until 1976 that the idea was given an added impetus by the [words indistinct] meeting in Mauritius.

Mr Diallo said that he was optimistic that PANA would be a respectable news agency as one of its objectives was to promote African unity and correct the distorted image portrayed by existing Western news organizations.

PANA, with its headquarters in Dakar, Senegal, will have five regional pools, in Lagos to serve West Africa, Kinshasa for Central Africa, Lusaka for Southern Africa, Khartoum for East Africa and Tripoli for North Africa.

Initially, PANA would be expected to operate in three languages--English, French and Arabic. Plans are also underway to open a school of journalism in Maputo, Mozambique, for Portuguese-speaking African journalists.

During his stop-over here, Mr Diallo had talks with heads of government-controlled mass media, government officials and Director of Tanzania News Agency Shihata Nkwabi Ngwanakilala.

PRESIDENT, SPANISH KING MEET IN MADRID

AB251658 Lome Domestic Service in French 0615 GMT 25 Nov 81

[Excerpts] The founding chairman of the Togolese People's Rally [RPT] and president of the republic, Gen Gnassingbe Eyadema, continues his official visit to Spain where he will remain for 3 days. The president of the republic, who arrived in Madrid on Monday, was welcomed by the people of Madrid and their leader, Juan Carlos. He attended a gala dinner given in his honor by His Majesty Juan Carlos and the Queen of Spain.

General Gnassingbe Eyadema thanked the Spanish King and Queen for the warm welcome extended to him. The head of state said that the Spanish King had, at a very early date, shown his attachment to our country and our continent, an attachment which still continues with his frequent visits to Africa.

Of course, the Togolese head of state continued, we appreciate the very laudable efforts that the Spanish crown has already made in the liberation of the African people. In this respect, Togo associates itself with all the happy initiatives taken in keeping with the values that the Spanish crown advocates today, specifically dialogue, consultation and justice, which alone can restore peace and protect political stability--the guarantee of the overall development of our nations.

On areas of tension like Chad, the OAU ad hoc committee, the RPT founding chairman went on to say, has succeeded in bringing the rival forces to the negotiating table. Today, we are convinced, President Eyadema said, that with the sending of a neutral inter-African force, efforts will be pursued within the framework of the Lagos accord to find a political solution to the problems of that country, which has suffered far too much from a fratricidal war that has only benefitted the arms dealers.

With respect to the Western Sahara, General Eyadema hailed the initiative of the King of Morocco, which accords with the recommendation of the OAU committee of wise men in an effort to find a final solution through the self-determination of the Saharan people.

As far as South Africa is concerned, Togo is counting on international solidarity to remove the barriers of racial prejudice and usher in black majority rule.

On Namibia and [name indistinct], President Eyadema stressed that Togo encouraged all OAU and UN initiatives to safeguard the dignity and international sovereignty of our (?continent) through peaceful means. Togo has contributed to these initiatives in the search for a negotiated and acceptable solution in the settlement of any problems on the continent because of our desire for peace and our desire to see all nations live in peace. We believe that without peace, the ideas of national and continental unity are empty and development is doubtful. In Togo, it was thanks to peace, concord, national unity and political stability that we have experienced for nearly 15 years that we were able to gear and channel the efforts of our working masses toward national development. It is also thanks to peace and political stability that Togo has today become a united country that has resolutely taken up the struggle for self-reliant development--a struggle which demands real collective awareness at the national level.

Regarding the advanced technology that Spain can furnish Togo, the president referred to Togotext, which was set up and operated with Spanish assistance. Togotext, according to Gen Gnassingbe Eyadema, is one of the most modern textile plants in Africa, both in design and performance.

We hope that our visit to your beautiful country which occupies a privileged place among the industrialized nations will help to strengthen this cooperation in the mutual interests of our two states.

MUGABE-BUSINESS LEADERS MEETING PROPOSED

Salisbury THE FINANCIAL GAZETTE 13 Nov 81 p 4

[Editorial: "Prime Minister Should Now 'Meet the Business People'"]

[Text]

THE Prime Minister's recent "meet the people" tours of Zimbabwe have been an outstanding success. He has renewed that contact with those to whom he is ultimately responsible, which is essential for any leader.

His punishing schedule of rallies, meetings and personal contacts has enabled him to gauge the mood of the voters and to determine whether they are satisfied with the progress the new nation is making. In turn, he has explained his policies and made the people aware of the immense problems facing government in the transformation of our society.

He has enhanced his reputation and, what is more important, has experienced first-hand the attitude towards his government of the people.

Having met the voters, Mr Mugabe should extend his "meet the people" campaign to a "meet the business people". The same face-to-face contact which has been of value to the Prime Minister and the people would certainly result from a series of meetings with the commercial and industrial sectors.

There is a need to improve the morale of these important economic areas, and to provide definite, direct answers to questions which worry the private sector, and which inhibit its normal drive and vision.

Mr Mugabe would be assured of a capacity audience if he were to hold meetings in the country's four major centres: Salisbury, Bulawayo, Gwelo and Umtali. If he were to be accompanied by representives of those ministries with which the business world has most contact, his meetings would be even more valuable.

While the Prime Minister has regular consultations with the heads of the principal business organisations, this is of little value to the ordinary entrepreneur — he rarely learns of the outcome.

Mr Mugabe has the knowledge and the personal charm to win many valuable friends through a very limited series of meetings. We commend the idea to him when he returns from his present overseas visit.

HEAVY LOSSES OF TRAINED PEOPLE REPORTED

Salisbury THE FINANCIAL GAZETTE in English 13 Nov 81 p 13

[Text] ZIMBABWE lost a total of 3 237 professional, technical and production workers in the eight months from January to August this year, according to the latest statistics released by the Central Statistical Office. During this period 5 242 men and women in these occupations emigrated from the country while 2 005 entered Zimbabwe. For the same eight months of 1980 the loss was 2 269 trained people.

The four occupations which recorded the highest losses through emigration were clerical and related workers (977), service workers (250), mechanical engineering workers (228) and agriculture and related workers (125).

The emigrants in these professions were among 14 153 people who have left the country since the beginning of the year, compared with 10 593 who left during January — August, last year. The total number of immigrants, however, is also higher for the first eight months of this year; 5 704 compared with 3 660 for the same period in 1980.

TREND

Men and women between the ages of 30 and 39 made up the largest single group of both emigrants and immigrants, a trend that has been relatively constant for a number of years. So far this year 1 126 men and 1 093 women in this group emigrated, while 542 men and 356 women immigrated. During the same time in 1980, 988 men and 793 women aged 30 to 39 left Zimbabwe, while 464 men and 302 women came into the country.

The country which attracts the most emigrants is still South Africa, and it has accepted 9 106 former residents so far this year. Malawi is the second favourite destination (1 389 to date), while the United Kingdom is third (with 1 159) and Zambia is fourth (with 395).

The countries listed as the last permanent residences of emmigrants shows that for the first eight months of this year, Britain has provided the greatest number of emmigrants (1 696), Zambia is second (1 573), South Africa is third (866) and Malawi is fourth (420).

TOTAL

Of the present total of 5 704 emmigrants this year, 2 167 declared a combined sum of $1 552 900 in capital on entering Zimbabwe. During the same eight months of 1980 there were 3 660 emmigrants, of whom 2 002 declared a total of $1 197 100 when they entered the country.

OIL-SEED DEAL--United Refineries has entered into a barter agreement with a Zambian company for the processing of cotton seed. Under the agreement, Zambia's ROP (1975) Ltd (formerly Refined Oil Products) will send 10 000 tonnes of cotton seed to the Zimbabwean company. Oil expressed will be sent to ROP, while the oil seed cake will be retained by United Refineries as payment. Zambia expects about 2 500 tonnes of oil from Zimbabwe under this agreement. The agreement is a contingent measure pending the installation of machinery with bigger capacity to process seeds at the Ndola works of ROP. The new machinery, which will cost about K1 million, will be bought out of an Indian Loan granted to Zambia and is expected in the country in about eight months time. The new equipment will be capable of processing 50 tonnes of cotton seed or soya beans a day. The agreement with United Refineries will involve no foreign exchange. ROP will pay for the transportation of seed cotton to Victoria Falls, while hauling in Zimbabwe will be paid by United Refineries. On the return journey, the Zimbabwean firm will pay the cost of freight from Bulawayo to Victoria Falls, and ROP will take over the cost of transporting the oil into Zambia. CHINESE GOODS--The Chinese Embassy's commercial office at 10 Cork Road in Salisbury is displaying light industrial products manufactured in China and available for export at very competitive prices. The goods range from alarm clocks to sewing machines, and include glassware, office and educational supplies and electrical appliances. The display is part of the presentation of a four-member trade delegation from one of China's ten manufacturing corporations. The delegation, which returns to China on Wednesday, is headed by Mr Kang Yuzhou, the deputy export manager of the National Light Industrial Products Corporation. He is being assisted by Mr Wu Ming-Sui, a recently appointed commercial officer with the Chinese Embassy, who hopes to be able to bring other corporation representatives here in a bid to establish strong trade links between the two countries. Zimbabwe already imports a number of Chinese-made goods through international merchants but these are more expensive than direct imports. Padlocks are shipped through Hong Kong and South Africa, and the price increase can be up to 30% by the time they are sold in Zimbabwe. Similarly, medicines, first shipped to Europe from China, are re-exported to Zimbabwe, again at significantly higher prices. Mr Wu said that this illustrates the economic sense of dealing directly. NEWS SUPPRESSION--Salisbury, November 17--A former news editor with Zimbabwe broadcasting services, who was fired after objecting to the Government's new "Socialist" orientation, has accused the company of suppressing items on such events as the crisis in Communist Poland. The criticism from Derek Sones came in a High Court hearing yesterday of his suit against the Zimbabwe Broadcasting Corporation (ZBC) for a year's severance pay. Mr Sones, who worked as a newsman under the former regime prior to black rule in April 1980, said he had found the subsequent "suppression" of some news and the change in choice of topics "undeniably repugnant." "It offended my instincts of professionalism, but I stayed with the ZBC during the change in the hope that things might improve," Mr Sones told the court. He added: "This constant suppression os going on now." Mr Sones, who is white, said news editor Grey Tichatonga has ordered staff not to report news of Poland or mention the British royal family, and to avoid any stories critical of China's late Chairman Mao Tse Tong. CIVIL SERVANT SALARIES INCREASED--Brazzaville, 1 Dec (AFP)--The Congolese Labor Party [PCT] Central Committee, which met under the chairmanship of Head of State Denis Sassou-nguesso, has decided to increase salaries at the cost of 6.2 billion CFA francs--Fr 124 million--the final communique issued at the end of the meeting states. The Central Committee has adopted several other measures aimed at increasing the purchasing power of the civil servant, notably promotions, uniformity in family allocations and compensations for teachers valued at 1 billion CFA francs--Fr 20 million. The PCT has also planned increases in allowances for pupils and students, as well as a raise of 12 percent in pensions of retired civil servants. The country's capital budget for 1982 is estimated at 160 billion CFA francs--Fr 3.2 billion--the communique explains. This project, which is the first stage of the 5-year development plan, will help to start the important objectives of the plan and also to pursue the state enterprises reformation program. The 5-year development plan specifically envisages about 45 billion CFA francs--Fr 900 million--for rural development, the communique concludes. HOUPHOUET-BOIGNY ANNOUNCES SALARY INCREASES--Many important decisions were made yesterday morning during the third meeting of the national council. They include the abolition of the television education program at the end of next academic year, a 10-percent increase in salaries of all public servants as of 1 January 1982, and the deduction of 1 percent of the salaries of all wage earners toward a national solidarity fund. This deduction, which will be the workers contribution toward the assistance to be given to the 700 intellectuals and 4,700 foremen who are jobless, will cover a period of 2 years and involve a total amount of about 1.9 billion CFA frances. These points were contained in the speech delivered by President Houphouet-boigny at the presidential palace where people from all corners of the country were assembled. Talking about the appointment of a vice president, the head of state said that he has constantly been asking himself this question. Politics is a healthy appreciation of reality, he said. In this present situation, and taking into account the fact that the opposition resulting from the last elections has not died out in some areas, I cannot breed division, he added. When the time comes, you will know who will occupy this post, the head of state concluded. [Excerpts] [AB261030 Abidjan FRATERNITE MATIN in French 26 Nov 81 p 7]

EDITORS, MPS, MINISTERS GET IN HEATED DEBATE

Nairobi THE WEEKLY REVIEW in English 6 Nov 81 pp 4-6

[Text] THE motion that Mr. Lawrence Sifuna, MP for Bungoma South, brought to parliament last week was one which normally would have elicited nothing but a yawn from the front benches. Sifuna was calling upon the ruling party to start its own newspaper, a call that has been made on numerous occasions by parliamentarians during the past two decades or so. Traditionally, backbenchers have attacked the local press as being foreign-owned or politically biased, but the front benches, whilst warning the press to be constructive, have been quick to defend the principle of a free press. This time things did not go quite according to the usual scenario. A minister of state in the office of the president, Mr. G.G. Kariuki, raised quite a number of eyebrows when he stood in parliament to support Sifuna's motion. Kariuki described the motion as a little embarrassing in that the decision to have or not to have a Kanu newspaper lay not with parliament or the government, but with Kanu itself. But having said that, Kariuki minced no words in expressing his dissatisfaction with the daily newspapers and the way they cover politicians' pronouncements and activities. According to Kariuki, some newspapers or newspaper editors were being told whom to report and whom not to report. "We know that some politicians do go to them and tell them not to report so and so," he told fellow parliamentarians. "If they accept to be told not to report so-and-so then they have ceased to be independent and they belong to a particular clique of the people which I think is dangerous." Kariuki startled his listeners when he contended: "We have seen people who have been so much after publicity and today they are finding themselves in trouble because they have been over-publicised." The minister warned his fellow MPs that Kenya had enemies who "go through leading personalities or newspapers". He welcomed the opportunity Sifuna's motion had given the house to debate an issue which he said was important.

The following day the Daily Nation, whose principal owner is the Paris-based Ismaili religious leader, the Aga Khan, wrote a leader welcoming the idea of a party newspaper in Kenya but warning that truth is ellusive and that there was no guarantee that a Kanu newspaper would be any better than other newspapers in establishing the truth about events. The Standard was not as sanguine in its comments on the parliamentary debate. In a long leader article published two days after the debate on Sifuna's motion, the Standard went directly for Kariuki. Taking issue with the minister's claim that enemies of Kenya use newspapers to undermine the country, the Standard asked: "As minister for internal security, what steps has Kariuki taken to take these alleged enemies of Kenya and their alleged collaborators to court for seeking to destroy Kenya, and if he has not, has he not failed in his duty which he has solemnly sworn to perform in accordance with the constitution?". Stressing that newspapers cannot publish everything which leaders utter because some of what they say is "criminal nonsense", the Standard invited Kariuki to telephone the editor who would be "pleased to provide evidence of dangerous rhetorical nonsense which the minister himself uttered at the Thika fund-raising ceremony only last weekend". As was to be expected, the Standard defended the fact that it is foreign-owned. "It is only fair to put it on record that the owners of this newspaper (the London-based multinational Lonhro) do not interfere in the editorial content of the newspaper". The Standard invited Kariuki to repeat outside parliament what the Standard described as his most serious allegations, though the newspaper stopped short of saying that it would sue the minister if he were to do so.

For Kenyan political observers it was all a rather confusing development. Many politicians may have some justification in complaining that they do not receive their share of press publicity. A cabinet minister, and one of Kariuki's importance, certainly has little cause for complaint. More to the point, many Kenyans had come to associate the Standard with the top-most echelons of political power in the country, and Kariuki is among the very top of Kenya politicians. There had been no instance in the past three years of a quarrel between Kariuki and the Standard. It is interesting that in his parliamentary contribution, Kariuki did not once mention the name of any newspaper, but the Standard's leader article appears to suggest that Kariuki had the Standard in mind; so it would seem from the implied threat to sue Kariuki if he were to repeat his "serious allegations" outside the privilege of parliament.

Even as Kariuki was trying to find an appropriate response to the STANDARD leader article, the STANDARD was taking on another senior cabinet minister, this time the vice-president, Mr Mwai Kibaki. Kibaki had been invited by the MP for Mathare and minister for industry, Mr Munyua Waiyaki, as guest of honour at a fund-raising ceremony in aid of Mathare primary and secondary schools. In his speech the vice-president hit at leaders he called divisive and neo-colonial. "Those who think colonialism is the best way," Kibali told a cheering crowd, "can go to South Africa and live there." Kibaki said there were leaders who had assumed "non-existent" roles in Kenya politics and were sowing the seeds of discord among Kenyans. He reminded his listeners that President Moi had recently said that loyalty to him should be expressed directly rather than through political groupings. Kibaki repeated what has now become a regular theme of his, taking issue with leaders who branded others as anti-Nyayo.

The Harambee function took place on Saturday afternoon. Though STANDARD (and NATION) reporters covered the function, the SUNDAY STANDARD carried no word about the meeting which raised more than shs. 2 million in aid of the schools. (The SUNDAY NATION, which in the past has carried such stories on front page, buried the story on page 10.) On Monday, however, the STANDARD reported the speeches at the Mathare harambee meeting and took issue with them in a long editorial in the same paper. The STANDARD ridiculed Kibaki's attempt to suggest that there are no leaders who are more Nyayo than others. "At the concrete, common man level--at the level of government organisation--there are indeed ways and means of determining who is more Nyayo than others," the STANDARD said. "At any time in the history of a nation, it is easy to determine who are the friends of an open society, and who are its enemies." Kibaki is reported by the STANDARD to have said that if there were a need to measure "parameters of Nyayoism" the president would have created a ministry responsible for such affairs. The STANDARD pointed out in its editorial that precisely such a ministry does exist--the office of the president. "It is the nerve centre of this nation's activities of all kinds and categories," the STANDARD said. "It is the ministry responsible for Nyayo affairs." And as if to test Kibaki's commitment to Nyayoism, the newspaper added: "One hopes Mr Kibaki will agree with this proposition. After all, he is the vice-president.

Compared with previous Standard editorial attacks on Kibaki, this was a mild one, and as in previous cases Kibaki did not respond. But others responded. The first was Laikipia Kanu branch, of which Kariuki is chairman. A press statement signed by the branch's executive officer and organising secretary took issue with the Standard editorials attacking Kariuki and Kibaki. The statement charged that the editorial against Kariuki was aimed at dividing Kenyans. "Our branch also takes the editorials as a demonstration of how the lackeys of imperialists are out to destroy our popularly elected leaders," the Laikipia Kanu branch said. "Is the paper trying to inform the public that Hon. Kariuki does not support the head of state, which is a blatant lie," the statement said. "Is the same paper not trying to inform the public that there are some cabinet ministers who do not support some who support the head of state?"

What the Laikipia Kanu branch said was mild compared with what MPs said this week when the debate of Sifuna's motion resumed. Though Kariuki himself tried to play down the issue of the Standard's editorial attack on him, his colleagues in parliament thought the Standard had gone too far. Several MPs called upon the government to ban the newspaper. "If the paper cannot respect the leaders," asked Mr. Job Lalampaa, MP for Samburu East, "who does it want to be respected?" Lalampaa called upon the editor-in-chief of the Standard, Mr. George Githii, to rejoin politics "if he wants to be a politician, instead of using the newspaper to mudsling elected representatives." (Githii was an unsuccessful candidate for the Dagoretti parliamentary seat in the 1979 general election.) Mr. Martin Shikuku, MP for Butere, called for the government to cancel its advertising contract with the Standard, observing that government advertisement alone could enable the ruling party to run a viable party newspaper. Mr. Koigiwa Wamwere, MP for Nakuru North, accused the Standard of instigating clashes between leaders. "Is it right for us to wait and see this paper continue to divide our leaders?" he asked. "If leaders are not respected, then there cannot be progress in this country. We should first show respect to President Daniel arap Moi, then his vice president. We should not wait when the Standard newspaper continues to attack our vice president every time." Mr. Kimani wa Nyoike, MP for Nyandarua South, told his fellow MPs that the editorials in the Standard were intentionally aimed at dividing the people of Kenya. "Mr. George Githii is not an ignorant man," Kimani said. "He is not making a mistake. He is a man who is educated up to Oxford. He is deliberately dividing our country. Is it right that he must continue to do this with impunity?"

On this particular debate it seemed that the front and back benches were united. The minister for information and broadcasting, Mr. Peter Oloo Aringo, agreed with backbench speakers that the foreign-owned newspapers had been "used to create factions". Said Aringo: "They have given undue publicity to some leaders. Recently they have engaged in mudslinging leaders. . . I am told they asked what is important in being a vice-president. I am told they have more mudslinging in stock. We have watched with dismay our papers attack friendly countries and our neighbours when relations were improving. They have continued to attack the Organisation of African Unity when our president is the current chairman . . . We shall not sit by and see these things happen." Aringo told fellow MPs that the government will not allow "this sensitive area to continue in the hands of foreign ownership as their aims are not the same as ours."

Sifuna's motion, with an amendment by Aringo to the effect that parliament's sentiments in favour of a party newspaper should be conveyed to Kanu, was passed unanimously.

To most political observers the debate over the Standard's editorial appears to be part of a bigger debate over what are now called political groupings. Whether by design or default, the Standard group of newspapers has recently become intimately associated in the minds of many political leaders with the minister for constitutional and home affairs, Mr. Charles Njonjo. This is probably due to the frequency with which Njonjo appears in the Standard; his photograph has become a standard feature on page one or three of the newspaper. Editorials by the Standard attacking any personality, even when the sentiments in the editorial are purely the editor's, tend to be construed by those being attacked as having emanated from Njonjo, a situation which fuels widespread rumours that there is a disagreement between Njonjo and Kibaki. Indeed the groupings which politicians talk so much about appear to be around these two leading personalities.

That there is more to the issue than mere editorial polemics was proved by the Mathare harambee meeting last Saturday and the reaction of a cabinet minister, Mr. Stanley Oloitipitip (local government) to what was said at the meeting. Waiyaki told his constituents at the fund-raising meeting that there were leaders who are trying to become Kanu vice-president. Waiyaki did not name names, but invited those wishing to run for Kanu vice-president to do so through the vote. Oloitipitip, in a harambee function of his own in Lavington, Nairobi, decried those remarks, but attributed them to Kibaki, not Waiyaki. Anyone who feared for his party post in the coming elections, Oloitipitip said, should realise that Kenya was democratic and all party positions were "open". The minister described Kibaki's remarks at Mathare as "unfortunate and uncalled for", and warned leaders against raising "a hue and cry" over the unannounced party elections.

Oloitipitip has in the past few weeks come out openly in defence of Njonjo against his detractors, and since his sentiments came so soon after the Standard attack on Kibaki, Kibaki supporters interpret Oloitipitip's response as part of general onslaught on Kibaki by Njonjo's supporters.

That there are political groupings is evident from the fact that President Moi himself is decrying them. But who belongs to what group is not so easy to determine. For one thing, every politician publicly denies belonging to any group. For another, it has become fashionable for politicians to echo President Moi's attack on groupings. The finger is, however, always pointed at someone else. About the only inkling Kenyans may have about interpersonal political relations among Kenya leaders is who turns up for whose harambee function. Afraid of being tagged either a Kibaki or a Njonjo man, some politicians are now going through a lot of political gymnastics in deciding which harambee meetings they can attend and which they cannot attend, or how much they should contribute to what meetings. How long this state of affairs is likely to last is unclear. Traditionally, factions have always existed in Kenya politics. Traditionally, too, relations between factions have often been resolved at the party level. The current spate of political infighting may well go on until the ruling party intervenes.

Many of the students who are children and relatives of the dismissed workers said they would face the "unfortunate experience" of quitting school if this sad trend continued.

NATIONAL BANK OFFICIALS REFUTE RUMORED FUNDS SHORTAGE

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 6 Nov 81 p 1

[Text]

Rumours circulating in Monrovia about alleged money shortage to meet government payment requirement have been refuted by National Bank officials.

An executive officer of the National Bank told this paper in an interview Wednesday that there was enough money on hand to encash the cheques of government employees.

"We have cashed every cheque that have been brought to this Bank. There is even a cash shipment expected Friday to supplement what is on hand," the Bank executive said.

The executive pointed out that there was no problem whatsoever in paying government workers, noting that there was no need for panic.

The Finance Ministry last Tuesday halted its issuance of civil servants' cheques with notices that payment would not commence until next week.

But the National Bank executive hinted that this could be attributed to a misunderstanding on the part of Finance Ministry officials about the Bank's cash position.

Acting Finance Minister John Bestman told the New Liberian Wednesday that the situation has been brought under control, while disbursing officers were quoted as saying that salary cheques were now available.

IMMIGRATION, LABOR SOURCES LEVY CHARGES AGAINST CLU

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 13 Nov 81 pp 1, 3

[Text] "A blatant disregard for the Government's Liberianization policy and the constant harboring of illegal aliens", are charges levied against the management of an American Firm here, Coastal Liberia Uranium (CLU) by both Immigration and Labour sources.

The management of CLU, a Labour source claims, has over the years recruited for employment several aliens who were in Liberia on a visitors' visas, although there were qualified Liberians that had applied for these positions ranging from staff members to drivers.

It was disclosed in an interview Wednesday that even the Canadian, American and Britons who form the rank of CLU uranium mining operations here are without both permits of residence and work.

"Some of the aliens, mostly from our sister nations are brought in to do jobs which can be done by our own boys such as mechanics, warehouse supervisors," our source contended.

The New Liberian was informed that the rank of the company has been warned on several occasions to have illegal aliens within their employ meet up with pre-conditions set by the Bureau of Immigration, but "both the Canadian General Manager, Leslie Kaye and his British Deputy Jack Gawron feel that this is unnecessary."

He said job seekers at CLU's Ashmun Street headquarters in Monrovia are always given harsh words such as "this is not the Capitol," when they inquired about vacancies at the company.

When the Ministry of Labour sends people to see whether there are vacancies at CLU in order to send some qualified Liberians, they are told that CLU is not owned by the Ministry of Labour and "Labour does not dictate to us."

Immigration sources disclosed that CLU has been on their "hit list" for some weeks, for refusing to get residence and work permits for their alien employees.

They said although some of the aliens are at times arrested, they always end up scot free, "probably because of their connections with the higher-ups in our bureau."

When contacted to comment on these allegations, CLU's Deputy General Manager Jack Gawron refused to see the press, claiming that he was busy with a meeting.

JUSTICE MINISTRY PROBING AIRLINE TICKET SWINDLE

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 13 Nov 81 pp 1, 6

[Text] Former Liberian Consul General to Senegal Mr. Hardel Cole, and four others are being investigated by the Justice Ministry for allegedly swindling $1 Million worth of tickets from Pan American Airlines.

Others are the proprietor of the Color Spot Photo Studio, Mr. Hank Buttner; Mr. Samuel Davis of the Morgan Travel Agency; the Lebanese Manager of the Gee-Gee Restaurant in Monrovia; and Momodu Diallo Cellu, a Guinean national who has been branded as the prime suspect.

Also wanted by the CID for their alleged involvement in the tickets racket are three Lebanese nationals, Ali Fawaz, William Vacine, and Benedict Raffa.

According to reports, 1,400 Pan AM tickets valued at $1 Million were allegedly stolen by Diallo Cellu in July 1980 while they were en route from Dakar to Monrovia.

The stolen tickets were later discovered being sold in Monrovia at half price, the New Liberian were informed.

During preliminary investigation conducted by the CID, Momodu Diallo Cellu, the prime suspect, admitted being involved in the tickets racket.

He claimed that the tickets were given to him to sell by one Gahazan Wisseh of SATCO whom he said had died.

Cellu said after receiving the tickets, he gave them to Mr. Cole the former Liberian diplomat, to sell on commission basis.

When Cole was grabbed and questioned by the CID, he said the tickets were given to him by Cellu to sell. He said for each ticket sold, he had four percent as commission.

The investigation also revealed that upon the arrest of Samuel Davis of the Morgan Travel Agency, $300 was found in his possession. Davis reportedly told the CID that the money was given him by William Vacine, one of the accused at large, in order for him (Davis) to stamp six of the tickets.

According to the investigation, most of the tickets were sold at half a million dollars on the "black market" in Monrovia.

Sources close to the Color Spot said Mr. and Mrs. Buttner bought the tickets through a travel agency for regular price, but when they went to make booking on Sabena airlines, they were later told that the Pan Am tickets were stolen.

Meanwhile, 37 of the tickets have been retrieved by the CID while the five accused are on bail until the investigation is completed.

EGG SHORTAGE ATTRIBUTED TO HIGH PRODUCTION COSTS

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 12 Nov 81 p 3

[Text] The shortage of eggs on the Liberian market has been blamed more on prevailing economic factors rather than the shortage of chicken feeds as reported recently.

Sources close to some Liberian poultry farmers told the New Liberian Tuesday that the egg shortage is mainly due to the high cost of producing the commodity which has knocked many of the small Liberian poultry farmers out of business.

Our source explained that when the wholesale price of a dozen of eggs was one dollar and the retail price was one dollar and ten cents, a bag of chicken feeds was sold for six dollars.

He said gas price was still less than a dollar per gallon while labour was reasonable and available. In short, he added, general operating cost was manageable.

The source asserts, that now, a bag of feeds sells for $22.00, which is more than 35 percent increase over the price of $6.00, while gas price is $3.00 and the cost of labour and other related costs have escalated. Nevertheless, the official price for a dozen of eggs at wholesale is $1.60, which is 60 percent increase over the mark of reference.

He said to make the situation worse, many Liberian farmers had to suspend operation after the April 12 Revolution, thus the supply and demand curve dropped sharply on the supply side.

Asked what could remedy the situation, our source indicated the need for government to re-examine the whole poultry farming problems in a bid to provide some incentives to the poultry farmers to enable them to operate with some margin of profitability.

On the question of importation of eggs, our source decried it as being a solution. He said "as a stopgap measure, yes, but in the final analysis, such a measure only drains the economic and makes Liberia the more and more ddependent."

The stoppage of the importation of feeds by the ULRC, he added, could not have caused the shortage of poultry products as alleged, because, according to him, Sangai Farm manufactured its own feeds as well as Home Grown Poultry Farm.

If the economics of the factor of production in this sector of the economy is reviewed by government to minimize the losses sustained by small Liberian farmers in the past, many will return to the farms to produce adequate eggs for the Liberian market, as well as keep some of our resources here at home," he assured the New Liberian.

TEAM SET UP TO ESTABLISH FOOD PRODUCTION CORPORATION

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 6 Nov 81 p 3

[Article by Lucillia Hinneh]

[Text] A seven-man team has been appointment by Agriculture Minister Alfred Fromoyan to conduct feasibility studies for the establishment of a $2.1 million food production corporation in the country.

The team, headed by Mr. Arthur Summerville, an agricultural economist at the Agriculture Ministry, consists of a soil economist from the Planning Ministry; one agronomist; one rural engineer and one agricultural economist from WARDA; and two financial analysts from the Budget Bureau.

The team is expected to begin a nation-wide tour shortly to locate suitable site for the corporation, according to Minister Fromoyan.

He said agreement for the establishment of the Corporation was reached following a proposal presented to the Head of State by the Minister of Agriculture that 100 acres of farm land be set up in each country for the production of rice.

He said the Head of State then instructed the Ministry of Agriculture to involve the Ministry of Planning, Budget Bureau, and WARDA to undertake a thorough study before establishing the Corporation.

Capt. Fromoyan noted that the Corporation, when established, will produce rice and a variety of food crops for the Liberian population.

He added that although rice was the initial crop to be produced, it is believed that a number of other crops can be produced if the implications involved are technically, socially and economically sound.

SURVEY INDICATES GSA PURCHASING SCHEME BESET WITH PROBLEMS

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 12 Nov 81 p 1

[Excerpt] A survey of Agriculture, Justice, Public Works, Finance, Commerce, Local Government, Health and Foreign Ministries, as well as Immigration Bureau and Monrovia City Corporation indicates that the GSA controlled purchasing scheme is still clouded with problems.

Finance, Agriculture, Commerce, Health Foreign Affairs and City Hall procurement officers hold the GSA responsible for delays in delivery supplies.

But the man responsible for supplies at Public Works blames the bureaucratic negligence within his Ministry for delays.

Mr. Benjamin Witherspoon, in an interview, said shortages within his Ministry cannot be attributed to the GSA. He said the Ministry's officials delay in signing procurement papers. By the time they signed the documents, he added, the materials are diplated.

Mr. Witherspoon, however, noted that the GSA at times supplies wrong materials. "If the GSA is to order these things, they should get what we want," he added.

DEPORTATION OF ILLEGAL ALIENS

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 12 Nov 81 p 1

[Text]

About 300 illegal aliens have been arrested by Immigration authorities for deportation. A high immigration source said Wednesday 40 of them have already been deported to their respective countries.

Screening of the aliens, who are being detained at the Monrovia Central Prison, established their nationalities as Guineans, Ivorians, Malians, and Sierra Leoneans.

The 40 Guineans deported were termed by Immigration sources as "undesirable aliens without any means of livelihood."

The sources further said those aliens deported and those scheduled for deportation are mainly responsible for the high rate of vagrancy in the country. A source disclosed that another shuttle load of aliens would soon be taken to neighboring borders for deportation.

Immigration officials believe that the deportation of illegal aliens would curtail the vagrancy and crime rate in the country.

It is claimed by the Immigration that these aliens entered the country illegally, engaged in "petit" businesses without obtaining permits, and don't bother to pay government taxes.

However sources said aliens already arrested could be released provided they meet Naturalization pre-requisites before deportation schedule.

NEW COAL MINES TO BE OPENED IN MOATIZE

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 7 Nov 81 p 1

[Excerpts] CARBOMOC [Mozambique National Coal Company] is going to open four new coal mines in Moatize. In one of them, an underground mine, the excavation work is already underway, and plans call for starting excavations for two others--also underground mines--before the end of this year. Lastly, and parallel with that work, preparations are also underway to open the first strip coal mine in our country.

The mine that is already being opened is Chipanga 11. The other two underground mines will be Chipanga 9 and Chipanga 10. These new mines will have an average annual capacity of about 200,000 tons.

The purpose of the strip mine is not so much to increase CARBOMOC's coal production as it is to serve for technological experimentation and personnel training.

The strip mine will play essentially a pilot role in establishing the conditions for opening a big strip mine in the middle of this decade that will provide a big increase in coal production in Mozambique.

Four underground mines are currently operating in our country, all of them in Moatize. They are Chipanga 3, 4, 7, and 8. Although the opening of strip mines requires more advanced technology, they meet basic concerns in the development policy of the People's Republic of Mozambique.

Development of the mining area has had the cooperation of the socialist countries, especially the GDR. Vocational training is currently one of the biggest requirements for that development. To obtain it, dozens of Mozambican workers have taken courses at various levels, including that of engineering, in that socialist country.

The development achieved so far in Moatize is currently in a stage of consolidation. Priority has been given to preparatory work that will permit a leap forward within a period estimated at about 2 years.

In this phase of consolidation, certain infrastructures will be improved and workers will be trained, as mentioned above, but special attention will be paid to services related to mining activity. Particularly important in this respect is the question of a transportation system for shipping the coal.

Because of inadequate rail shipments, the coal already extracted has been piling up in Moatize, especially this year. This problem affects the normal operation of CARBOMOC and the country's economy, since the coal accumulated there is exposed to sun, rain and wind and thus undergoes quantitative and qualitative losses. In addition, there is the danger of fire.

ROLE OF CELLS IN PARTY ECONOMIC POLICY EXPLORED

Role of Cells

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 5 Nov 81 p 1

[Text] "The role of the cells is to insure the life of the party and impose its political principles--to carry out the revolution." So said Marcelino dos Santos last night at the conclusion of debate at the Second National Seminar on Party Economic Policy, now underway in our country's capital.

The seminar is scheduled to end today. It has been underway since last Monday, its purpose being to take stock of activities by the party's economic policy sector during 1981 and project its activity for 1982.

In emphasizing the role of the cells, the Central Committee secretary for party economic policy clarified a point that turned out to be one of the most controversial during the debates yesterday and the day before yesterday.

The debates revealed contradictions in the concept of the role to be played by the cells, particularly in the battle for economic development. The fuzzy distinction between administrative and political structures and the resulting conflicts that have arisen in their relationship were brought to light by some of the participants.

Marcelino dos Santos showed that such a contradiction exists only because some structures have not yet assimilated the real nature of the party's activity as the guiding force. He explained that mistaken ideas in that area have led party cells to take on the role of managers and to try to replace the management of enterprises or departments. This is because they are not capable of fulfilling perfectly their task of mobilization and defense of the party's political principles. And in the economic battle specifically, they are not capable of creating the conditions in each location for fulfillment of the plans.

The Central Committee secretary for party economic policy said: "There is a whole series of guidelines that do not need to made known now. They were provided long ago. What is needed is for them to be implemented and correctly known." The truth of his statement became very clear when that member of the party leadership went on to read several excerpts from basic party documents such as the Program and Bylaws.

Marcelino dos Santos stressed the need for the cells to assume their role in a consistent manner by accomplishing the tasks that were assigned to them long ago. The points raised during the meeting as revealing a lack of activity were mentioned again by the Central Committee secretary for party economic policy to show that many cells have not taken responsibility for their real tasks or understood the real importance of those tasks.

Dos Santos Closing Remarks

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 6 Nov 81 p 8

[Excerpts] "The party must be capable of meeting society's demand for development. The work we have done here reflects that requirement and the party's need to make a qualitative leap forward." With those words, Marcelino dos Santos defined the main content of the Second National Seminar on Party Economic Policy, which ended yesterday morning in our country's capital.

The final working session of the meeting that had been underway since last Monday under the guidance of Marcelino dos Santos, Central Committee secretary for party economic policy, reflected the impact that the seminar's work will have to have on future work by the party.

"Our feeling is that we are now more clear-sighted and more reinvigorated because we have been able to put together suitable conclusions for causing the party's work to advance and strengthening the revolution." So said Marcelino dos Santos during a speech marking the end of the seminar.

He also said that working methods are the essential thing and that it is not enough, therefore, to tell ourselves that we left this meeting with clear conclusions as to what must be done so that the party will grow and become stronger. "It is necessary for each individual to be well aware that it is through practice that he must clear up these questions. We cannot leave here thinking that from now on we are not going to make any mistakes. It is practice itself that will show us whether we have mastered that truth."

His speech at the closing session made it clear how important the debates taking place at the seminar are for insuring that a broad movement affecting all of the party's rank-and-file structures will be unleashed by the time of the fourth congress. A final summary presented at the end of the debates also emphasized the importance of the meeting to the process of strengthening the party and preparing it to direct the battle of the decade more correctly.

Marcelino dos Santos said that based on that summary, a final communique from the seminar will be prepared for dissemination by the media at the proper time.

The final session was also a thrilling occasion thanks to the creative initiative demonstrated by students from the Nautical School, where the seminar was held.

A cultural session preceding the seminar's closing was also attended by the delegation from NORAD [Norwegian Agency for International Development] and Norway's Labor Party, which was visiting the Nautical School at the time. Marcelino dos Santos introduced the visitors and recalled the sense of solidarity they showed toward the Mozambican people during the armed struggle for national liberation.

The comparison of experiences provided through the reports on activities by many of the structures represented at the meeting showed that there are positive results where clear knowledge exists and the specific features of the tasks and working methods proper to the party are adopted. Where those conditions do not exist, the confusion between party activities and those of other structures was obvious, resulting in conflict and ineffective work to raise political consciousness.

It was seen from the various examples presented that in industrial or agricultural enterprises, the lack of clear knowledge concerning the tasks and methods of the party structures leads the latter to become management bodies or management advisory councils or to adopt other forms of participation in which a paternal relationship toward a cell sometimes develops.

Those models of incorrect tasks and working methods flourish in places where obvious activity more directly linked to material production can be engaged in. In institutions of another kind, however--especially ministries and central organizations of the state apparatus--it was seen that since the only alternative consists of having their work taken over by the minister or director, the cells find no way of justifying their existence, and this explains the paralysis of many of those rank-and-file party organizations.

That situation as far as working methods and a clear definition of tasks are concerned was given particular emphasis as being in serious contradiction with the requirements of the great battle that the Mozambican people intend to undertake so that underdevelopment can be overcome in this decade.

It was seen, however, that if the cells take responsibility for their tasks and adopt the working methods proper to party structures, they will naturally be in a position to assume their role, thus conferring on the party the character of a guiding force for the state and society.

On condition that the members of each rank-and-file organization experience and participate in the work of all sectors in their enterprise, department, or place of residence and belong to the various structures, particularly the democratic mass organizations, the cells will be in a privileged position to familiarize themselves more thoroughly with the problems of that particular place.

It is that condition, consistently met by the members, which results in the possibility of greater collective knowledge at the cell level and greater sensitiveness to problems than are possible in any other structure.

Regardless, therefore, of whether the director or manager is a party member or not, the quality of that knowledge confers a natural authority on the cell. With that in mind, the one responsible for the institution must be able, while retaining the power that is his, to acknowledge in the party structure the basic role that it has in creating conditions in which the institution's objectives will be fully realized.

INSTALLATION OF LOUDSPEAKERS HELPS SPREAD IDEAS

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 5 Nov 81 p 2

[Text] The Social Communication Office of the Ministry of Information will install three more loudspeakers on metal towers in the Hulene neighborhood to supplement the tower that already exists.

These three towers will be added to another one that has been there since June 1979, when the social communication center was built. That tower currently has four new loudspeakers that were recently installed after the others were stolen last August. Their installation marked the resumption of daily transmissions by the Social Communication Office.

The four loudspeakers have a range of 800 meters. To increase the area covered by the loudspeakers, the position of the three new towers will be staggered so that each one will complement the others in the coverage area.

Programming

The programming is totally in the hands of Hulene's residents themselves. Basically educational in character, the programs cover the fields of health, education, regional natural resources and, above all, the problems of the neighborhood itself.

The programming also includes the transmission of news from Radio Mozambique, soccer games, and official and party programs.

The programs are transmitted daily between 0500 and 0700 hours, the period when the entire population of Hulene can hear them.

The social communication program was initially aimed at the communal villages, but 2 years ago it also began to be set up in city neighborhoods, where the work has been done jointly by the DTIP [Department of Party Ideological Propaganda] and the Social Communication Office of the Ministry of Information. The neighborhood of Hulene was the site of the first experiment, which had positive results.

In addition to the towers with loudspeakers, there are also a cassette recorder, a radio, a record player, and an amplifier. Generators are used in communal villages that lack electricity.

The centers also show educational films, using a movie projector for the purpose. The residents are also provided with backup texts on health, education, and other subjects, and a people's newspaper is also published by the residents.

Among the objectives of the social communication centers are those of accelerating the integral development of the community and allowing the inhabitants to produce their own programs.

They also provide the inhabitants with a permanent forum for discussing their problems and permit the evaluation of community development in the communal villages and the neighborhoods.

ALGERIA-NIGER BORDER DEMARCATION HAILED

Niamey LE SAHEL in French 28 Oct 81 pp 1, 3

[Editorial: "Faithfulness to the Principles and Spirit of Cooperation"]

[Excerpt] One of the constants of the foreign policy followed by our country under the aegis of the Supreme Military Council is certainly faithfulness to the principles and spirit of cooperation. It is this faithfulness which explains the positions we have taken in many international forums and which justifies our fight for respect of the charters of the OAU [Organization of African Unity] and the UN in matters of relations and cooperation between states. It is this spirit which dictates our good-neighbor policy with all the states which surround us and support our impassioned search for peace and harmony among nations.

Following the straight line of this political philosophy, our country has reached an agreement with Algeria for the installation of a joint border demarcation commission, the second phase of whose work begins in Algiers today. What matters are to be covered? To reach an amicable agreement in friendship and mutual understanding of the demarcation of the long border we have in common. To this end, teams of technicians are working on site; and the first meeting of the commission was held in Arlit in September 1981, pursuant to the political wish to produce results satisfactory to all.

By doing this, Niger and Algeria have once again demonstrated their faithfulness to the principles and ideals of the OAU and their good-neighbor spirit which is conducive to consolidation of their relations that are otherwise excellent. They are thus showing all the African states the path to follow in this sector, and this happy initiative opens for them a new era of harmonious and durable cooperation. In this way, they are eliminating between them one of the stumbling blocks to relations among newly-independent African states and implementing the best solution to one of the many problems and points of difference inherited from the colonial period.

It is in fact a truism to say that in general what is upsetting relations between African states is the imprecision and evanescence of borders set by a colonizer who was only thinking of his own interests. To convince oneself, it is enough to refer to the many conflicts which have set and still set African states at odds with one another, from the Sahara to the Horn of Africa.

For their part, Niger and Algeria have decided as sovereign nations and as mature people to sit down around a negotiating table and to combine the means of investigation on site, within the context of common respect for the principles and spirit of good neighbors to determine their borders.

PDS LEADER ACCUSED OF THIRST FOR POWER

Dak[illegible] L'UNITE AFRICAINE in French No 96, Oct 81 pp 1, 5

[Article by A. S. Kane]

[Text] After Bikassa, Wade! JEUNE AFRIQUE has found in this the vein of a real lode. These interviews are in fact pure entertainment in which picturesque personalities--and Africa has its share of them--regale the public with their fantasies, as if preening their feathers. They are also the first to be surprised when at the end of this kind of mental striptease they see themselves in the eyes of others more naked than jaybirds. Here we must pay homage to the talent of the interviewers: it is not all that easy to let the air out of a windbag while having the air--no pun intended--of pumping him back up. It is positively true that promising certain politicians the "number one page" of an international magazine is like giving them the moon. According to their tastes and temperaments, some of them would kill their own father and mother, while others, content with the mental striptease, would bare their souls.

Counselor Wade, who has been pursued by an evil demon for some time,--with due respect to him--did, therefore, bare his soul. A cranium, no matter how handsome it may be, does not of necessity make a head. We have known this for a long time; but the next to last edition of JEUNE AFRIQUE, with a supporting photo, provides irrefutable proof of this: a head is nothing more than a cranium. And, with even greater reason, a mere cranium cannot be a headman. Taking it a step further, we find in that edition an illustration of the difference between a headman and a chief. In fact Counselor Wade offers proof that the headman can shine without being a brilliant chief. Far from it!

Two or 3 years ago, Counselor Wade represented us in court. Since then, we have come to realize that his reputation as an attorney had been largely overrated. The case was dismissed before he even had a chance to plead it thoroughly. This counselor-at-law handled the case like a law clerk: he stupidly botched the entire procedure. In the court of JEUNE AFRIQUE, Counselor Wade has shown himself to be just as inept as defense attorney Wade of the past in the Dakar court. We would really fear for him if he had to appear with such credentials in the State Security Court which is handling a case in which some of his supporters are involved.

Wade states in the Avenue des Ternes weekly that he was supposed to return to Dakar on 1 October; however, the night before, the directorate of the PDS [Senegalese

Democratic Party] had asked him to remain in Paris to engage in agit-prop [?agitation-propaganda]. Thus, it was out of party discipline and patriotism that Abdoulaye Wade deprived us of his flamboyant presence. Fear of prison probably had nothing to do with it. Very well!

However, Friday, 2 October, I myself saw Counselor Wade in the corridors of the Roissy airport. He was surrounded by four big bodyguards and was headed toward the counter which registers passengers bound for Dakar. A good hundred Senegalese saw him and, as I did, believed that he was returning to the country. Those who took the trouble to find out finally discovered only in Dakar that he had had to forego the trip. Perhaps after all he had only come to the airport with such fanfare to mail a letter or to say goodbye to someone. People in the Roissy corridors must be as uncertain of this as those in the metro; and one can very well not fear prison and even so have a concern for his physical safety.

Going beyond or in conjunction with this anecdote, with regard to courage Wade encloses himself in a history of armed bodyguards and domestic espionage. He convinced himself that he was poorly protected and surrounded himself with bodyguards who were trained in an actual school. That reminds me of a comment by Jean Briere with respect to the King of Goree who sold his island to the Dutch for a few bars of iron: "Iron," he said, "iron, Denga Mafall! What do you need iron for? You are still in the wood age!" In fact, those bars of iron were to be Africa's misfortune.

Why did Abdoulaye Wade have such a desire for bodyguards, real gorillas who scare honest folks? The answer is as plain as the nose on your face. He gave us a clue to this when he said: "...Our party is organized like a government." All of Counselor Wade is in that statement: he has a thirst for power. A thirst that is not unquenchable but uncontrollable. It keeps him from sleeping, eating and thinking anything else but of concealing his thirst rather than extinguishing it. He wants power and in the lack thereof is seeking substitute gratifications. Upon his return from his trip, he wants to be greeted like a chief of state. He wants a motorcycle escort, a pavilion with his name on it. He wants bodyguards. This man's weakness is vanity combined with impatience. These fog his understanding and cause him to drift from one incoherence to another until he reaches the fine line--let us reverse Talleyrand's remark--which separates the lack of something from the crime.

PS FACED BY CRISIS; 'VIOLATING OWN LAWS'

Dakar JAAY DOOLE BI in French No 25, Nov 81 p 1

[Editorial by Amadou Top: "General Warning"]

[Text] Legislative and presidential elections theoretically are scheduled for 1983.

Our country's different political parties have over a year to prepare for them. Those parties which would like to use the elections as a barometer to judge the political awareness of the working people are calmly dealing with such matters.

The power-seeking parties, which are up to their ears electioneering in all directions, are worried and will continue to be so.

The Socialist Party [PS], which is in power, is the most distressed of all the political parties today. There are several reasons for this.

As its ball and chain, it is dragging a leader who was thrust into the leadership of the country only because of the subtleties of a manipulated Constitution.

The PS is entirely responsible for an unprecedented crisis which all of the combined ideologues are incapable of exorcising and which no smoke screen can mask.

The PS is shot through with clan contradictions which it is unable to resolve.

The patriotic opposition which was considered to have broken up into rival groups, following recognition of numerous factions, is consolidating and the focal point, the RNDP [National Democratic and Popular Revolution], is gaining ground everywhere.

That is what is worrying the ruling PS and is pushing it toward unrestrained provocation against the opposition parties.

Certainly, his cutback of the state apparatus, which continues to be the last recourse of the crippled bureaucratic middle class--in its political confrontation with the people--is the principal element of the strategy of Abdou Diouf and his party.

The communications media (radio, television, LE SOLEIL) and the administration (governors, prefects, subprefects, the gendarmerie) are thus outrageously placed at the almost exclusive service of the PS, making a mockery of the proclaimed neutrality of republican institutions.

But then if a political party (that is in power) manipulates the state apparatus to keep itself in power, including violation of its own laws, what is there that can force the opposition to respect such a state?

That is the big question which is going to structure the political life of Senegal in the coming months.

DEFENSE MINISTER ASSERTS NEW CROSS-BORDER STRIKES COULD OCCUR

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 23 Nov 81 p 4

[Text] Phalaborwa--At the official inauguration of 7 infantry battalion at Phalaborwa on Saturday, Defense Minister General Magnus Malan said that South Africa's enemies should realize that, if need be, the country will not hesitate to act again as it did in the case of Operation Protea.

No self-respecting country with the safety and welfare of its citizens at heart can stand by and watch while terrorist groups try to jeopardize its future.

Any country harboring and supporting terrorists should realize that the terrorists will lose the struggle. "We are determined to eradicate them, even if we have to cross over our borders to achieve that."

Pride

"Both our friends and our enemies should now be aware that we plan to solve our problems without outside interference. We shall not allow our future to be determined by outsiders."

South Africans are proud that, despite boycotts and a generally hostile world attitude, they have succeeded in creating a military force that our enemies now dread.

South Africa is also proud that it doesn't need foreign military equipment or instructors to maintain its military hitting-power--unlike some of South Africa's outspoken and critical neighbors.

Support

But the defense force would not have such success against the country's enemies, were it not for the loyal support of the population.

"In a struggle such as the one we are now engaged in, and that keeps making increasing demands of us, no defense force can operate in isolation. We need the active support of all the country's inhabitants: whites, coloreds and blacks, men and women. The defence force is, so to speak, a public concern and we are proud of that fact."

General Malan said that Phalaborwa's strategic position in South Africa's defense made it an obvious choice for infantry training.

After General Malan had officially inaugurated the base, the comma[illegible]g officer, Maj H.J. Schultz, presented him with a lynx head made of wild olive. The lynx--with a cross for background--is the unit's emblem, and wild olive is indigenous to the area.

1980 SEEN AS VITAL YEAR FOR BLACK PROGRESS

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 18 Nov 81 p 5

[Text]

THE year 1980 was in various respects a prosperous one for the Black peoples of Southern Africa, who benefitted by improved economic conditions, as well as various new initiatives and structural changes on the level of Government policy.

This is the conclusion reached by the Bureau of Economic Research, Co-operation and Development (Benso) in its latest publication, "Statistical Survey of Black Development 1980", which has just been released.

"Although much was said before 1980 about a constellation of Southern African states, of new forms of co-operation, of a confederal dispensation and of better possibilities for Black development, important initiatives in this regard were taken in 1980," writes Benso in its review of the year's main events affecting Black development.

In the economic sphere, too, there was considerable progress. The favourable growth experienced in South Africa in 1980, together with the abolition by the Government of measures restricting the participation of Blacks in economic life, had made it possible for Blacks to make economic progress on a wide front.

Decrease

"Unemployment among Blacks decreased by almost one percent to 8,1 percent of the Black labour force, which means that the number of unemployed Blacks is 36 000 lower than the figure for the previous year.

"Moreover, real wage increases have resulted in most working Blacks being better off today than they were a year ago," states Benso.

Considered over a somewhat longer period, it appeared from the first results of the 1980 Population Census that over the past decade there had been considerable progress with the settlement of Blacks in the national states.

"The increase in numbers from 1970 to 1980 came to 44,7 percent, as against only 11,6 percent in the 'so-called White area'. This achievement can be attributed to:

- The implementation of resettlement programmes,
- Border changes which made possible even the inclusion of large towns such as Kwa Mashu,
- Political development which, in the early '70s, in particular, led to much additional Government employment, and
- The positive influence of development programmes through which new job opportunities were created."

Benso's statistical series show that the greatest progress made with development programmes during the '70s was at points near the borders of the national states.

As a result of this, many people were able to live in their own areas while working outside them.

"Once the new initiatives concerning matters such as economic co-operation and regional development for the coming years gain substance, the results should be even better," the report says.

This conclusion confirmed earlier findings of the Bureau that although heartland development should always enjoy the highest priority, South Africa's salvation did not lie in the creation of a large number of separate and struggling economies, but in economic co-operation within a system of political separateness Benso says.

In a diary of events affecting Black development, a wide variety of the events of 1980 are recorded, but the most important part of the report is the more than 100 tables on all aspects of the development of the Blacks in Southern Africa.

Among the more interesting figures in this review are those on the income of the Blacks.

For instance, it is shown that the total income earned by Blacks in the Republic and the national states increased from R2 408-million in 1970 to R6 908-million in 1977.

This gives an income per person of R383 in 1977, as against the R157 in 1972 (these figures do not, however, make provision for inflation).

Another interesting figure is that of purchasing power, where it is indicated that only R1 [illegible]-million out of the total purchasing power of Blacks of R6 [illegible]-million can be applied in the national states.

The report also shows that real earnings, after provision for the declining value of money, of Black workers in the Republic and national states, outside the agricultural sector, have risen since 1973 from R585 per worker to R7[illegible] per worker in 1978 (all figures expressed in 1970 rand).

This rise represents an increase of 3[illegible] percent. As against this, the real earnings of White workers, again calculated in 1970 rand, dropped slightly over this period by 3,5 percent.

"Thus it is very clear that the relative wage gap narrowed rapidly in the period concerned," the report says.

The tables on education show that the number of classrooms for Blacks increased between 1975 and 1979 from 62 580 to 80 697.

NEW RIGHT WING PARTY IS FOUNDED

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 19 Nov 81 p 5

[Article by Jaap Theron]

[Text]

ACTION Own Future (AOF), is to formally start a new right-wing political party tomorrow.

AOF plans a two-day congress tomorrow and Saturday at which about 450 delegates will be present, Dr J A Gerber, secretary of the organisation, said yesterday.

Most of the delegates would come from the Transvaal, others from the Free State and a few each from the Cape and Natal.

Dr Gerber said the delegates would represent about every possible occupation and were definitely not only right-wing academics, as has been suggested in certain circles.

The AOF has published the outlines of an envisaged policy, which appears to be some sort of rigid demand for self-determination for every population group in South Africa on the basis that Whites, Coloureds, Asians and the various Black groups would be allocated a portion of the Republic as its "appointed country".

A policy document says: "Such a division of the country into appointed countries means that separate development will be taken to its full and logic conclusion, so that every separate national group will ultimately be given its own country in which it will govern with full autonomy."

The plans also envisage consolidated "appointed countries" for each nation, not only to define boundaries, but also to make them economically viable.

"The party will endeavour to create for the proposed independent states (for Whites, Coloureds, Asians and Blacks) — in their ethnic diversity — as well as for all other states in southern Africa, a dispensation characterised by peaceful co-existence, mutual co-operation, and where necessary and as far as possible, mutual help," the policy document says.

HNP COULD LET PROGRESSIVES WIN IN JOHANNESBURG

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 18 Nov 81 p 9

[Article by Poen de Villiers]

[Text]

The Herstigte Nasionale Party could be instrumental in letting the Progressive Federal Party come into power in the Johannesburg City Council next year — and it would not mind at all — according to the HNP leader, Mr Jaap Marais.

He was commenting on allegations in Johannesburg civic circles that the HNP would split the right-wing vote during the municipal elections next year, allowing the PFP to take over control of the city.

Mr Marais said he would not mind at all if this was so, because if the PFP came into power, the situation in Johannesburg would not change.

"Whether it is the PFP of Van Zyl Slabbert and Colin Eglin or the PFP of Pik, Fanie and P W Botha, it is the same.

"The one is just a little more subdued than the other and not so forthright in its policies, but basically they are the same," Mr Marais said.

"In any event, I think it is much safer to fight a frank opponent, and that is what the PFP is."

One of the main issues the HNP would concentrate on during its election campaign would be to condemn the opening of facilities to all races, he added.

In this regard a recent incident at Gilooly's Farm, when a Black man was shot dead after an argument between a White couple and a group of Blacks, would be used, he said, to show how racial friction could be caused by opening all facilities.

Mr Marais will announce the names of at least eight HNP candidates for the municipal elections at a public meeting in the Selborne Hall, Johannesburg, tonight at 7.30.

He said his announcement would contain some surprises, and these would not be news of possible defectors from the National Party. "We have very strong candidates."

Although he is expected to name only eight candidates tonight, more are expected to be nominated at a later stage. "We are definitely active in many other wards," Mr Marais said.

SLABBERT WARNS AGAINST MILITARY ACTION FOR NP GOALS

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 20 Nov 81 p 2

[Article by Murray McNally: "'SADF Must Not Become The NP In Uniform'"]

[Text]

CAPE TOWN. — As the official Opposition in Parliament the Progressive Federal Party had to guard against the Defence Force becoming the National Party in uniform, the leader of the PFP, Dr Frederik van Zyl Slabbert, said when he opened the party's national congress in Cape Town last night.

The PFP had to be ever-watchful that military action did not become an extension of the goals of the NP, Dr Slabbert warned.

If the actions of the Defence Force were calculated to maintain the status quo, which the PFP rejected, then the opposition should either protest vigorously or "get out of parliament".

As a party the PFP believed military action was necessary to preserve stability to create a shield behind which it could pursue its goal of peaceful constitutional change.

As a political party in Parliament the PFP accepted the necessity for stability in order to bring about constitutional and evolutionary change because such change had never taken place anywhere in the world under conditions of instability and chaos.

The party had to continually question the Government by asking it how it was using the time bought through military action to bring about change to a society with more justice and freedom.

The party opposed organisations and groups which sought to bring about revolutionary, violent or subversive change in South Africa, Dr Salbbert said.

Dr Slabbert said that from time to time the PFP had been urged to demonstrate a greater willingness to negotiate with or even to go into coalition with the Government.

But he had made it clear that he would only participate in a political realignment when the majority of the White electrorate accepted that all South Africans, regardless of race, ethnicity, sex or religion were entitled to the rights of full citizenship.

They should also stand for the removal of all forms of statutory racial discrimination.

The majority of the White electorate should also accept that all South Africans were entitled to participate in the political process on the same basis as any other person but that there should be no domination of one group over another.

This principle could be given effect in a number of different constitutional forms which could be negotiated. And finally, the principle must be accepted that the individual's membership of a group must be based on voluntary association and not be the result of legal compulsion.

"Any move the Government makes in this direction on these issues will find us ready to talk business and to give our support," Dr Slabbert said.

DTA BREAKUP COULD LEAD TO SWAPO VICTORY

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 20 Nov 81 p 6

[Editorial]

[Text]

WITH an election in South West Africa looking more and more likely, this is not the time for strains to appear in the ruling Democratic Turnhalle Alliance.

Nor is it time for the DTA to begin looking askance at South Africa and questioning its actions or motives.

Yet is is precisely at this moment that the potential for trouble is evident.

The DTA claims that its efforts to bring about change since it came to power have been thwarted by the territory's interim constitution, Proclamation AG 8, providing for second-tier ethnic representative authorities.

DTA members allege that the SWA National Party, the dominant group in the White authority, has abused AG 8 to sabotage the central government's policy.

Some members of the DTA are adamant that AG 8 should be scrapped; others want amendments, and there are some who say AG 8 can work as it is, if it is interpreted and enforced correctly by the South African Government.

Mr Dirk Mudge, the chairman of the DTA, has reported growing impatience with South Africa over delays in amending AG 8.

"We are not at all happy about the way in which AG 8 is misused by certain representative authorities," he says.

In the South African Government's view, it would probably be better to wait until the completion of the United Nations supervised elections to let the people of South West Africa decide freely on the constitution.

But Mr Mudge says, "We feel in the interim period the wishes of the majority of the people should be met."

He has accused the SWA National Party of using language, culture and identity to discriminate against others, and has referred in this regard to racially exclusive schools, colleges and hospitals.

One can see the dilemma of the South African Government.

If it interferes with the White second-tier authority by acceding to the DTA's demands, it would face the outrage of conservative Whites not only in the territory but in South Africa as well.

But if it rejected the DTA's demands, it would alienate its chief ally in the territory.

Against ethnicity

Meanwhile, some of the DTA's members are opposed to ethnicity altogether.

The DTA President, Mr Kalangula, is the leading voice in this regard.

He wants an end to the system whereby 11 ethnic groups each has its own authority and suggests the territory be divided, instead, into provinces.

He also wants the DTA to become a single, fully-fledged party rather than an alliance of 11 ethnically-based parties.

With his Owambos representing over 50 percent of the population, this would mean that his people would dominate the party.

This may be one of the reasons for his proposal besides opposition to ethnicity.

The DTA head committee has rejected both ideas, but we have not heard the last of these matters.

The DTA itself is in a fix.

While it wants AG 8 amended or interpreted to its satisfaction, it risks a White walk-out from the alliance if there is interference with the White second-tier authority or there are moves to abolish the remaining vestiges of apartheid.

Conversely, if it does not change the present situation, it will alienate the Black electorate which constitutes 90 percent of the voters.

Either way, therefore, it stands to lose.

All this potential for trouble has arisen when the Western Five contact group is moving relentlessly towards a UN-supervised election and South Africa must decide, finally, whether to accept a settlement on Western terms or continue what has become a costly border war.

If we have one warning to the people of the territory at this point it is this:

You cannot go divided into an election against Swapo, which must inevitably win if there is no united front against it.

Bear that in mind in the next few months, which may be the run-up to an election which will determine the fate of the territory and its inhabitants.

SOUTH AFRICA FORCED TO IMPORT GRAIN

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 18 Nov 81 pp 1-2

[Article: "South Africa May Have To Import Grain"]

[Text] The hope that next year South Africa will not have to import grain is rapidly fading. A grain shortage is staring the country in the face, after about 300,000 tons of one of the most promising grain harvests in the Free State in years have already been lost because of drought. Further losses are possible if it does not start to rain quickly.

About 2 months ago, the unofficial estimate from the Grain Council indicated that the country's grain harvest could be in the neighborhood of 2 million tons, which would have meant that South Africa would not have to import grain. Thanks to good weather conditions, the grain harvest in the Western and Southern Cape appeared excellent and growth in its early stages also appeared promising in the Free State.

However, Mr Dennis van Aarde, general manager of the Grain Council, told DIE BURGER yesterday that it has been estimated that 300,000 tons of the Free State harvest have already been lost. The harvest had been one of the most promising in history, and if conditions had remained favorable, a total South African harvest of 2.5 million tons would have been possible. South Africa's consumption amounts to roughly 2 million tons per year.

The loss of 300,000 tons already means that South Africa will not be able to meet its domestic grain requirements. Grain will probably have to be imported next year. A more accurate estimate of the losses which have already been suffered, will be available later this week.

Rain is urgently needed to save that part of the harvest which has not yet been destroyed by the drought.

Meanwhile farmers in the Western and Southern Cape are busy bringing in a good grain harvest. Conditions during the course of the year were generally favorable. However, in parts of the Southern Cape it was at times so wet that the farmers could not sow or sowed very late. These extremely wet conditions were not always conducive to the growth of the grain either.

BROTHERS LEAGUE, CHURCH CONNECTION DISCUSSED

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 18 Nov 81 p 13

[Article by Rykie Van Reenen: "Ties with Brothers League Hurt Afrikaner Churches"]

[Text] In a situation, which they believe will take on crisis proportions for South Africa and for the Christian faith in the turbulent eighties, 24 NG [Dutch Reformed] theologians and members have written a volume of essays in search of a clear course for their church in those years, which is to be published this week by Tafelberg Publishers.

The editors are Professor Nico Smith of the Stellenbosch Seminary, Dr Frans O'Brien Geldenhuys, former high official of the executive committee of the General Synod of the NG Church, and Dr Piet Meiring of Pretoria.

The list of contributors represents some of the most lively and most innovative loyal thinking within the church today.

"Critical noises will also be heard about the NG Church," the contributors said in the preface, "but this criticism originates in an emotional solidarity with the church which each of the writers feels very deeply."

Each subject is introduced by one writer and then developed from a different point of view by a second writer.

DIE BURGER is publishing four selections from "Storm Compass." The first one appears today.

As long as the question of the Afrikaner churches and the Afrikaner Brothers League [AB] has not been thoroughly investigated, the church cannot make a contribution to the talks on constitutional change. It would never be clear whether the church was acting in obedience to Jesus Christ or whether perhaps it was only following the Brothers League.

Thus wrote Professor Jacques Kriel, rector of the University of Bophuthatswana who, in addition to being a physician and a philosopher, is also a trained theologian. He is one of the concerned contributors to "Storm Compass."

He said that it is the practical experience of many sensitive synod-goers that during sessions of the synod, members of the Brothers League actively and secretly plot to influence the decisions in a certain direction -- to such an extent that a synod-goer, in his frustration, proposed that the synod decisions be prefaced by the words: "We and the Brothers League have decided ..."

Can a church, asked Professor Kriel, an estimated 60 percent (it could be more!) of whose preachers are members of a secret political-cultural organization, still be the church of Christ? Indeed, it is one of the "basic requirements of the gospel," as Professor Bernard Lategan pointed out in his preceding essay, that a Christian owes his highest obedience and loyalty to Christ and that the church should always maintain a critical distance with regard to politics.

The role of the AB in the church is also questioned from another angle in "Storm Compass." Professor Tom de Koning, head of the Department of Communications at the RAU [Rand Afrikaner University], wrote about the demands made by the times on the Afrikaner member and the more open approach to and tolerance for a divergent point of view, also within their own ranks, which he must get used to.

How much room can there be for this, he asked in turn, in a church where such a high percentage of its preachers belongs to a secret, opinion shaping organization?

Professor Kriel wrote his piece as a commentary on Professor Lategan's essay on the church and constitutional change, in which basic evangelical requirements for society are spelled out. It is important, said Professor Kriel, that we should repeatedly and without fear submit ourselves to the test of such research in order to determine to what extent we are participating in making positions acceptable which do not agree with these basic requirements.

To a greater or lesser degree, this has happened to all churches throughout the centuries -- this has also happened with us, he said.

Through identification with the ruling socio-political, cultural and economic systems of its time, the church has, throughout the course of its history, repeatedly succeeded in gaining socio-political, cultural and economic power and influence, but at the same time it has lost its right to be called the church of Christ.

Throughout the centuries, noted Professor Kriel, it was in this area that the greatest temptations occurred for the church of Christ, and it was here that the church repeatedly denied its Lord.

When he talks about the church in Southern Africa in this context, he means in our situation the Afrikaner church, and more specifically the NG Church. This is the church which occupies the highest position of power as far as numbers and influence are concerned.

"To what extent this also applies to the other (also the English, the colored and the black) churches in the country, I don't know -- it is up to them to do some soul searching."

Professor Kriel said that it is a question here of the nature of the church, and not only of a small technical point which synods could very easily circumvent through majority decisions.

He said that this active interference by members of the Brothers League in synod decisions is not only documentary proof, there is also evidence that it represents a fundamental part of the goals of the AB. In this context, he referred to Professor Pelser's book "The Afrikaner Brothers League: First 50 Years," and to the "Acts and Agenda" of the eighth ordinary session of the Synod of Northern Transvaal and of the Free State Synod of the NG Church, 1979.

"The elementary question is whether a Christian who gives his highest loyalty to Christ and to his fellow believers, may or can in principle be a member of any secret organization. At least in terms of one aspect this organization demands higher loyalty than Christ -- the member must lie about his membership and about the activities of the organization toward his fellow believers and is thus required to purposefully disregard Christ's teaching of absolute integrity (Mathew 5:37)."

"From here, it is only a small step to absolute loyalty to the sectional interests and specific ideology of the organization, which is effectively withdrawn from the continued loving counsel and criticisn of our brothers in the body of Christ."

"Membership by Christians in secret organizations also makes it impossible for the church to carry out its mission of reconciliation and to form a bridge between people who otherwise stand worlds apart from each other," as Professor Lategan put it.

"We cannot in all openness and honesty bow down together before the same Lord in a confidential situation to search together for the truth and the will of our Lord regarding our situation if some of us are members of a secret organization -- however 'Christian' or 'holy' the goals of that organization may ostensibly be."

"It is impossible in principle for a Christian to be a member of a secret organization, and the church which allows this can no longer act as the body of Christ in this world," wrote Professor Kriel.

Professor De Koning commented on BEELD editor Ton Vosloo and his analysis of the often sad image projected by the church. Professor De Koning sought a reason for this in the fact that the Afrikaners and the government are so strongly associated with the NG Church because of the church's role in the social and political emancipation of the Afrikaners.

"To a large extent, the actions of the Afrikaners are seen as the actions of members of the NG Church, a fact which can be explained by the numerical strength of the church. Now the members are being condemned for the hardness of heart they display, and especially because they do not show the necessary empathy with Christians of a different color."

"This is due substantially to the leadership role played by its preachers in the process of the social and political emancipation of the Afrikaners," said Professor De Koning.

"How much room is there for a more open approach in a church, an estimated 60 percent of whose preachers belong to a secret opinion shaping organization, the Afrikaner Brothers League?"

"The close connection between the NG Church members and officials and the Brothers League, and in turn the close connection between the Brothers League and the government, do not promote the credibility of the Afrikaner believers in talks with other believers. In recent years, this has been one of the strongest factors to have contributed to the negative image acquired by the Afrikaner church within the broader South African society," wrote Professor De Koning.

The three theses of the contributors about the church and the AB are:

- Because the activities of such a powerful instrument of opinion formation such as the Afrikaner Brothers League take place /in secret/ [in italics], the free formation of public opinion is put under restraint. /Fear/ [in italics] that their future careers will be stunted keeps its members from openly and impartially questioning the political and social system in South Africa and from bearing fearless Christian witness.

- The /close connection/ [in italics] between the members and officials of the Afrikaner church and the Brothers League, and the close connection between the Brothers League and the National Party and the government, are causing serious damage to the credibility of the church.

- /Membership/ [in italics], especially by church officials, in the Afrikaner Brothers League is under Christian suspicion for the following reasons:
1. Nothing which takes place according to the norms of God's Word should be secret.
2. The recent publication of the names of members of the Brothers League, among which were a large number of preachers, led to suspicion and group formation within the church, which is damaging to the unity of the church.

BROEDERBOND NO DANGER TO CHURCHES SAYS LEADER

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 20 Nov 81 p 3

[Article by Jaap Theron]

[Text]

THE chairman of the Afrikaner Broederbond (AB), Professor Carel Boshoff, yesterday emphatically rejected allegations by some theologians in a book "Storm-Kompas" that the AB was harming Afrikaans churches.

Prof Boshoff reacted in an interview with The Citizen to allegations in the book such as "that synod representatives who are Broederbond members were plotting behind the scenes with a view to influence decisions at synod meetings" and "that it was impossible for a Christian to be a member of a secret organisation".

He said: "The whole reference to the AB is subject to the main theme of the book."

A lot of unneccessary dust has been kicked up regarding the AB's alleged role in church affairs, Prof Boshoff said, adding: "I think the dust should first settle so that we can give attention to the actual problems of the Afrikaans churches.

"The allegation that the confidentiality of the Christian belief was not in tune with secrecy, was grabbed from thin air.

"Our daily life is full of various forms of confidentialities. One gets it in normal business practice and in the daily activities of the public service.

"Even Afrikaans church council meetings are closed meetings and confidentiality and secrecy surrounds the procedures of newspapers with a view to protecting sources of information.

"And no-one blames these organisations, including the Afrikaans churches, for functioning confidentially," he stressed.

Prof Boshoff also emphasised that the AB "has never been so absolutely closed that people who have interests in it do not have the opportunity to discuss their problems."

"The government as well as the three major Afrikaans churches have on more than one occasion investigated the AB at the request of the respective synods — investigations that were conducted by people who were not members of the AB.

"All possible co-operation was given to them by the AB and without exception their findings were positive.

Prof Boshoff revealed yesterday that the AB was at present being "investigated" by the synod of the Northern Transvaal NG Kerk.

"There is currently yet another discussion between the AB and the synod of the church in the northern Transvaal and it is taking place at the request of the synod."

He rejected as, "untrue" statements in the theologians' book "that people cannot freely express themselves with regard to the church's attitude towards politics, because their standing in the church could be affected."

"This allegation is simply untrue because various key positions in the Afrikaans churches are currently held by people who do not belong to the AB," he claimed.

"The AB is not attached to any political party and does not function as an instrument of any party. AB members are in fact representative of various political parties," Prof Boshoff revealed.

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 19 Nov 81 p 6

[Editorial]

[Text]

THE BLACKMAILING and blacklisting of sportsmen who come out, or are scheduled to play here, has taken an even uglier turn.

Jimmy Connors has been forced out of next week's Sigma Open tournament at Ellis Park because of threats to his life and the lives of his wife and son.

Wojtek Fibak, Vitas Gerulaitis are out as well.

Both because of pressure on them not to play.

The anti-apartheid crowd crow. They have scored a major victory, they say.

Sam Ramsamy, chairman of Sanroc (the South African Non-Racial Olympic Council) claims it is just the beginning.

"You thought you had won when India allowed Geoff Cook and Geoff Boycott to play there. We'll talk again."

This is the very same Ramsamy whose boycotts have brought hate and venom into world sport.

Who has played a leading role in devising ways in which to blackmail top sportsmen and showbiz personalities into not coming here.

Who sees nothing wrong in denying the individual the right to play where he likes, against whom he likes, in the true traditions of sports freedom.

Who sees nothing wrong in denying the entertainer the right to perform where he likes, in front of whatever audiences wants to hear or see him, in the true traditions of artistic freedom.

And now death threats are added to the armoury of hate which the sports blackmailers use against people who are prepared to come here to play whatever game is their sport and their livelihood.

Thus the anti-apartheid mob progresses from boycotts, to blacklists, to death threats.

Not that we think overseas sports stars should take these threats seriously.

No-one would dare lift a hand to Jimmy Connors; no-one would dare harm any other player, either, because he is due to play here.

Besides, top players who believe in freedom must stand up to threats and pressures, whatever their nature, because if they do not, they are allowing that precious freedom to be undermined; they are allowing themselves to fall victim to the Mafia of the non-sporting underworld.

Meanwhile, we must not be depressed by what has happened to the Sigma Open.

Our sportsmen have long been harassed by Ramsamy and people like him.

But we cannot and must not falter.

We must continue to end discrimination in sport here, even if there is a backlash caused by the refusal of the anti-South African groups and their supporters to accept that sport is now mixed and our sportsmen deserve to be allowed back into international competition.

Our sportsmen must continue to fight the battle for sports freedom and their return to international sport, however hard the road back remains.

But we must also fight the battle at home with greater energy — the battle not only to end the last vestiges of discrimination, but also against those organisations which still bedevil our relations with other countries; which still create stumbling blocks to our return to world sport; which still keep their players apart, in a form of racialism-in-reverse, because they will not have anything to do with the legitimate controlling bodies of sport here.

The time has come to take the gloves off.

To fight these organisations and their allies abroad with the same ruthlessness they show towards our sportsmen.

NEED FOR GROUP AREAS COMMITTEE DISCUSSED

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 17 Nov 81 p 16

[Editorial: "Thorough Investigation Necessary"]

[Text] With the announcement of the names of the members of a technical committee, which will study the Group Areas Act and related laws, regulations and ordinances, the minister of community development has taken a badly needed step. It is high time for a decisive response to the contradictions, bottlenecks, and especially the dissatisfaction and friction caused by the application of the laws in question.

Minister Pen Kotze made it clear in his announcement that the principle of separation of residential areas and the orderly formation and development of communities as such would not be touched, but that a study would be made of possible amendment, adjustment, consolidation, rationalization and streamlining of the laws in question. The other laws to be touched are the Slum Act, the Separate Facilities Act, the Community Development Act, the Housing Act and numerous regulations and ordinances.

In the past, the Group Areas Act itself, and especially its implementation, have aroused strong opposition and criticism from the colored national groups. The Erika Theron Committee found that the implementation of that law has produced serious grievances among the Coloreds, while the large scale moving of blacks -- to clear up "black patches" in white areas -- has given South Africa intensely negative publicity, especially abroad, in spite of its positive intentions. In terms of the latter, the government has already given its assurance that this will never again be done without consultation with the people involved.

The problems which have arisen lately are of an extremely complicated nature, as they were often associated with more than one law or regulation. For example, both the Group Areas Act and the Liquor Act came up when decisions had to be made on the normalization of sports relations. There are still some difficulties to be ironed out.

The committee has a difficult task. It will, among other things, have to give attention to the existence of areas where national groups are mixed -- so-called gray areas -- and the insistence that they should be recognized as such and even be expanded. Also the legal rights of various national groups within an area and the question of whether this should also include the right to housing, is one of the questions which deserves urgent attention.

What is also especially necessary is greater clarity, which could be promoted by the consolidation of divergent legislation.

INVESTIGATIVE COMMITTEE ON GROUP AREAS ACT NAMED

Capetown DIE BURGER in Afrikaans 17 Nov 81 p 15

[Article: "Investigation of Areas Act: Names Known"]

[Text] The names of the members of the technical committee set up at the request of the Presidential Council to study the provisions of the Group Areas Act and other related legislation with an eye to possible amendments, were made known yesterday by Mr Pen Kotze, minister of community development.

They are: Judge Jan Strydom of the Windhoek High Court, president; and Messrs S.W. van Wyk, president of the Group Areas Council, G.F. Smalberger, former chief constitutional law advisor, and P.D. McEnery, general manager in the Department of Community Development. Mr McEnery is the secretary.

The committee's task is "accepting and maintaining the assumption that South African society can best be regulated and served on the basis of the traditional way of life of residential area separation according to the principles of a healthy and orderly community formation and development, and without detracting from the existence of their own villages, urban and rural areas and the community life of the various national groups, to inquire into the Group Areas Act and related laws, such as the Slum Act, the Separate Facilities Act, the Community Development Act and the Housing Act, proclamations and regulations issued pursuant to those laws, as well as related ordinances."

The study is to be carried out with an eye to "recommendations for possible amendments, adjustments, consolidation, rationalization or streamlining of such laws in the light of identifiable deficiencies, bottlenecks, areas of friction and contradictions in the implementation and application of these laws."

BUSINESS LEADER CALLS FOR MORE PROTECTIVE TARIFFS

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 20 Nov 81 p 26

[Article by Peter Moscardi: "'Beware the Predators'"]

[Text]

A STRONG case can be made against those foreign manufacturers who, when it suits them, dump cut-priced goods on the local market and, unlike those who live and work here, do not have the interests of the South African economy at heart.

Addressing a gathering to mark the opening of Sappi Kraft's new R20-million paper mill at Milnerton earlier in the week, Basil London, Sappi's chairman, suggested that the time had come to have another look at South Africa's tariff protection system.

"Our tariff protection system should be examined with a view to using selective import controls to protect those companies that are backing South Africa's future," he said.

Mr London described foreign manufacturers who export cut-priced goods to South Africa as "commercial predators, looking for a quick kill".

The Sappi mill will provide the Western Cape with its first on-the-spot source of Kraft liner and fluting material for the corrugated boxes that carry the area's products and produce to other parts of the country and abroad.

An urgent need exists for South African industrialists to create new jobs, said Mr London.

"But the need goes deeper than that. We not only have to expand employment opportunities, we have to locate those opportunities where they will do the most good.

"The present decentralisation incentives did not allow Sappi to locate this mill in a non-urban area. But consolation can be drawn from the fact that the Government has indicated it will soon be introducing a new plan for the promotion of decentralisation."

WHITES INJECT CASH INTO SOWETO

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 18 Nov 81 p 8

[Article by Lawrence Mayekiso]

[Text] WHITE investors are injecting money into Soweto to help the city's development.

In the past White money entered Soweto in the form of loans to Black individuals.

Now that Whites are legally permitted to form partnerships with Blacks to go into business in the urban Black residential areas, some Whites are taking advantage of this arrangement to invest in those areas, according to Mr John Mkise, a member of the Soweto Chamber of Commerce and Industry.

He said business opportunities and the general development of the area was a temptation to Whites to enter it to compete with the Blacks.

There was a suspicion that Blacks who claimed to have raised large sums of money to go into business in the townships were being used as fronts by Whites who want to trade in Soweto.

These Blacks were tied to stringent written agreements by their financiers, who employed the Blacks as managers to create an impression that the business was Black-owned, while the Whites observed the business operations at a distance, he said.

A Black and White partnership which has come out into the open was announced in Johannesburg yesterday.

It is a legal partnership between Mr Steve Kgame, a Dobsonville community councillor and former photographer/writer, and Mr Jeremy Birkett, managing director of Cinema Management Services.

They have entered into a legal partnership, in which Mr Kgame owns 51 percent of the shares, while Mr Birkett takes 49 percent.

The partners have converted a community hall in Dobsonville in greater Soweto into a modern cinema, which starts business on Tuesday, November 24.

Mr Kgame said yesterday at a Press conference that discussions between himself and Mr Birkett to enter into the cinema partnership started in 1978.

Since then discussions with the authorities to approve the partnership have been going on and they had to go through a lot of red tape.

"We had to go through 13 different offices to get permission to start the business," Mr Kgame said.

"We have spent about R23 000 on the renovation and conversion of the hall to a proper cinema to give it a competitive appearance to cinemas in the city."

BOP DEFICIT COULD REACH R4-BILLION

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 20 Nov 81 p 28

[Text] THE deficit on the current account of the South African balance of payments could exceed R4-billion in 1981, compared to a R2,8-billion surplus in 1980. Finance Minister Owen Horwood said yesterday.

Speaking at the Financial Mail annual Investment Conference, he said the objectives of curbing inflation and correcting the balance of payments disequilibrium must now be accorded a higher policy priority, even if this had a certain pro-cyclical retraining effect on the economy in the short term.

Horwood said the current account of the balance of payments was likely to record a further deficit in 1982, but this could shrink progressively during the year and could even move into surplus if the gold price were to move up again.

"In view of the continued deficit expected on the balance of payments on current account, capital movements to and from South Africa will play a particularly important role in 1982," he said.

He said these movements would be greatly influenced by the ease or tightness of domestic financial markets and the relationship between domestic and foreign interest rates.

"In this field, the key to success lies in our ability to limit domestic credit expansion to both the Government and private sector, and in maintaining realistic market-related interest and spot and forward exchange rates."

Horwood said if the authorities were successful in this, "we should have little difficulty in financing the anticipated current account deficit in 1982."

The economy has now entered a downward cyclical phase and "there will be no premature reflation or stimulation of the economy."

He said Government revenue in 1982/83 would again be affected adversely by the low gold price and the continued increase in mining costs.

Horwood said to keep the budget deficit before borrowing to manageable proportions next year, strict control over Government spending would be essential.

He said financing this deficit and the deficit on the current account without losing the authorities' grip on the money supply, "will require even tighter financial discipline and continued high nominal rates of interest in 1982."

Horwood said the rate of growth in real gross domestic product in 1982 would be around two to three percent, against 4 to 4,5 percent this year.

He said the increase in real private consumption expenditure may fall to four percent in 1982, compared with about five percent in 1981 and Government expenditure was unlikely to exceed its current rate of increase of about three percent in real terms. — Reuter.

BRIEFS

RAND FLOAT MANAGEMENT--South Africa's exchange rate policy will remain one of managed floating and the Reserve Bank's intervention in the market. Through purchases and sales of US dollars, will continue to be viewed as part of overall monetary and financial policy, says Mr Horwood. He told the investment conference: "The effects of exchange rate policy on domestic inflation (currently running at around 16 percent) will at all times be fully taken into account. Horwood said there was a net inflow of R360 during the first nine months of 1981, compared to a net outflow of R2,8 billion in 1980. This inflow of capital in relation to the deficit of about R2,8 billion on the current account during this period meant the net gold and other foreign reserves declined by about 2,4 billion during the first three quarters of 1981. Foreign reserves were augmented by net short-term borrowings of R2,1 billion by the Reserve Bank and other banks during this period. Horwood said: "As this decline in net reserves implies, there was substantial intervention by the Reserve Bank in the foreign exchange market in support of the rand during this period". Nevertheless, the commercial rand still depreciated against the dollar by 23 percent and against a weighted basket of foreign currencies by about 14 percent during the first ten months of 1981, he said. SHELL TO MINE TUNGSTEN--Shell South Africa has discovered recoverable reserves of tungsten-bearing ore, which in several years could cover the country's entire tungsten requirements, Shell executive-director John Wilson told Reuters yesterday. South Africa currently imports around 800 tons of tungsten ore annually, mostly from Canada, and last produced tungsten domestically in 1969, when 61 tons were recovered. Wilson, who becomes chairman of Shell SA next March, said the company's Anglo-Dutch parent had given the go-ahead for a full-scale feasibility study in the Upington district of the Cape Province, after the success of initial tests. The cost of importing tungsten is only around $100,000 a year, industry sources said, but the strategic importance would be immeasurable, they noted, should a trade embargo be imposed on South Africa. Wilson declined to detail what amount of recoverable reserves Shell had discovered, but a company spokesman estimated capital expenditure of about R25-million would be needed to exploit the mine. A company spokesman said if the new feasibility study proved successful, and everything else ran on schedule, the mine should be operational in the second half of 1984. FIREARMS THEFTS--Thieves raided a Bothaville garage and Viljoenskroon shop and escaped with 41 firearms, ammunition and a bakkie valued at more than R15 000 on ESCOM EXPENDITURES FOR DECADE--In this decade, Escom will spend about R14 000-million, in 1981 money terms, on new projects and variations of old projects. Over two-thirds of this money will be spent locally, Jan Smith, chairman of Escom said in Johannesburg yesterday. Addressing the Financial Mail Investment Conference, Mr Smith said Escom's current expansion programme rated among the highest in the world. Because of this competition, among overseas suppliers for business from Escom was keen and orders were placed at attractive terms. Mr Smith also pointed out that the generation of electricity in South Africa was an expensive undertaking. It cost, for example, R700 to install one kilowatt of generating capacity at present-day prices. Escom has to make an investment of about R7 000 in order to supply a middle class house with a possible maximum demand of 10 kW. He also pointed out that although the domestic energy sector was relatively small in relation to some other sectors of the economy, a merked growth rate had appeared in this sector, especially during recent years. Fixed investments in the energy sector in 1960 amounted to less than R60-million. In 1980 this amount has increased to over R3 400-million. ARMS FACTORY AT AMANZIMTOTI--The police raided a fire-arms factory at Amanzimtoti on the Natal south coast early yesterday, confiscating three .303 rifles and a number of weapons which were in the process of being assembled. During the raid, a 60-year-old African man was arrested and is expected to appear in court shortly. The raid was a sequel to the arrest of six Black men and an Indian at a police road-block near Port Shepstone on Sunday. The police set up the road-block near the town and stopped a car shortly afterwards, finding several fire-arms when they searched the vehicle. The driver and his passengers were arrested. SA-ISRAEL TIES--Continued and expanded economic ties between South Africa and Israel would be in the interest of both countries, the Minister of Transport Affairs, Mr Hendrik Schoeman, said yesterday. Speaking at the annual meeting of the SA-Israel Chamber of Economic Relations in Johannesburg, he emphasised the importance of a regular air service between the two countries. He said the most important factor in the continued co-operation was the regular air service provided by the two countries' national airlines. "Despite being beset with problems both economic and political, we have kept this 'airbridge' open and will, needless to say, continue to do so despite the efforts of those countries or agencies antagonistic to us and who strive for our isolation and downfall." HIGHER PETROLEUM PRICES--The price of petroleum products will be increased by 4,6 cents a litre retrospectively from November 1, but the increase will not be passed on to the consumer. Mr F W de Klerk, Minister of Mineral and Energy Affairs, last night said in a statement the increase would be financed, as far as possible, by the Equalisation Fund, "which means that pump prices will not be adjusted at this stage". "This increase is inevitable as a result of the unfavourable exchange rate between the American and South African monetary units which is presently, at a rate of 1,04, much more unfavourable than the rate of 1,19 in April this year, on which the previous price adjustments were based." "The prices of petroleum products in the Republic are closely linked to the exchange rate and the latter will determine the period during which, as well as the extent to which, the Equalisation Fund will be able to absorb the effects of exchange rate adjustments. At the present rate of 1,04 it is still possible for the fund to absorb the price increase of 4,6 cents a litre until about the end of March, 1982. "The capability of the Equalisation Fund to finance this increase can be attributed to the considerable successes which have been achieved during the recent past in negotiations for more favourable oil prices." Mr De Klerk said the Equalisation Fund had thus been strengthened to such an extent that the negative effects of the rate of exchange for the present, and depending of future up or downward rate adjustments, could be neutralised temporarily for the future. CHURCH ON ISSEL'S REDETENTION--Church leaders have criticised the re-detention of banned community leader, Mr Johnny Issel, under Section Six of the Terrorism Act as "particularly vicious and objectionable." The directors of the Churches Urban Planning Commission, the Rev Des Adendorf yesterday called for Mr Issel to be brought to court or released. "Johnny was a valuable and respected member of our organisation and he was helping people to cope with their problems. "We do not believe he was involved in illegal or violent activities. His detention seems to be purely vindictive," he said. Bishop Steven Naidoo, the auxiliary Roman Catholic Archbishop of Cape Town, said: "Detention without trial should not be countenanced in society. People should be allowed to have access to the proper legal procedures and any allegations against them should be contested in a court of law where they have a right to defend themselves." Mr Issel was detained on November 2 under Section 22 of the General Laws Amendment Act at the offices of the Churches' Urban Planning Commission in Hanover Park. His detention order under Section 22 was due to expire on Sunday. This is the fourth time Mr Issel has been detained. In 1973 he was banned for five years and last year he was banned for three years. Mr Issel's wife, Shaheida, claimed on Tuesday she and her seven-year-old daughter, Leila, were being "harassed" by the Security Police. Mrs Issel said the Security Police had visited her Hanover Park home on Monday to question Leila. [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 19 Nov 81 p 11]

NO TOP NP CHANGES--The Transvaal National Party head commitee meeting on November 28 in Pretoria where the three deputy chairmen and the executive (dagbestuur) are to be elected, is likely to be a quiet occasion without or with very few changes at the top structure, according to informed observers. The Citizen understood the Transvaal party leadership is in favour of retaining the existing deputy chairmen without causing a disruption without good cause. The three deputy chairmen, Mr Fanie Botha, Mr Hendrik Schoeman and Mr F W de Klerk, are therefore likely to be re-elected to their positions in the Transvaal NP hierarchy. It is expected that the attitude Dr Andries Treurnicht, Transvaal NP leader, adopted at the recent Transvaal congress that party unity must be given high priority, will prevail at the head commitee meeting. LOWER GDP GROWTH--The growth rate in the real gross domestic product will be lower in 1982 than in 1981, Mr Danie Steyn, Deputy Minister of Finance said in Johannesburg last night. Referring to economic prospects in South Africa for the immediate future. Mr Steyn said with adequate control on the rate of growth of the money supply and the rate of increase in Government expenditure, the inflationary pressure caused by the excessive monetary demand, would be reduced somewhat. Simultaneously, the shortage of skilled labour and the continuous upward pressure on wages and salaries would ease somewhat, with an advantageous effect on imports and on inflation. Mr Steyn predicted that the South African economy would in the immediate future go through a period of consolidation and adaptation. He said the emphasis that the authorities were now placing on a proper control over the rate of growth of the money supply was most certainly not aimed at pressing down the real rate of growth below the level which the productive factors could sustain, but was rather aimed at a balanced economic growth rate where the claims on real goods and services could be met, without unduly increasing the rate of inflation. IMPALA PLATINUM CUTBACK--Impala Platinum is cutting production by around 10 to 15 percent in an effort to improve the world supply/demand imbalance, managing-director Robert Bovell told Reuters yesterday. Bovell said the company started to implement the cuts last month and noted out-put was currently around five percent down. In the annual report, dated September 3, the company said production was running at about 940 000 ounces per annum. The cut was aimed at supporting the world platinum price, he said, which has fallen to $379 an ounce, against the producer selling price of $475. Bovell said the company had set no time limit on the lower rate of out-put. He noted, however, it was unlikely to be increased until the western economies begin to recover, which he saw as unlikely before the end of next year. Both Impala and Rustenburg Platinum Holdings have been able to resist cutting their producer price, despite the fall in the free-market level, due to long-term contracts with customers, Bovell added. LUSOPHONE COUNTRIES' INDUSTRIAL TRAINING SEMINAR ENDS [Excerpts] The International Seminar on Industrial Training for Lusophone African countries met for 4 days in the Hotel Costa do Sol in Luanda. The 53 attending delegates were able to establish several points in common in the area of industrial training among the five participating states, namely, Angola, Cape Verde, Guinea-Bissau, Mozambique and Sao Tome e Principe.

After a long war of national liberation from Portuguese colonialism, these countries are now having a difficult time relaunching their industry, the indispensable basis for national economic development. This situation, already serious because of the hunger, poverty and illiteracy left by colonialism, was further complicated by the mass flight of qualified technicians that occurred when the new states achieved independence.

Today, the lack of a skilled labor force to bring about industrial development is a matter of lively concern among the five Lusophone African states. Meanwhile, the lack of infrastructures capable of meeting the real needs of the five countries has limited their progress in training and upgrading the labor force for the industrial sector.

According to the final conclusions of the proceedings of the international seminar, the participating countries found there was a need to establish a policy at the level of the five African countries, to define responsibilities in the area of industrial training and to create adequate mechanisms for its development. This point was proposed by the organizations of Sweden (SWEDEC), Portugal (NORMA), Brazil (SENAI) and Italy (COMERINT) and the ILO, which participated in the proceedings of the seminar as observers, and is aimed primarily at establishing specific programs that, in an efficient and immediate way, would make it possible to make significant strides in training skilled manpower for the industrial sector.

In addition to exchange visits among the five countries to facilitate the exchange of experiences, the need was noted for a study of the priorities in the area of industrial training in Angola, Cape Verde, Guinea-Bissau, Mozambique and Sao Tome e Principe. These priorities will take in cadre training, equipment, common areas of development and infrastructures for training and advanced training, specifically their rate of utilization.

The five interested countries also decided to propose a better form of assistance from the international organizations, directed more toward the specific circumstances of each state; it was observed that, although facilities have been made available for the training and qualification of industrial personnel, in most cases these facilities are incompatible with the countries' actual levels of development and cannot be put to use.

IMPERIALIST COLLUSION BETWEEN U.S., SOUTH AFRICA CHARGED

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 18 Nov 81 p 4

[Article by Adao Rodrigues Malo: "The Criminal Understanding Between Pretoria and Washington"]

[Excerpts] Imperialism and racism do not want to give up. The reactionary circles of the United States and other Western countries that support South African fascists and local reaction, are attempting everything in their power to prevent progressive changes in Southern Africa.

The fascist Pretoria regime has used military provocations against the independent states of Africa for a long time to undermine the united front of these young countries confronting the aggressive apartheid regime and to force them to renounce their solidarity with the movement for the national liberation of Namibia and South Africa. This is Pretoria's principal strategy at present, aimed at preserving its fascist regime.

Pretoria's Non-Declared War

The Angolan people have a very definite objective: the construction of socialism on Marxist-Leninist principles. At this time, the efforts of our party and state are all concentrated on the national reconstruction of our country based on the orientations and resolutions of the first extraordinary congress of the party, since the cornerstone of our policy is economic activity.

As is known, on 23 August the regular fascist forces attacked our country once again, infiltrating some 200 kms of our territory and sowing death and destruction. Tens of economic and social targets were destroyed, namely industries, schools, hospitals, etc.

The peaceful populations of villages and communities in the province of Cunene suffered barbaric bombings and pillage. Thousands of residents took refuge in neighboring provinces. These bombings also destroyed arable land, thus creating hunger conditions, aggravated by the fact that the racist army killed and stole large quantities of cattle, which were taken to the illegally occupied territory of Namibia. They also took with them agricultural and transportation equipment. As a result, about 160,000 persons were rendered homeless and hungry in the southern part of Angola.

In the light of this situation, how does South Africa explain its barbaric acts to world opinion and African public opinion in particular? What will be the arguments the racists will present to defend and justify their aggression? The answer is more than obvious: in the first place, "it is necessary to destroy the SWAPO guerrillas," who, according to them, infiltrate Namibia from their bases in Angola. The second argument is to "punish Angola for the help it provides to the national liberation movements in Southern Africa." And the third argument is the supposed Cuban and Soviet advance south of Angola. All these, as well as all other justifications, are completely false. The only truth is that the Republic of South Africa attacked a sovereign state, member of the UN and the OAU.

South Africa behaves like a master, bandit and violator on the territory of an independent and sovereign state. It hides its true objectives in the intervention in Angola. However, these are perfectly clear: Pretoria is attempting to destabilize the popular regime in power in the People's Republic of Angola, forcing it to abandon its socialist orientation. To this end, it employs, in addition to regular South African army forces, mercenaries of various nationalities and especially from the puppet, counterrevolutionary and anti-people UNITA.

South African propaganda daily falsifies information on our internal situation, presenting everything in a miserable and negative light. South African propaganda is inciting the people against party and government leaders especially because it fears a socialist Angola and the strengthening of its power, authority and influence. This explains the aggression against the young Angolan state, whose revolution it has attempted to suffocate.

South Africa insolently falsified our military relations with the Soviet Union and the Republic of Cuba. The racists constantly speculate on the intervention of these countries in internal affairs, alleging that the presence of Soviet and Cuban military specialists constitutes "a communist threat" against the interests of South Africa. However, as a young and sovereign country, Angola has the right to create and consolidate its armed forces, according to its choice for development and existing treaties; it will continue to use the assistance of military specialists from friendly countries to strengthen its own defensive capacity.

South Africa also falsified information pertaining to our economic and commercial relations with the socialist countries, presenting it in such a way as to let it be understood that Angola is now totally dependent on these countries and represents their source for raw materials. Indeed, the situation is quite different. Angola is developing as an open society, maintaining active trade and cooperation with tens of foreign firms from capitalist countries.

Angola does not participate in military alliances. There are no foreign bases on its territory. As a member of the nonaligned movement, we are for peaceful coexistance with nations of a different political persuasion. We are not exporting the struggle for national liberation to Namibia or South Africa. In the former, it was initiated by the Namibian people themselves, and the same can be said in relation to the movement for national liberation in South Africa, because it is the very South African people who are fighting there, against the hated anti-human, fascist and anachronistic regime of apartheid.

We do not hide our solidarity with the struggle of the Namibian and South African peoples, which does not mean we are exporting this struggle. We pronounce ourselves for an immediate solution of the Namibian problem on the basis of UN Resolution 435.

We are against any changes to this resolution and also against the plans for a neocolonialist solution of the Namibian problem, which envisions taking the UN out of the process for Namibian independence and holding elections under the control of the Western countries in favor of the white minority.

Pretoria's non-declared war against Angola and other sovereign states in the region is continuing. In the words of Comrade President Jose Eduardo dos Santos: "This destabilizing action is felt in practically the entire world as it reflects the general crisis of capitalism. In order to overcome this crisis, imperialism is using the policy of confrontation through the use of force against the progressive nations and forces of Africa, Europe, Asia and Latin America, in a vain attempt to conquer once again the positions won by those peoples in the various areas who are fighting against colonialism, neocolonialism, the dictatorship of the monopolies and fascism. Imperialism's aggressive attitude obviously proves that the evolution of the internal situation is not favorable. The present balance of power inclines toward the world's progressive forces, which are working toward the strengthening of the alliance between the movement of national liberation, the community of the socialist countries and the countries with a socialist orientation.

SURVEY OF AGRICULTURAL SITUATION, EFFORTS UNDERTAKEN

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 30 Oct 81 p 3

[Article by Elias Disengomoka]

> [Excerpts] Angola belongs to a group of countries which escaped from colonial rule and are engaged in a new and critical stage in their social, economic and political development. After national independence, economic and social problems took over the battlefield. Hence our country is among the countries regarding which apologists for neocolonialism are often quick to distort the picture, deliberately emphasizing the bad points. They do this primarily to create discouragement and despair in the leaders and governments of these countries, to lead them to abandon constructive efforts and studies and to stop struggling against foreign influence over their economies.

However, these apologists deliberately overlook the fact that the data they use to illustrate the contrast in the economic development of the imperialist countries and the underdeveloped countries--the growing debt, the inability to solve many social and economic problems, the malnutrition and hunger experienced in the latter countries--simply represent the end result of colonialism. For example, one need only recall such items as the chemical destruction of natural and cultivated vegetation in Southeast Asia, the work of the Americans during the lengthy Vietnam war, the effects of which will be felt for many years, or the food shortage creating endemic malnutrition in some African zones, where colonialist rapine has left entire populations socially and economically below the level of simple subsistence to this day--this in areas where agrarian reform and the creation of infrastructures (primarily irrigation) could permanently erase the spectre of death by starvation for millions of human beings.

These Western experts in problems of development also underestimate the intention of these people to achieve planned qualitative progress, giving priority to such goals as the elimination of centuries of backwardness through the revision of colonial economic structures; improved living conditions for the large working masses; promotion of these countries to a qualitatively different situation in the international division of labor; reorganization of agrarian structures, and so on.

It is this qualitative leap which we will take up in this article; specifically, the revisions that our country's agrarian structures have undergone and are still undergoing to create an agricultural revolution in the People's Republic of Angola. It is this revision, change and remodeling that we call up as arguments in support of a new agricultural era.

Place of Agriculture in Our Economy

Generally speaking, the Angolan people continue to be peasants or herdsmen; 85 percent of the Angolan people live in the country, engaged mainly in agriculture. Agricultural products also constitute most of our exports and are the major source of foreign exchange. We need only mention coffee, wood, tobacco, sisal and cotton, among others.

In other words, agriculture is the key sector in the economic development of our country. It was in this context that agriculture was defined as the base and industry as the decisive factor in economic and social development.

Correct Distorted Structures

The triumph of the revolution and the second war of liberation, in conjunction with the abandonment and paralysis of most of the agricultural enterprises, caused a violent rupture in capitalistic production relations.

This resulted in the almost total disappearance of the great capitalist agricultural enterprises. These large agricultural plantations were turned into state enterprises or agricultural production cooperatives. It also meant the end of the network of parasitic middlemen who had been entrusted with distributing the marketable goods of the Angolan peasants. This stratum has been replaced since 1976 by a series of state enterprises, such as ENCODIPA [National Enterprise for Purchase and Distribution of Agricultural Products], DINAMA [National Distributor for Agricultural Supplies], DINAPROPE [National Cattle Products Distributing Company] and ENCAFE [National Coffee Enterprise], among others.

This change in production relations was necessarily accompanied by administrative reorganization; that is, exchanging the complex and weighty administrative structures inherited from colonialism for more simple and homogeneous structures, adapted, above all, to the nation's real circumstances. These structures are not yet stabilized, however, and will certainly undergo further major readjustments to adapt them to the specific needs of our economic development. A case in point is ENCAFE, which is overburdened with the management of plantations totalling about 350,000 to 400,000 hectares.

Revise Production Relations and Rural Barter

The transformation of rural production relations has always been one of the great strategic objectives of the Angolan revolution. It was in this context that the first cooperative nuclei were created in the liberated zones during the first war of liberation, but it was only in 1976 that the first legislation on agricultural cooperatives was promulgated. These laws were amended and revised in 1978.

The next year, i.e., in 1979, a special directorate was created at the level of the Ministry of Agriculture to encourage and support the cooperative movement in our country. This was the DNCA [DNACA] (National Directorate for Agricultural Cooperativization and Support to Individual Peasants).

We should emphasize, however, that for want of a specific law on the organization and function of agricultural cooperatives, the latter were established on the basis of the principles and recommendations that came out of the First Conference on Agricultural Cooperativization, held in 1978. During this conference, the three simplest forms of agricultural cooperatives were defined: peasant associations, and first- and second-degree agricultural cooperatives.

By the end of 1979, there were already 3,521 peasant associations, with 417,851 members, and 296 agricultural cooperatives, with 50,811 members.

As we have seen, the abandonment and paralysis of economic structures was not limited to agricultural enterprises; the domestic marketing system was also seriously disorganized. As an immediate consequence, the peasants found it impossible to satisfy their broad needs for manufactured goods produced inside or outside the country. It was precisely to meet these needs that two state enterprises, ENCODIPA and DINAMA, were created. The former is responsible for purchasing the peasants' agricultural products and selling them the manufactured items they need.

The ENCODIPA formula was not very effective, however; that is, ENCODIPA did not manage to provide the rural areas with the manufactured goods, which were generally sold only in the cities. Add to this the ineffectiveness of the existing Domestic Trade network and the lack of concentrated effort in ENCODIPA and the other enterprises responsible for promoting the exchange of goods produced by the urban workers and by the peasants who cultivate the land to create the agricultural abundance that Angola needs.

Looking to a definitive solution to the problem of supplying the peasants, experimental rural markets were recently created. Incidentally, this program is being expanded under the aegis of Comrade President Jose Eduardo dos Santos. This is a rural experiment of major scope; it is being conducted in four provinces: Uige, Malanje, Kwanza-Sul and Huambo. The criterion for the function of these markets is quite simple: in a festive atmosphere, complete with music, the peasants sell their produce to a state company, receiving an invoice which gives them the right to purchase certain products at the other stalls, in the amount of their sale. The experiment has already begun to show good results. In the rural market of Massamgo, Malanje Province, for example, the receipts amounted to 9 million kwanzas, representing sales of 900 tons of various agricultural products.

DINAMA is responsible for supplying the peasants with working materials, such as pesticides, small implements, fertilizers, spray pumps, etc. Last year this state company distributed 17,908,090.10 kwanzas' worth of equipment to Angola's peasants.

Mechanize Agriculture

As we said above, in the colonial era technology was concentrated in the large agrarian enterprises, which possessed about 9,000 tractors. Meanwhile, the peasants were using primitive tools, and animal traction was limited to certain regions of the central plain. These two factors contributed greatly to the almost constant poverty of the Angolan peasants.

The socialist option, determined by the MPLA-Labor Party and supported by all the people, particularly the workers and peasants, enabled the Ministry of Agriculture to launch an effective campaign against this state of affairs.

We want to emphasize that the mechanization of agriculture is being carried out by developing the use of animal traction, gradually introducing motorized mechanization at the same time. Regarding animal traction, the Angolan authorities feel its development and proper use could contribute substantially to the total energy expended in the agricultural sector, because it enables the peasants to improve their working conditions,their production and productivity. Also, its use in itself constitutes a useful and necessary transitional stage between the traditional manual methods and motorized agriculture. In this context, in 1979 a new experiment with animal traction was initiated in Lunda Sul, Kwanza-Sul, Kwanza-Norte and Malanje provinces. In the last 2 years DINACA has distributed 1,171 young bulls for use as draft animals, collected by DINAPROPE in the pasturelands of Cunene and Mocamedes.

At the same time, the Ministry of Agriculture made agricultural machinery parks available to Angola's peasants, creating training centers for skilled machine operators and mechanics. Last year, for example, DINACA distributed 225 tractors, 47 moldboards and 40 harrows to the peasants. It should also be noted that motorized machanization is more significant in the state agricultural enterprises.

Intensify Cadre Training

As it must necessarily be, agricultural development is absolutely dependent on an intensification of training programs, study and popularization of scientific agricultural methods. The first program in this area was initiated in 1977,with the training of 55 instructors in coffee cultivation.

Just 2 years later, the Ministry of Agriculture had nine training centers, capable of training 1,130 cadres a year for the state enterprises and 670 cadres to assist the agricultural cooperatives and peasant associations. Between 1977 and 1979 these centers trained 3,238 cadres in various specialties.

SOCIAL CONDITIONS BLAMED FOR POOR COFFEE HARVEST

Luanda JORNAL DE ANGOLA in Portuguese 18 Nov 81 p 1

[Text] The 1981 coffee harvest amounted to 21,501 tons of commercial coffee, representing only 64 percent of the goals established in the initial plan, which envisioned the amount of 33,366 tons, the equivalent of 148,350 tons of coffee berries.

According to ENCAFE [National Coffee Company], both the state and the private sectors did not reach the goals established for this sixth national coffee campaign. The state sector, which had been tasked with the production of 20,677 tons of commercial coffee, only harvested 12,020 tons. This production came from the principal coffee-producing areas of the country, namely the provinces of Kwanza-Sul, Uige and Kwanza-Norte, which harvested 3,928, 3,667 and 3,118 tons respectively. The provinces of Bengo, Cabinda and Malanje contributed to the state sector with a total harvest of 1,307 tons of commercial coffee.

According to the initial plan, the peasant, private and cooperative sectors were assigned the production of 12,689 tons of coffee. Meanwhile, results show that these sectors only reached a production of 9,481 tons.

According to the report from the ENCAFE technical-production department, the inability to reach the goals established by the sixth national coffee campaign that opened on 1 June of this year, can be imputed to the inadequate social and material conditions prevailing among the workers. Let it be said, in passing, that this situation is repeated every year!

Production plans are not implemented for this or the other reason. It seems that the time has come to act so that the same situation does not happen next year. It is impossible to live on expedients; otherwise, we believe that production plans are being tampered with. Once again, the lack of transportation means was felt during the course of this campaign!

Obviously, we must also take into account the climatic factors which contributed as well to the non-implementation of production plans. The provinces of Kwanza-Sul, Bengo and part of Kwanza-Norte had to finish their harvest at the end of August, while the others prolonged it until the month of September.

It should be recalled, meanwhile, that 1980 saw the highest production of coffee since independence; a total of 36,576 tons of coffee were harvested that year.

MORE INFORMATION ON REFINERY FIRE--Reports from Luanda say that an UNITA [National Union for the Total Independence of Angola] commando unit which sabotaged the Luanda refinery early yesterday came by sea, probably on board a submarine. The reports add that apart from the body of a white member of the commando, several elements [as heard] were found near the refinery which was still blazing 12 hours after the explosion. The Angolan authorities showed the press and members of the diplomatic corps accredited to Luanda UNITA propaganda leaflets, papers written in Afrikaaner, one of South Africa's official languages, and eight mines which did not explode, along with radio equipment and automatic weapons. The Angolan oil minister said yesterday that Angola would very soon import certain refined oil products so as to maintain its fuel stocks at a level which would enable the country's economy to function normally. The Petrangol refinery in Luanda, which was the target of yesterday's attack, is the country's only refinery of its kind. [Text] [LD010138 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 0100 GMT 1 Dec 81]

DETAILS OF NEWLY ADOPTED 5-YEAR PLAN REPORTED

AB231354 Paris AFP in French 1143 GMT 23 Nov 81

[Text] Yaounde, 23 Nov (AFP)--The fifth 5-year development plan of Cameroon (1981-86) was adopted by the National Assembly on Saturday in Yaounde during its plenary closing session.

To achieve the goals of the fifth plan, the total amount of funds needed will be 2,300 billion CFA francs (FF 46 billion), the national daily, CAMEROON TRIBUNE reported on Monday. Of this sum, 23.7 percent will go to the rural sector, 16.4 percent ot the secondary sector (production of consumer goods), 7.7 percent to the tertiary sector (commerce, services, etc), 15,8 percent to the social and educative sectors; 13.4 percent will be for town planning and administrative equipment, 21 percent for communication infrastructures and finally 1.9 percent for studies, research and enquiries.

Sixty percent of the fifth 5-year development plan will be financed by the public sector and 40 percent by the private sector owing to a beter distribution of private savings, CAMEROON TRIBUNE stressed.

The plan should enable the Cameroonian economy to reach a real growth rate of 7 percent a year with a gross national product of 1,800 billion CFA francs (FF 36 billion).

On the other hand, still according to CAMEROON TRIBUNE, it is expected that within the framework of this plan Cameroonian exports will cover more than 100 percent of imports worth at least 600 billion CFA francs (FF 12 billion) of which 25 percent is for industrial production. In this context, the CAMEROON TRIBUNE went on to say, the improvement of the cost of living per inhabitant should be more than an average of 4.5 percent a year during the period of the plan.

Finally, quoting the spokesman of the Finance Committee which drew up this plan the CAMEROON TRIBUNE emphasized that it constitutes the first operational stage of a large program aimed at encouraging the achievement of indigeneous development, of self-sufficiency and health for all in the year 2,000.

VISIT BY SOVIET DELEGATION REPORTED

AB200840 Yaounde Domestic Service in French 0600 GMT 20 Nov 81

[Text] A delegation of the Soviet Committee for Solidarity with Asian and African Countries, currently on a visit to the country, yesterday held discussions for the first time with Cameroonian authorities. A dinner was given in their honor by Felix Sabbal Lecco, political secretary of the Central Committee of the Cameroonian National Union [UNC]. Many speeches were made at this dinner, which many members of the Central Committee attended.

The political secretary of the UNC, when proposing his toast, said that the leaders and militants of the UNC follow with admiration the efforts made and the progress achieved by the USSR in the task of nation building and the building up of an independent self-sufficient economy to improve the standard of living and well being of the Soviet peoples. Felix Sabbal Lecco recalled the basis of the USSR's external policy--friendship between peoples and cooperation with all peace and freedom living countries who believe in noninterference in the internal affairs of other states. All these considerations have remarkably similar objectives to the fundamental options and principles of the United Republic of Cameroon, he stressed. Our two parties, our two peoples and our two countries aspire for the people's well-being in many fields, he concluded. These things enable the people to know each other well and further strengthen their ties of friendship and cooperation, which the current visit will help to broaden and consolidate.

In his reply (Boris Lakarov), leader of the Soviet delegation, who made a number of contacts yesterday, said [words indistinct] shown by all underline the friendship which exists between the Cameroonian and Soviet peoples as well as the sentiments which unite them. The authorities mentioned the support that the Soviet peoples have been giving to the people of Africa for many years now. When we return to the Soviet Union we will remember the Cameroonian hospitality, the warmth of the sentiments that the Cameroonian people show toward the Soviet people, and the great tasks accomplished by President Ahidjo, the UNC Party, and the Cameroonian Government to build an independent economy and promote the people's well-being, the leader of the Soviet delegation added.

This morning the Soviet delegation will visit the Tourebe Center for the Handicapped in a Yaounde suburb. They will also visit the school of the Department of Water and Forest Resources at Balmayou, which is one of the fruits of Cameroon-USSR cooperation.

PAIG'C' ESTABLISHMENT, PEREIRA EXPULSION HOTLY PROTESTED

Praia VOZ DI POVO in Portuguese 19 Nov 81 pp 1-2

[Text] We can merely register the fact that a congress, be it ordinary or extraordinary, is being held in this or that part of the world; it is not up to us to proffer an opinion on underlying motives or on the resolutions and motions resulting from it. This belongs in the internal affairs of the country in which the congress is taking place.

However, when a congress is held that approves a motion or motions related in either a respectful or disrespectful way to one or more leaders of our country, then it does become our business. That a political organization of a foreign country maintains or includes the name of our country in its designation constitutes a provocation liable to have serious repercussions.

This is the case of the congress in Bissau.

Some of the decisions made at this congress are related to our country, and we feel we must make our position clear to them. Not to do so would be to agree with the falsification of historical facts and with political incoherence and irresponsibility.

Bissau occupies a unique position in the world: its leading party usurps the name of a foreign country, specifically, ours. In addition to being bizarre, this is not a banal subject: it deserves serious analysis in order to discover all its implications and to detect probable hidden intentions.

A series of arguments were presented to provide a basis for such an anomaly. In the documents of the congress, one can read, black on white:

"The PAIGC was established on our national territory (Guinea-Bissau)..."

"The armed struggle for liberation took place on our national territory (Guinea-Bissau)..."

"The majority of the militants, officials and leaders of the PAIGC are Guinea-Bissauan citizens..."

What were or are the goals of the application of such "political criteria?"

It appears that in the view of the illustrious Guinean leaders, Cape Verde is--or should be--only a mere appendage of their country, without even the right to use its own name. They are perhaps convinced that the Cape Verdian people are a Guinean ethnic group and that the country called Cape Verde is only a fiction.

Devotion to PAIGC is a characteristic of all those who loyally and with conviction served in the ranks of that prestigious party. This is a fact. But to attempt to resurrect a destroyed political body is something totally different.

The attempt to preserve a Guinean PAIG"C" in the absence of Cape Verde is illegitimate, in addition to being a farce. We believe that Bissau is not learning the difference between a political party and a trading company with stock. The rule of the majority is applied in the latter. Indeed, the PAIGC is not the same as the NAGUICAVE [former Guinea-Bissau-Cape Verde shipping company].

The spokesman of the Bissau congress announced to the press that the participants had decided to expel Aristides Pereira from the PAIG"C," as well as all those who participated in the establishment of the PAICV. One does not know to which PAIGC the congress participants and their spokesman were referring: to the former organization or the Guinean PAIG"C"? If to the former, it no longer exists and no one can decide anything on its behalf. If to the latter, one is moved to ask: what right does a congress prepared by the CNG [Bissau National Council] have to decide the fate of Cape Verdian citizens, former militants of the PAIGC? Is this not an attempt to maintain the old PAIGC against the express will of Cape Verde?

It appears that the congress took place under the sign of dualism: it is national when it suits the participants, and becomes bi-national when necessary. All means can serve to achieve the desired objectives.

The congress decided to condemn the president of the Republic of Cape Verde and secretary general of the PAICV, the leading party in our country. In our view, besides being an aberration, this constitutes a provocation that cannot be ignored. What right does a Guinean congress of a Guinean political party have to condemn the president of our country? Once again, we are faced with the refusal of the Guinean "majority" to accept the sovereign decision of the people of Cape Verde.

Aren't the confusion reigning in the minds of the present Guinean leaders and their wish for hegemony quite clear?

The name of our country is maintained in the designation of the party in power in Guinea-Bissau, the expulsion or proposed expulsion of Cape Verdian leaders and citizens is advocated. Does this all mean that other Cape Verdian citizens can belong to this same party? What is behind all this?

The provocation and the hidden intentions are more than obvious. Can it be possible that Guinea-Bissau ignores the norms of international law on relations between independent and sovereign nations? Or does it think that it can turn the wishes of its militants and its criteria for expediency into the norms of international law? This is probably the case. Facts do not exist, and responsibilities even less. The determining factor is, indeed, the power of their will.

To make the point perfectly clear: the establishment of the PAIGC was a freely undertaken political act by Guineans and Cape Verdians and can only continue through the express will of both parties. Any attempt at imposition by one or the other side constitutes an interference in internal affairs and is a manifestation of a desire for hegemony. The party in power in Guinea-Bissau has no right to "inherit" the PAIGC, because this is not a transfer operation and the name of our country cannot be usurped according to its good pleasure.

The PAIGC no longer exists: the rest is all a farce!

PLANS DRAWN FOR NEEDED FUTURE INVESTMENTS

Paris EUROPE OUTREMER in French No 618, Jul 81 pp 30-31

[Excerpts] "You have to go there to understand that not even the Sahel knows the intensity of our problems," Aristides Pereira, president of the Republic of Cape Verde, recently said.

The country is an archipelago made up of ten islands and five smaller islands that are volcanic, mountainous and arid. The total area is 4,033 square kilometers, only 10 percent of which is arable. Rainfall is irregular and it has not rained for years. The population that has emigrated (to the United States, Brazil and Senegal) totals over 400,000, while the resident population is only 300,000, which speaks eloquently about poverty on the islands. In 1979, the per capita GNP was put at $270 by the World Bank.

Development Plans

The Cape Verdian Government expects to increase individual income to $400 before the end of the decade. The objectives of the first national development plan (1980-1985) consist of increasing Cape Verde's share of the financing of the gross formation of fixed capital to 20 percent and of achieving an export growth rate of 17 percent a year. In order to fight food scarcities, the long-term strategy (up to the year 2000) is aimed at giving priority to the development of agriculture, by expanding irrigated areas, for example, from 2,000 to 8,000 hectares and thereby creating 90,000 jobs in the sector.

The government believes that investments totaling $2 billion would be necessary up to the year 2000 in order to achieve the goals of the general development plan. At 1980 prices, the resources needed to finance the first national development plan and its extension until 1990 are as follows: gifts of $350 million (including $143 million for 1982-1985); foreign credits totaling $315 million (including $110 million for 1982-1985); domestic resources of $235 million (including $62 million for 1982-1985). In addition, $315 million (at current prices) will be needed to finance renewable expenditures during the entire 1982-1990 period. Some $265 million (at 1980 prices) are needed to cover the balance of payments deficit (including $70 million for 1985-1985).

SITUATION SAID TO HAVE DETERIORATED FURTHER

Paris LE MONDE in French 13 Nov 81 pp 1, 3

[Article by Ph. D.: "Deterioration in Chad"]

[Text] On Thursday, 12 November, at a time when the work of the conference in Lagos of the seven ministers of foreign affairs of nations affected by the sending of an inter-African peace-keeping force to Ndjamena -- they are trying to speed up the sending of the force -- was to begin, we have learned that the military situation is seriously deteriorating in eastern Chad.

Near the Sudanese border, violent fighting is reported to have been going on since Wednesday, pitting elements of the Northern Armed Forces (FAN) of Hissein Habre against those of the Revolutionary Democratic Council (CDR) of Chadian Minister of Foreign Affairs Ahmat Acyl, it is said in Ndjamena. The confrontations are reportedly occurring near the three towns of Iriba, Adre and Guereda, urban centers whose evacuation by Libyan soldiers "whose mission is completed" is confirmed by the Libyan press agency JANA.

The resumption of fighting confirms the difficulties that will have to be faced by President Goukouni Oueddei once the Libyans have left. Consequently, eight days after Tripoli's decision to accede to the request formulated by the Chadian Government to withdraw its troops from the country, fighting between the faction of Hissein Habre and that of Ahmat Acyl's CDR could soon threaten the "security and territorial integrity" of Chad on which the Chadian request calling for the evacuation of Libyan forces is based.

Nigeria, the host country, Kenya, which presides over the Organization of African Unity (OAU), Togo, Guinea, Senegal and Benin, which are to send contingents, were in principle to be represented in the Nigerian capital along with Gabon, which will contribute financial aid essentially. On the other hand, by Wednesday Nigerian authorities had not received confirmation of the arrival of the Zairian delegation. Kenyan Minister of Foreign Affairs Robert Ouko is to preside over the meeting, in which Edem Kodjo, secretary general of the OAU, who arrived in Lagos on Monday, will participate.

Participants in the conference are to set the date for the deployment of the inter-African force, its final composition and various operational details and determine who will head it.

The candidates mentioned are Kenya, which now heads the OAU, and Nigeria, the main participant and leader of the operation.

In Ndjamena itself, it was reported on Wednesday that the arrival of the inter-African force had been delayed because of the Libyan presence at the airport of the Chadian capital. Some 500 Zairian soldiers were expected, the same source states, arriving Sunday evening on two Transalls and one DC-8 of the French Army. Thirteen rooms had been reserved at two hotels in Ndjamena for the Zairian staff, effective on that date, it has been learned elsewhere. However, as of Wednesday, the rooms were still unoccupied.

For 48 hours, Libyan flights in and out of the Ndjamena airport have been increasingly frequent and take place day and night. For the first time, on Tuesday, seven Libyan planes (two Ilyuchin 76's, two Hercules C-130's and three DC-8's) loading military equipment were on the runway at the same time. In a statement to the press, the commander in chief of the Libyan Armed Forces in Ndjamena, Col Radwan Salah Radwan, said that the departure of the Libyans would be "final in 2 days."

Col Radwan Salah Radwan stated that "in the first phase of evacuation," the Libyan equipment would go from Chad to Sebha, Libya, and to the Aouzou strip, located in the extreme north of Chadian territory. "That equipment will then be sent back to Libya for good," he said. Colonel Radwan refused to say, however, whether the Aouzou strip will be totally evacuated by Libyan forces. This desert strip along the Chadian-Libyan border, reputed to be rich in ore, belongs to Chad but is coveted and militarily occupied by Libyan for nearly 10 years.

Following the withdrawal of Libyan troops, the European Economic Community plans to grant special aid to Chad and in Brussels, high officials of the members of the European Commission held their first meeting for the purpose on Tuesday, 10 November, in the Belgian capital, before meeting next week to organize the sending of a study mission to Chad.

TEN PERCENT GROWTH OF GNP PLANNED FOR END OF DECADE

Paris EUROPE OUTREMER in French No 618, Jul 81 pp 34-35

[Excerpts] Guinea, located on the Atlantic coast, is made up of a flat coastal plain that rises abruptly to the Fouta Djallon heights, where three major rivers have their source: the Gambia, the Niger and the Senegal. Its land resources, climate and hydrography give it a high potential for agricultural development, particularly possibilities of irrigated farming, and it has 130,000 square kilometers of natural forests that could be worked more rationally. The GNP in 1979 was $270 per person.

The agricultural sector, which employs some 8 percent of the population, has not progressed since independence.

The mining sector is the most dynamic area of the Guinean economy, bringing in some 75 percent of Guinea's foreign exchanges receipts.

Guinea's trade has been satisfactory in recent years and its exports amounted to $280 million in 1979, while its imports totaled $190 million. Its main trading partners are the EEC and the United States, accounting for over half of the total. Cameroon, which turns Guinean alumina into aluminum, is the most important African trading partner.

The absence of a satisfactory transport system has hindered the country's development. The single-track, 1-meter-gauge railroad linking Conakry to Kankan (663 kilometers), built between 1900 and 1914, is in poor condition and cannot bear heavy traffic. Out of 28,400 kilometers of roads, only some 520 are paved. Conakry has a natural deep-water port. Another deep-water port has been set up at Kansar for mining traffic.

Development Plans

For the 1981-1990 period, Guinea's goal is to attain an annual growth rate of some 10 percent by the end of the decade. The first five years would be devoted to the completion of a preinvestment program based on the establishment of institutions and development method, as well as on strengthening of the planning system. During the second half of the decade, the GNP growth rate would be increased from 5 to 10 percent. Throughout this decade, the public sector will have to invest $3.4 billion, considering the project for construction of the Konkoure Dam.

Among the structural changes, it is expected that growth of the agricultural sector will be about 7 percent by the end of the decade, the mining sector will be more closely associated with other sectors, so as to serve as a catalyst for overall economic development, bonds between agriculture and industry will be developed and measures will be taken to strengthen the complementary nature of the country with its neighbors through development of road and rail communication. Thanks to these measures, the government expects a surplus in the balance of payments by 1985. Because of the gravity of the problem involving Guinea's indebtedness (the amount is 96.8 percent of the GNP), the government has asked for the cancellation, or at least the restructuring, of the country's foreign debt.

AGRICULTURE SEEN AS MAINSTAY OF DEVELOPMENT STRATEGY

Paris EUROPE OUTREMER in French No 618, Jul 81 p 35

[Text] Guinea-Bissau is a small country with an area of 36,125 square kilometers. It includes the tiny islands of the Bissagos Archipelago. The tides periodically cover nearly 10 percent of the territory and a large part of the coast is made up of swamps. The climate is hot and humid.

In 1979, the GNP was an estimated $170 per person, but $100 in the back country where 81 percent of the population lives. The agricultural sector is predominant and over 80 percent of the population is involved in subsistence agriculture, for nearly the entire area of the country can be cultivated. The food industry, breweries and building are the main industrial activities. The existence of oil deposits off the coast and of bauxite has been established, but their exploration has not yet been undertaken. The country has considerable hydroelectric potential that is scarcely utilized. Commercial trade is extremely unbalanced and imports are traditionally higher than exports. Export receipts covered only 23 percent of all imports in 1979. The main exports are palm cabbages, peanuts, hides and leathers and lumber. The main imports are rice, textiles and oil products. Portugal is by far Guinea-Bissau's most important trading partner.

Development Plans

Guinea-Bissau's development strategy gives agriculture and main role and that of a stimulus to industry. This strategy is mainly aimed at granting priority to investments in the rural sector, increasing the amount of resources allocated to provinces rather than to the capital, using the production potential to the maximum extent rather than making new investments, and rationalizing imports and the domestic distribution system in order to ensure satisfactory supplies for the population.

The government has stated that the country's economic and financial situation is extremely vulnerable and economic dependency on other countries is very marked, whether it be a question of food, technology, commerce or finances, and these difficulties are joined by inadequate administration of development. Short-term emergency aid is needed to permit the implementation of an economic stabilization plan aimed at relieving the most serious current difficulties, particularly the financing of payments for commercial debts, restoring the minimum foreign exchange reserve for at least two months of imports and financing service on the public debt for 1981. In addition to emergency aid, which totaled $34 million in 1981, the government believes that medium-term aid is indispensable to execution of the development program: some $437 million for the 1982-1985 period.

PREPARATIONS FOR MOZAMBIQUE--USSR FRIENDSHIP WEEK

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 31 Oct 81 p 3

[Text] Tomorrow in three of the country's cities--Maputo, Beira and Nampula--we shall see the beginning of a program of activities relating to the Mozambique--USSR Friendship and Solidarity Week commemorating the 64th anniversary of the Great October Revolution. The principal ceremony marking the beginning of these activities will take place at the Maputo People's Openair Market and will then extend to companies and city districts where movies and shows will be held.

A group of Soviet cinematographers, who arrived in our country's capital yesterday to participate in the program of the 64th anniversary of the October Revolution, expressed optimism about the success of the program which will extend throughout the week.

"We are convinced that the relations of friendship and solidarity which exist between the Mozambican and Soviet peoples will grow increasingly stronger through these activities," one of the members of the group said.

In addition to movies to be shown in the capital's cinemas, the program calls for movie crews with mobile equipment to visit various production sectors in Maputo as well as a few communal settlements in Beira and Nampula.

Various libraries and books will be offered to employees in Maputo and Beira firms, which are some of the places where the results of the schedule of activities this week were particularly gratifying. These libraries are aimed at raising the academic and technical level of the workers so that they may be better able to assimilate and understand the raison d'etre of the October Socialist Revolution.

Simultaneously, plastic art and craft expositions are to be held in various sectors, and discussions are to begin in schools on the subject, "The Great October and the Present."

A meeting is to be held next week between Mozambican and Soviet university students to exchange ideas and establish the basis of studies on the Mozambican working class.

This is the Fourth Friendship and Solidarity Week which, under the auspices of the Associations of Mozambican and USSR Friendship, is being held in our country to mark the passing of 7 November, Soviet Revolution Day.

The celebration of these friendship weeks is in keeping with the general cooperative agreements established between the governments of the People's Republic of Mozambique and the USSR, signed in 1976.

ROOTS, CREATION OF RESISTANCE MOVEMENT ANALYZED

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 2 Oct 81 p 8

[Article by Fernando Lima]

[Text] How is the activity of the counterrevolutionary armed bands such as the self-styled "National Resistance Movement" linked to the general strategy of destabilization drawn up by South Africa in this region of the continent?

The links between the "MNR" and Pretoria are nothing new. However, they underwent a certain intensification after the election victory of ZANU in Zimbabwe, the original sanctuary of the "MNR."

Former Rhodesian security officials claim responsibility for the creation of the "resistance"--brought into actual being with the cooperation of "desperate Septembrists" recruited in South Africa, Rhodesia and Portugal, members of the special intervention troops of the colonial army, of the repressive paramilitary groups, of the fascist political police, of deserters of FRELIMO and the People's Liberation Forces of Mozambique (FPLM).

Rhodesian "intelligence" advised by Pretoria formed that operational pressure group with the aim of persuading the Mozambican Government to moderate its support for the nationalist struggle of Zimbabwe, which gained new impetus in 1976. The new client organizations, guided by the vigor of the ever-more daring operations of the ANC, are proceeding in the same manner.

In 1979, the activity of these groups made itself felt in the provinces of Manica, Sofala, Tete and Zambezia. Here the support came from Malawi where the degree of influence of one of the key personalities of the "Resistance dossier" is however, namely, Portuguese industrialist Jorge Jardim, currently established in Gabon.

With the signing of the Lancaster House agreements, the "MNR" ran the risk of being left without a patron. The British authorities themselves charged with the transition process exerted pressures on the Rhodesian apparatus to dismantle "Operation MNR," including the programming of the "Voice of Free Africa," put on the air from radio stations installed in Gwelo, Fort Victoria and Untali.

The British insist that it is not any movement of an autonomist nature, as the Rhodesians try to label the operation.

In this regard, today we know details connected with the attack on the fuel depots in the vicinity of Beira. This action, which at the time had been claimed by the MNR, was carried out by mercenary commandoes under Rhodesian command as a reprisal against the nationalist attack against the Salisbury reservoir. The guide of the operation, a Mozambican, was coldly felled near the site of the operation wearing a military uniform profusely decorated with insignias of the "MNR."

In the beginning of 1980, contacts were quickly initiated with South African quarters with a view to adapting to the new circumstance created. At that time, South Africa received a migratory contingent of not very wholesome references--"Selous Scouts," the aides of Muzorewa and a veritable spectrum of nationalities, encompassing mercenary "manpower" temporarily unemployed. It was from these units that war plans fermented and are fermenting. They represent the indispensable ballast to alternatives of power in Zimbabwe that do not bear the name of Mugabe. From this midst also come instructors and new members for the ranks of the "MNR," as countless statements by bandits captured by the FPLM prove.

On the operational level, the MNR mercenary groups play the role assigned by the racist military strategy against the People's Republic of Mozambique (RPM) (it is not strange that attacks against power sources in the RAS coincide with the sabotage of electric stations and high tension lines in the center of Mozambique). This activity is connected with the effort to arouse feelings outside the continent, involving actions among conservative circles and those yearning for the old days in Lisbon, Madrid, Paris and London, where personalities such as Orlando Cristina, Evo Fernandes or even Domingos Arouca are most prominent.

The "Voice of Quizumba" has again come on the air, this time from the Transvaal, the province bordering on Mozambique and Zimbabwe, where the main rebel bases are located. A cordon sanitaire of South African forces served by new support airports separates the camps from the borders.

Transport planes and helicopters supply the logistic support necessary for the actions in the interior of Mozambican territory. And we should mention south Zimbabwe, including the area of Chipinga and Melsetter, as a transit corridor for South African activities against Mozambique. That fact certainly constitutes a point of discussion between the security authorities of Mozambique and Zimbabwe in the regular consultations they hold. The brigade being formed in Zimbabwe, with aid of Korean military instructors may represent a strong element of dissuasion against the adventures of South Africa and the forces it manipulates.

According to Defense Ministry sources, the purpose of the cleaning-up operations that are currently underway in Mossurize is to eliminate the groups hidden in the most mountainous area in the region.

In time of crisis, the main target of the "MNR's" armed members is the people, who suffer reprisals because of their refusal to collaborate.

Namely, people forcibly removed from their housing areas and led to more remote areas where they have to furnish food. People who hold political and administrative duties and their families are sometimes killed as "communist agents," or have their sexual organs, ears and lips mutilated.

Prior to "Operation Leopardo" which culminated last year with the destruction of the main base in the mountains of Sitatonga, the groups with the largest area of mobility used to launch operations against people's stores, farm cooperatives, state and cooperative plantations, administrative posts and political headquarters, trains and cargo vehicles on the main highways linking the southern provinces to the center and northern part of the country. A type of activity that characterized the first phase of the attacks was the actions against reeducation centers in the central area of Manica and Sofala from where potential recruits for the "MNR" were drawn out.

The majority of the persons captured last year during the big military operations in Manica were youths kidnaped from among the population and objectively used as "cannon-fodder." The weapon used, similar to models of the Mozambican Army, confirms reports by a reliable Portuguese weekly revealing the existence of an international ring of traffickers in arms bound for South Africa. Furthermore, John Stockwell, former employee of the American espionage service and author of the book, "The CIA Against Angola," explains the procedures for the acquisition of "communist arms" from Israel to equip the FNLA and UNITA without unnecessary compromise.

FPLM--Teaching in the Tradition

According to Mozambican military sources, in this year's operations, it has been sought to give great emphasis to aspects that are not predominantly combative. Prominent in this effort is the coordination and support of the population of the regions involved in the operations and their settlement in stable community centers. The weekly TEMPO, which has highlighted that particular aspect in its recent editions, refers to the efforts made to reorganize production, the supply of drinking water and the extension of the marketing network to the most isolated areas.

Persons in charge involved in the operations are optimistic about the results to be gained. Nevertheless, without bravado, new confrontations are being prepared, since the key to the problem is called South Africa.

And this enemy is tough although not invincible.

'AIM' PUBLISHES COMMUNIQUE ON EANES VISIT

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 24 Nov 81 p 1

[Editorial by Carlos Cardoso]

[Text] The MOZAMBIQUE INFORMATION AGENCY (AIM) has distributed the following editorial, signed today by its director, Carlos Cardoso, in relation to the state visit underway:

The People's Republic of Mozambique is receiving today the state visit of the president of the Portuguese Republic, Gen Ramalho Eanes.

This visit symbolizes at the highest level the principle that the struggle of the Mozambican people was always against colonialism and not against the Portuguese people.

Since its inception in 1962, the Front for the Liberation of Mozambique clearly defined that the enemy of the Mozambican people was the colonial system and not the colonizer's skin color.

In 1965, when the first Portuguese soldiers were captured, the FRELIMO guerrillas saw that these soldiers were poor like they themselves were, they were children of poor people just like them, and that they were illiterate just like them. In addition, they were also exploited. This awareness consolidated the definition of the system as the enemy and also consolidated the prospect that the Portuguese people in Portugal were oppressed by fascism and that the Portuguese people were also fighting against oppression.

It was the very struggle against colonialism and against fascism that brought the two peoples closer.

The Portuguese president's visit will thus be the apex of a process of rapprochement between the two peoples, a process that always respected the principle that the enemy has no color, the enemy has no homeland.

This human dimension of the visit is founded on the common desire, already obvious, to broaden the areas of cooperation between Mozambique and Portugal in industry, commerce and the cultural field.

Based on mutual respect for sovereignty and the interests of each country, the future of the cooperation between Mozambique and Portugal presents the likelihood of becoming an increasingly broad and beneficial reality for both countries.

With the eyes of the Mozambican people fixed on this cooperation, we welcome today the president of the Portuguese people.

PORTUGAL'S EANES ENDS VISIT

EA291446 Maputo Domestic Service in Portuguese 1030 GMT 29 Nov 81

[Text] President Ramalho Eanes of Portugal has just ended his friendly official visit to Mozambique made at the invitation of the Mozambican head of state, Samora Machel. He will visit Zambia and Tanzania. The Portuguese and Mozambican presidents met today and Samora Machel gave Ramalho Eanes a photo album of his visit.

This morning President Eanes gave a press conference to national and foreign journalists. We hope to give further details of the press conference in our later news broadcasts.

As we have already announced, the Portuguese head of state hosted a banquet in Maputo yesterday. Addressing those present, President Samora Machel said Eanes' visit was a groundbreaking visit with regard to relations between the two states. Samora Machel referred to the deep, honest friendship which is now being nurtured and described the meeting as an opportunity for the two peoples to discover each other's qualities, capacities and intelligence. The Mozambican leader also considered Ramalho Eanes' visit to be a harmonious meeting between two patriotic peoples. This visit has convinced the Mozambican people that the friendship between the two peoples will be undying.

In an emotional address to Manuela Eanes (ed: Eanes wife) Samora Machel said that she had perfectly represented Portuguese women in her visit to our country. He then asked her to speak on behalf of the Mozambican people to those whose relatives had been killed by Mozambican freedom fighters. Their blood and the blood of the Mozambicans who were killed by them has become a solid bond and a bridge linking Europe to Africa and Africa to Europe. Those men built that bridge. He also asked her to tell the mothers who lost their sons, the innocent children with no fathers, the girls who lost their fiances, that the People's Republic of Mozambique is their second country.

Before Samora Machel's address, President Ramalho said that his visit had removed ambiguities. He said that from now on the two nations, the two states, could look at each other as two mature states, free from any complexes. There is a rapprochement between two states, states which have assumed their sovereignty and their independence in a mature way and have not forgotten their (?respective) relations, said the Portuguese head of state.

GROUNDED SHIP'S 'IRRECOVERABLE' CARGO SALVAGED

People's Initiative

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 20 Oct 81 p 3

[Article by Rogerio Sitoe]

[Text] A large part of the hundreds of tons of cargo carried by the grounded ship "Castle Glory"--cargo that had been considered by maritime authorities as technically impossible to recover--is being taken out of the ship by the people who live near the place, for their own benefit and counting literally on their own forces.

In this trip we made to Chinde in Zambezia Province, we contacted the people who are engaged in this practical operation of popular initiative.

Living on the banks of the tributaries of the Zambeze, completely covered by the waters when the river floods, the environment of these people who have been here for years could almost be called aquatic.

Their daily activities are mainly fishing, hunting, and agriculture (rice and manioc growing) beyond the groves of palm trees lining the banks, which supply them with large quantities of coconuts for food.

By Boat or on Foot

One of the local inhabitants told us that to remove the products from the ship, they normally organize "fleets" comprised of scores of boats with a capacity for "five persons, not counting the cargo."

In a veritably adventurous manner, utilizing their long experience, they sometimes encounter huge waves in the sea either going to or returning from the ship. Other times, however, "when the tide is out, we walk 200 or 300 meters on foot in the sea area until we reach the ship," they informed us.

Once inside the ship, the holds of which are flooded, they dive and little by little take out everything they find there, from a car headlight to huge crates containing construction material.

Thus, if one walks around the villages on the banks, one can see inside the houses enormous quantities of lamps, tires, cans of shoe polish, and children playing with balls.

In conversations with persons connected with the maritime administration of Chinde, we were informed that at the present time it is almost impossible to exercise any kind of control to prevent materials that can still be used in industry and other sectors from being removed.

That attitude is due in part to the fact that the people are a little aggressive, justified as being the product of their effort, which in some way is understandable. However, we are studying ways of resolving this problem, concluded one of the persons in charge of that maritime administration.

At the time it ran aground, the "Castle Glory" was carrying on board about 2,400 tons of general cargo, including 1,298 tons of sugar, vehicles, and miscellaneous machinery valued at hundreds of contos.

The population is removing from the ship cargo considered lost.

Among the goods removed, with boats made from tree trunks, are large quantities of shoe polish, milk, lamps, beverages, balls, textiles, tires, watches, and various materials for construction and industry, including electrical material.

According to information obtained from the Chinde maritime administration, which had also been published by the news media, a few days after the "Castle Glory" ran aground, various studies and plans were prepared in an attempt to save a minimum amount of the cargo carried by that ship. It is known that that study also admitted the possibility of refloating the ship.

However, that action which engaged the activity of national organs connected with merchant marine for about a month was fruitless because the conclusion was reached that there was not even any possibility of saving the cargo, much less the ship.

With the "Castle" abandoned, already lost and left to the fate of the ocean waves, the people in turn made practical attempts to remove what they could from there for their own benefit, without caring about the use which certain materials might have for them.

Lacking any modern means, either launches, winches or other material indispensable for such a risky operation, but simply using palm tree trunks and human effort, since August they removed and are removing that cargo that was "impossible to save" from inside the ship.

That is perhaps the most significant lesson to draw from this matter which should serve to alert those who many times underestimate the technique, disdain the strength, the will and the initiative of the people, which as can be seen, are not slogans but a concrete reality.

Incidents With Police

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 21 Oct 81 p 4

[Text] The case of the "Castle Glory" raises fundamental questions that are very close to us in all sectors.

Once the ship ran aground, carrying goods and products necessary for marketing and for supplying production units, the appropriate authorities went to the site.

Discussions, analyses reports and studies were made to try to save both the ship and the cargo it carried.

In the meantime, the population on the river banks near the site of the grounding was forgotten and curiously watched all these comings and goings.

With the passage of time, seeing within their reach of their boats or even their steps, when the tide was out, all that material that is precious to somebody like they who live under marginal and rudimentary conditions, the people tried to reach the ship.

At the time of those first attempts, since the studies, analyses and discussions were still underway, the order to have the "Castle Glory" guarded by the police was resorted to.

Puzzled and angered by the incongruence of seeing armed people preventing them from taking things that were going to ruin, there were times when the people threatened the police with arrows and improvised spears.

Finally, after the studies were concluded, their object--the ship and cargo--were given up as lost.

The police were removed and the people began to remove everything they could get their hands on.

In a little while, the appearance of the hamlets on the banks was transformed. One could see everything from doors of Land Rovers to electric or oil lamps decorating the houses together with other products of greater local utility.

It was then, once again--the first time had been when the police were used--that it was "discovered" that there were people there "who were stealing."

Then it was tried to take those objects away from the people. A new contradiction; the appropriate authorities "are faced with a new situation:" the people do not want to give them up.

The problem that presents itself in fact is that when "the problem presented itself" originally, all that was thought about was machines, sophisticated technical methods, specialists, economic and financial feasibility studies.

From beginning to end, those people so close there were disregarded, ignored considered just a part of the landscape.

No one even thought of meeting with them and explaining the situation to them, mobilizing them to recover the cargo, encouraging them to work voluntarily not for their own benefit but for the benefit of all the population of which they are a part.

They looked skyward looking for the feasibility of the ultramodern helicopter. It was considered that that would be more expensive than the cargo itself. In the meantime, the boats were going down the river recovering so much from the "impossible:" tire by tire, screw by screw, part by part.

The people were noticed only through the objects that those people were showing up with in the hamlets.

In the revolution, we in fact depend on man at all times.

In that other religion which is technocracy, they pray to the powerful and sophisticated machines without taking account of the fact that it was men who built them.

Without taking into account, in many cases, the fact that their introduction is made in a social context--made up of people--and that if that introduction harms the people, we must rethink it.

From the "Castle Glory" to so many other small and large "technically impossible" problems, we can imagine the unnecessary harm that occurs because of not taking the people into account.

From the "Castle Glory" to so many others, technocratic manifestations here and there, known or covered up, telephoned or whispered about, it is in fact the ideological class struggle, the struggle between the bourgeois concepts and the popular concepts that form the backbone of this revolution.

OBJECTIVES OF CENSUS OF COMMERCIAL NETWORK

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 23 Oct 81 p 10

[Text] One of the principal objectives of the census of the commercial network that will begin next Monday is to regulate the licensing of commercial activity in the country.

Organized by the Ministry of Domestic Trace (MCI), this survey will last until 1 November. The census will be implemented by the filling in of an appropriate form by all retail and wholesale merchants.

The survey encompasses the whole commercial network under the supervision of the MCI, including state and cooperative enterprises. Excepted are official establishments that are exclusively engaged in small repairs.

The national director of commercial practice of the MCI announced that this census is being undertaken because a process of reorganization of the commercial sector is currently underway.

This survey will make it possible later to license all commercial establishments according to the private trade law and to adjust the effort needed to be expended in the commercial area in order that it may fulfill its proper social function.

As that MCI official mentioned, at the present time, the amount of the basic funds in the commercial area are not known. A survey of all the existing equipment and infrastructure have not yet been made, which makes it difficult to know what the investment needs are in this sector.

This situation leads to the investments that are made being only for the replacement of equipment to equip the establishment, which does not respond to the needs of the sector because the basic funds are not known.

The survey also aims at updating the commercial register because no survey of commercial activity has been made for over 10 years.

"There were two historic moments in the country that aggravated the outdatedness of the commercial register. The first was the flight of a large part of the businessmen who lived in Mozambique. That situation forced the establishments to pass into the hands of other proprietors and this process was not properly conducted," added the national director of commercial practice.

The second moment, according to that official, was that of the transfer of the former people's stores into private stores. These two situations consequently made it imperative to organize the commercial register with a view to improving the supply service to the people.

The issuance of new licenses is also intended to make possible the restructuring of trade, particularly in urban areas, moving toward its specialization. This action is going to eliminate the situation that exists at the present time when the same establishment intended for a certain type of trade is engaged in the sale of the most varied articles.

At the same time, this process of reorganization of the commercial network will make it possible to improve the fight against clandestine trade.

It is alsc anticipated that commercial activities that do not take part in the census will be subject to severe penalties.

Comrade Gustav Husak reported to Comrade Samora Moises Machel on the conclusions of the 16th CPCZ Congress and explained in detail the major tasks and the results achieved in implementing these conclusions in the respective sectors, including that of foreign policy.

President Samora Machel congratulated Gustav Husak on the achievements of the Czechoslovak people, under the correct leadership of the CPCZ, in building an advanced socialist society. He stressed the significance of the conclusions of the 16th CPCZ Congress and its contribution to the development and strengthening of the entire socialist community.

Comrade Machel reported to Comrade Husak on the implementation of the economic and social directives of the Third FRELIMO Party Congress, on the preparations for the Fourth Congress and on the approval by the Eighth Session of the People's Assembly of the basic lines of the draft of the Prospective Indicative Plan for the deacde 1981-1990. He described the efforts and the active engagement of the Mozambican people in building socialism under the correct and clear direction of the FRELIMO Party.

Comrade Husak congratulated Comrade Machel on the great achievements of the Mozambican people, led by the FRELIMO Party, on the political, economic and social fronts. He noted that these achievements contribute decisively to consolidating the position of the RPM as the secure rearguard of the progressive forces of the world, particularly in southern Africa.

Regarding bilateral relations between the CSSR and the RPM, both sides stressed the importance of strengthening relations between the CPCZ and the FRELIMO Party, based on the principles of Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism. In this regard, they noted that a secure basis for further development of these relations is the new cooperation accord between the CPCZ and the FRELIMO Party, signed during this visit.

Both parties noted with satisfaction that relations between the CSSR and the RPM are developing in the interest of the peoples of both countries and of the cause of socialism and peace. They further noted that there had been a development and intensification of political relations between the two countries, particularly between various social and mass organizations. At the same time, the two leaders analyzed in detail every means of intensifying and broadening relations in all sectors, particularly economic, commercial and technical-scientific sectors.

The following documents were signed during the visit: a declaration of relations of friendship and cooperation between the RPM and the CSSR and a protocol on economic cooperation.

The two leaders reviewed the current international situation and noted with satisfaction their similar views on the most pressing international problems.

Both parties expressed their common interest in safeguarding peace and in eliminating the danger of nuclear war. They noted that this is one of the most pressing problems of our time, and expressed concern for the tangled state of world affairs, provoked by the imperialists' attempts to solve their own crisis through an intensification of the arms race, militarization and aggravation of international tension.

Both parties condemned the interference of U.S. imperialism in the internal affairs of other states, and categorically rejected all U.S. attempts to arbitrarily declare various regions of the world to be zones of vital interest, in order to impose its neocolonialist domination in these regions.

The RPM and the CSSR expressed their full support for all initiatives leading to the consolidation of peace, to the development of the disarmament process and the cessation of the arms race.

The two parties stated that the use of nuclear weapons constitutes one of the most serious crimes against humanity, and they support initiatives to draft a convention prohibiting the placement of any type of weapon in outer space.

Both parties vehemently condemned the U.S. intention to produce neutron bombs as a new instrument of mass annihilation and favored the immediate drafting and signing of a universal agreement banning production, stockpiling and use of weapons of this type.

The RPM and the CSSR declared their support for limitation and abolition of the arms race. In this regard, they reiterated their full support for the UN declaration on international cooperation to achieve the disarmament goals and for measures to implement the declaration.

Analyzing the current situation in Europe, the two parties reiterated the need for specific and positive results from the Madrid Conference, and noted that the decision to convene a conference on demilitarization and disarmament constitutes a major contribution to the process of general pacification and stronger cooperation among all the states of continental Europe.

Both parties categorically condemned the NATO decision to deploy new U.S. medium-range missiles in some Western European states, declaring that this position represents a serious threat to all European states and to peace in Europe and throughout the world. They reiterated the urgent need to find a solution to this pressing problem through negotiation.

The two parties condemned the aggressive activities of imperialist circles and the intensification of the U.S. military presence in the Indian Ocean, the Persian Gulf and the region of the Red Sea. They expressed their support for efforts to call an international conference on the conversion of the Indian Ocean into a denuclearized zone of peace.

Analyzing the situation in southern Africa, the two parties observed with concern the heightened tension in the region as a result of the aggressive and belligerent policy practiced by the racist minority Pretoria regime.

Two two leaders hailed the achievements of the Namibian people in the struggle against the colonial and racist occupation of their country, and reiterated their firm support for SWAPO, the sole legitimate representative of the Namibian people. In this regard, they vigorously condemned the imperialist maneuvers to impose a neocolonialist solution to the Namibian problem.

Regarding South Africa, the two parties reaffirmed their support for and militant solidarity with the just struggle of the South African people, led by the ANC, their sole legitimate representative. They condemned the repressive acts of the racist Pretorian authorities against the South African people and denounced the policy of the Bantustanization of South Africa.

The two leaders also strongly condemned racist South Africa's attacks against neighboring countries, particularly against the People's Republic of Angola.

They expressed their support for the UN resolution regarding the settlement of the Western Saharan question, based on recognition of the right of the people of this territory to self-detemination.

Both countries noted with pleasure the significant role played by the OAU and the Movement of Nonaligned Countries in current international relations, in the struggle for peace, against imperialism, colonialism, neocolonialism, racism, apartheid and Zionism, and in the consolidation of the independence of the recently liberated countries. They stressed the need to strengthen and unite the world's anti-imperialist front.

Regarding the situation in the Middle East, the two parties expressed serious concern at the intensification of the aggressive policy practiced by the imperialists through the Zionist regime of Israel.

They reiterated that a peaceful solution to the Middle East problem and the Palestine question can only be achieved with Israel's total withdrawal from occupied Arab territories and recognition of the inalienable rights of the Arab peoples of Palestine, including the right to form their own state.

The two delegations reaffirmed their solidarity with the people of the Democratic Republic of Afghanistan in their struggle to defend their independence and sovereignty and to consolidate their revolutionary conquests, and condemned the attempts of world imperialism to interfere in the internal affairs of that country.

The two parties expressed their full support for the constructive efforts of the Socialist Republic of Vietnam, the People's Republic of Campuchea and the Democratic Republic of Laos to achieve peace and stability in southeast Asia.

The two leaders expressed their support for the National Liberation Movement in Central America and the Caribbean. They condemned the U.S. attempts to use threats, blackmail and terror to thwart development of the revolution in Cuba, Nicaragua and Grenada and to violently repress the struggle of the Salvadoran people.

Examining the major issues of the current era, the two parties stressed the importance of the United Nations in reducing world tension. They favored reorganization of the present international economic order, based on democratic principles, in which equality, mutually advantageous cooperation and the sovereignty of states and nations over their own natural resources are respected and manifestations of multilateral or bilateral discrimination are eliminated.

Comrades Machel and Husak expressed satisfaction with the success of the discussions, which they called a worthy contribution to strengthening relations of friendship and solidarity between their two peoples, parties and states.

Marshal Samora Moises Machel, president of the FRELIMO Party and president of the People's Republic of Mozambique, expressed his gratitude for the warm and fraternal welcome and generous hospitality shown him and his delegation during their stay in the CSSR. He invited Gustav Husak, secretary general of the CPCZ Central Committee and president of the CSSR, to pay an official visit of friendship to the RPM. The invitation was accepted with pleasure and the date will be duly established through diplomatic channels.

BEIRA INSTABILITY, UNREST MUST BE OVERCOME

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 27 Oct 81 p 1

[Article by Benjamin Fuduco]

> [Text] To restore calm and security in the City of Beira is, so to speak, the thorny task among many that we are all called upon to undertake.

This observation, which is not new, has resulted from the extremely delicate situation which the executive power of the state touched upon in a meeting at a certain moment in our country and with special acuteness in Beira.

Today it is urgent to rectify the situation by going to its most profound causes so that calm, beauty and public security may return to Beira, as was declared in the public meeting of last Saturday. This is a difficult task because it demands an objective clarity in its analysis and treatment. Because not all the elements of the FDS [Forces of Defense and Security] are, or could be, at the origin of the disorders whose relfections are still noted today inBeira.

Because the exercise of the power of the state is performed over a society whose elements are persons, its activity has an extent which is as big as society itself.

According to the same line of reasoning, good or bad exercise of power is also reflected in the same proportion although it may be practiced only by a handful of individuals.

The reflections of social instability which were beaten down violently in Beira are still visible. The crowd present at the public meeting last Saturday was in a certain way illustrative of that recent past.

That crowd, whose numbers did not exceed 5,000 persons, was finally the confirmation of the separation which up to a short time ago existed between the structures of the state power and the people.

For the same reason, the unleashing of the offensive in the midst of the various constitutes a positive recognition of errors committed.

At night, there are very few people who go to the cinema and even fewer who walk through the City of Beira after 1900 hours.

In the public transport and stores, there are many details and little situations which even today illustrate the dimension and depth of some of the attacks against the constitution of the republic committed by some elements of the state structures.

The positive recognition by the directorate of the party and of the state of the offenses committed, as well as the drawing up of measures to combat them constitute the necessary courage to advance and grow.

The message read at the meeting by an EDS representative to make more profound the offensive to restore the respect broken by a few infiltrators was the pledge before the people to join the combat which now is being waged.

In the same way, the messages of the production councils and the neighborhood councils of the City of Beira reafirmed their necessary support in the urgent task of making Beira a beautiful and attractive city once again.

As one of the instruments for the realization of some immediate measures, the Joint Command of the Palmeiras neighborhood is already functioning. All the complaints or proofs of attacks against the fundamental law of the country, related to elements of the FDS, should be reported to the Joint Command.

COASTAL PORT SURVEYS WILL INCREASE ACTIVITY

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 27 Oct 81 p 1

[Text] Most of the coastal traffic ports along the coast of Mozambique are being made more operational than ever.

Hydrographic survey operations are taking place at this moment in the access channels to the ports of Maputo and Beira and in the mouth of the Zambezi which gives access to the port of Quilimane. These operations have the goal of assuring better navigation along the entire national maritime coast. They are being carried out by specialists in this profession under the coordination of the directorate of hydrographic services.

The survey consists of reconnoitering the entire system of signaling (buoying), including the maintenance of access depths to the ports.

The access channel to the port of Quilimane, whose navigation was considered difficult and risky due to its silting up, is now completely operational.

The hydrography and dredging operations now in progress in the access channels to the port of Beira are directly related to their increased capacity in terms of admitting ships of greater draft.

Relative to the port of the country's capital, the hydrography and dredging operations have already been finished in the Matola and Catembe channels.

At this moment, technicians from the directorate of hydrography of the National Directorate of Maritime and River Transports are working on the Polana channel. Later, identical work will be done on the Xefina channel.

After the construction now in progress at the mouth of the Zambezi, the hydrography team will continue to the ports of Pebane and Macuse and later on to other ports farther to the north where access to the navigable channels is said to be difficult due to their silting up.

At this moment most of the principal coastal traffic ports along the coast are operational. This is due to the maintenance work on their respective access channels which has now been carried out with a certain regularity for 2 years along this part of the coast.

Upon completion of the survey operations along the coast a program will be drawn up for replacing all the marker buoys whose functioning appears to be deficient for navigation.

It must be remembered that in the sequence of these operations of hydrographic survey along the coast that it has been possible to reopen a few of the coastal traffic ports which until recently were closed to navigation. The rehabilitation of the port of Inhambane and other ports along the coast which up to at least 2 years ago were closed prove the importance of hydrography and of the dredging now being done.

LONG DELAYS FROM INDICTMENT TO TRIAL LAMENTED

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 31 Oct 81 p 1

[Article by Calane da Silva]

[Text] Many of us would like to have our own penal code, a broad spectrum of laws which would govern every type of situation, defending the citizen and society, punishing--with just measures in each case--the crime or offense against justice. We would like to have a judicial apparatus with a sufficient number of qualified people, politically and technically well-trained.

In any case, could it be the lack of such laws, of sufficient qualified people, which has resulted in offenses against legality and merited the necessary and urgent attention of the Supreme Party Directorate, giving rise to the present offensive against lawlessness prevalent in the country?

In this brief article, I wish to mention only one specific aspect of our justice system, that relating to the case of prisoners. Until at least a short time ago, we had more prisoners in the Maputo Central Prison awaiting sentencing than those already serving their sentences, which would be more logical and correct.

For example, a citizen is arrested upon suspicion of having committed a crime. His testimony is heard by the PIC [Criminak Investigation Police].

The trial begins in court. Here we have a new problem. Much time passes between the beginning of the trial and the time it is put into the hands of the deputy. Too much time, so that the trial itself gets lost in an abundance of red tape.

The amount of time spent by the arrested person in jail is dependent upon the speed with which the trial is categorized as to criminal involvement and as to whether the accused should be held in custody as a precautionary measure of released on bail to await trial.

This is why many persons are arrested merely on suspicion or, having taken part in crimes of little consequence, end up remaining in prison months or even years awaiting trial.

We also have the case of official defenders who are not able to take prior steps to gather enough facts for a correct defense. At times they do not learn about the case they will be defending until the start of the trial.

We must break with this and other situations of a similar nature, for, if we do not eliminate such work methods, we shall be opening doors to the enemies of the revolution and, consciously or unconsciously, serving those same enemies. We would be particularly going against the fundamental law of the country--the people's conquests.

EFFORTS UNDERTAKEN TO IMPROVE MEAT SUPPLY

Maputo NOTICIAS in Portuguese 29 Oct 81 p 3

[Article by Jorge Mouco]

[Text] The biggest cattle-marketing campaign conducted up to now in the family sector will be launched in Gaza Province next week. Five brigades of the State Cattle and Fur Marketing Firm (GAPECOM) will take part in this campaign, and they expect to put on more than 54 fairs by the end of November. This effort is aimed at guaranteeing a supply of fresh meat to urban centers located in the country's southern area.

Sources connected with the program, the first of this type to be carried out since the firm's creation, told our newspaper yesterday that some workers and certain equipment to be used are already in that area. These people and their equipment are to be increased to make the campaign called "Offensive for the Recovery of the Plan" a success.

All the cattle-marketing brigades which were operating in Maputo Province are now in Gaza, since the Maputo markets are completely shut down due to an outbreak of aphthous fever. It will be remembered that this epidemic outbreak is considered the main reason for the drop in the supply of fresh meat to Maputo, as we mentioned in previous editions.

"We are convinced that we shall reach our objectives inasmuch as the first indications received are very good. Naturally, there may be a few problems relating to the transportation of cattle, since our fleet is small; but we have contacted various entities, particularly the CFM-Sul [Southern Mozambique Railroad], and we believe they realize the importance of the program," a member of GAPECOM, connected with this sector, said yesterday in Maputo.

According to the same source of information, as of yesterday, about 1,500 head of cattle had been marketed in Gazam and there are hopes of marketing more with the resources now available in that province. Although part of the purchasing plan of the fourth quarter, this figure is outside of the additional program previously mentioned.

From what we were told by a member of that organization, radio broadcasts through the interprovincial station of RM [Radio Mozambique] disclosing GAPECOM's objectives are credited with having aroused the greatest interest among cattle breeders inducing them to deliver more cattle and goats to the market.

"If things continue at this rate, the supply of fresh meat to Maputo will be assured. We hope that by the end of November the outbreak of aphthous fever will have abated to the point where we can begin again to market cattle in Maputo Province. According to our program, the animals will be slaughtered there and transported to Maputo in our trucks in the form of refrigerated meat," the same GAPECOM employee said.

The great demand for consumer goods, particularly staples in the food sector, wea also stressed. Shortages in this area have caused problems which are reflected in the decreased number of animals purchased. We must also consider the lack of spare parts for maintaining equipment already in the hands of the consumers, such as radios, bicycles and others.

When they were detained, the criminals had with them maps showing the said bridges, a number of documents (?for) sabotage actions and a number of weapons. They had plans for an urgent appeal to South Africa to supply them with equipment and to give them support. These facts were disclosed on Saturday by the commander of the 3rd company and the people's militia which operate in the (Insolene), (Changanas), (Chingatela) and (Machava) wards at a ceremony of commissioning a new activist group for Patricio Lumumba Ward. He said that in the last 10 months his brigade has also detained 111 criminals, 130 thieves and 15 smokers of hashish. [Text] [EA301154 Maputo Domestic Service in Portuguese 1030 GMT 30 Nov 81]

A meeting to this effect will take place today in the district of Moamba with all the private farmers in the area. According to this directorate, the meeting is a continuation of activities initiated among the private farmers in the districts of Marracuene and Manhica. SWEDISH RED CROSS DONATION--The Mozambican Red Cross has initiated contacts with its kindred countries in southern Africa with the goal of providing food to the victims of tropical neuropathy in Nampula. The Mozambican request for foodstuffs is for nearly 400 tons of cereals, 235 tons of beans and 34 tons of vegetable oil. These foods are to be supplied by Zimbabwe and Swaziland. In the meantime, it has been announced that the Swedish Red Cross will also contribute 2 million crowns (nearly 13 million meticals) to the paralysis victims. According to the president of the Mozambican Red Cross, studies are being carried out with the aim of acquiring food on a long-term basis to support the victims of tropical neuropathy. CHANGANE RIVER BRIDGE DESTROYED--Tuesday, the passage of a truck with a trailer load of foodstuffs destroyed the metal bridge over the Changane River which connects the district of Chibuto with that of Guija, in Gaza Province. According to information our newspaper staff received yesterday, the anchoring of the bridge was not yet completed. Previously, after the completion of a number of technical studies, it was decided to open the bridge to traffic on two conditions: maximum speed, 10 km per hour, and maximum weight (vehicle plus load), 30 tons. "On 27 October at 0640 hours, a truck with its trailer completely loaded with bags of sugar on its way to Guija District caused the bridge to collapse. The truck entered the bridge and, after it had advanced a few meters, the driver felt the bridge beginning to give way; he continued slowly and, when he arrived at the middle of the bridge, it began to bend and twisted in the form of an S," our staff was told yesterday by a member of the National Construction Technology Directorate [DNTC] at the Ministry of Public Works and Housing. The truck belongs to a businessman in Guija District who, upon being questioned, informed the local authorities that the load being transported was within the maximum limits established for traffic on that bridge. Although no personal injury is reported as a result of the accident, the damage--still to be determined--is considered substantial. Traffic is stopped. The truck, stuck among the bridge's girders, has been removed from the scene of the accident. A DNTC technician went to the site yesterday to get the facts about the incident. ARRIVAL OF FLOATING DOCK--The floating dock recently acquired by our country from the Soviet Union, pursuant to a protocol signed between the two countries in April 1980, arrived at the commercial port of Maputo at about 1800 hours yesterday. The dock is equipped with a floating workshop which, according to the Soviet technicians who will work on it, is a real ship repair enterprise. The dock also has two towers, each of which supports a 5-ton capacity crane. In addition, the dock has its own power plant, steam boilers for repairs and an air compressor. The 4,500-ton capacity dock is self-sufficient; it has everything needed for any type of ship repair without calling on the part facilities. The dock can make repairs to ships up to 130 meters long. Depending on their dimensions, it can also repair more than one ship at a time. Regarding the workshop, it is divided into several sections: mechanical, electric and electronic sections, a section for repair of combustible equipment and a section for repair of refrigeration facilities. According to Victo Borissov and Guenadiym Khorunge, this is the first time a dock of this type has been moved as far as the distance between the Soviet Union and Mozambique. They say that, depending on the quantity of work to be performed, between 180 and 300 workers are needed to work on the dock. With the floating dock, Mozambique will occupy a prominent position in ship repair, close behind South Africa and Madagascar. The dock will substantially increase our country's ship-repair capability; Mozambique will be in a position to conduct large-scale repair operations. COMMENTATOR EXAMINES COUNTRY'S RELATIONS WITH PRC

[Commentary by Alex Ekyawon]

[Text] In spite of the fact that Nigeria gained its independence in 1960, it did not establish diplomatic relations with the PRC until 1971. This was largely due to the then Western disguised influence on our foreign policy. At least for quite some time, some Western nations preferred to deal with Taiwan instead of mainland China. The situation was further compounded by the alleged Chinese role during the civil war in this country. But in 1971, there was a dramatic turn of events for the better. Nigeria established diplomatic relations with China at ambassadorial level. This was subsequently followed by a historic visit to China by Nigeria's head of state at that time.

Relations between the two countries were further cemented when Nigeria, along with some other countries, campaigned vigorously at the United Nations for the admission of China as a member of the world body. Since then, the normalization process has been heralded by a number of cooperation agreements. In November 1972, Nigeria and China signed an agreement on economic and technical cooperation. This was later followed by an exchange of letters on technical cooperation in the field of agriculture in Lagos by the two countries. In February 1973, a 21-man Chinese agricultural study team arrived in Nigeria to study our agricultural needs and report on areas of possible cooperation, particularly in the field of rice, wheat and cotton cultivation. The outcome of that visit led to China's cooperation with Nigeria in the 130 hectares small-scale rice project at Itokin, Lagos State. The same goes for the rice project in Odekpe in Anambra State and Gampanduro area of Kwara State. This arrangement provided for the on-the-site participation of Chinese experts and technicians.

In March 1981, another cooperation agreement was signed. That was an indication that the 1972 agreement has been satisfactory to the two countries. The Nigerian-Chinese cooperation agreement has made an impact in other areas too. The most significant of these is in the assistance of Chinese technical experts in the development of our water and agricultural resources. Forty water boreholes were completed and commissioned in the Chad Basin development authority area of Borno State within 1 year. The successful execution of this project led to the negotiation for 36 new ones in the same area to check occasional drought in the place. China has also indicated its willingness to extend the frontiers of this cooperation in such other areas as the modernization of our railways and in the field of education. The agricultural cooperation agreement is of great interest to Nigeria in view of the fact that despite its large population--the largest in the world--the PRC has achieved self-sufficiency in food production. In addition, it has developed appropriate technology to sustain this achievement. Therefore, because of its green revolution program, Nigeria is not relenting in its effort to familiarize itself with what made Chinese agriculture so successful.

In the industrial sector of her economy, China's impact has equally been felt to some extent. Chinese assistance to our industrial development centers, especially the one in Zaria, has led to the manufacture of simple implements to help our rural farmers and fishermen. On the international scene, Nigeria and China see eye to eye on a good number of issues. Their common background as developing countries has eliminated any divergence of opinion on contemporary world issues. China has given unequivocal support to the liberation struggle in southern Africa and has strongly opposed racism in all its ramifications. This is a cause Nigeria has committed a lot of moral and material resources to. Also, China's support to Africa's candidate for the post of UN secretary general is another proof of its interest in African affairs. It is expected that the visit to Nigeria by Chinese Vice Premier Huang Hua will lead to greater cooperation in the years to come between the Federal Republic of Nigeria and the PRC.

POLICE WARNING TO NEWSPAPERS--Nigeria's Inspector General of Police has warned that police will continue raiding newspapers publishing seditious or false articles, the News Agency of Nigeria reported. The top police official, Chief Sunday Adewusi, gave the warning to the country's newspaper proprietors association. Six senior editors of opposition newspapers have been arrested since the beginning of August and police have raided four of their papers, all supporters of the Opposition Unity Party (UPN). The agency quoted Mr. Adewusi as saying that police would no longer tolerate publications causing a breakdown of law and order. Several newspapers quoted Oyo State Governor, Chief Bola Ige, of the Unity Party, as warning journalists that his administration would copy the Federal Government and prosecute newspapers which publish seditious and false information about his government. Governor Ige's statement was widely interpreted in the press as a unity party move against papers supporting the Federal Government as well as against state governments controlled by President Shagari's National Party (NPN). Opposition papers accused the President last month of bribing opposition parliamentarians to support him and also published allegations of assassination plots against the opposition in Kaduna and Gongola states. GOOD RELATIONS WITH INDIA--Nigeria's national planning minister, Mr. Adenike Ebun Oyagbola, said that Indian businessmen and experts had greatly helped in cementing friendly relations between the two countries. Mr. Oyagbola said Nigeria should draw inspiration from India's transformation from a predominantly agricultural economy to a self-reliant and modern industrial nation within a few decades. Speaking at the opening of a three-day meeting in New Delhi of the Indo-Nigerian joint commission, the minister thanked India for its co-operation with Nigeria in the fields of transport, trade, telecommunications and manpower development. Indian finance minister Ramaswami Venkataraman told the meeting that Indian co-operation in Nigeria's industrial development was growing. A large number of Indian experts were now working in Nigeria, he said. [Text] [London WEST AFRICA in English No 3345, 7 Sep 81 p 2075]

WEAPONS SMUGGLING--The Chief Whip of the Borno State House of Assembly, Alhaji Mohammed Bamami has alleged that arms and ammunitions were being smuggled into Maiduguri and other parts of the state through Ganboru, a town on the Nigeria-Cameroon border. Alhaji Mohammed made the allegation recently on the floor of the house. He said that 40 grenades, two bazookas, 41 guns, 31 rounds of ammunition and 81 bombs had been smuggled into Maiduguri. He said that the Police had been alerted on the issue but nothing had been done to investigate it. The house has resolved to report the situation to President Shagari, and the Inspector-General of Police, Mr. Sunday Adewusi. [Text] [London WEST AFRICA in English No 3351, 19 Oct 81 p 2477]

TROOPS PLEDGED FOR CHAD--The precise make-up of the force may depend on particular national circumstances, for example the 800 Senegalese troops in The Gambia. Nigeria has pledged 2,000 men, and support for the proposal was confirmed on October 31 from Lagos; Nigeria was ready to "render all possible assistance to the Chadian people." President Shagari has since January been attempting to secure a Libyan withdrawal, and a presidential spokesman said recently that President Weddeye has sent a special envoy asking for Nigerian forces immediately. COAL INDUSTRY--The coal industry in the country is to be reactivated. The minister of mines and power, Alhaji Mohammed Ibrahim Hassan, told the Senate Committee on Mines and Power today that the measure was being taken to enable the National Electric Power Authority to establish coal power stations as an alternative for the generation of electricity. He stated that the program was being delayed to ensure that adequate coal was available for the power stations. Alhaji Mohammed pointed out that it will be useless to embark on the project without enough guarantee for coal supply. He also told the committee that plans were in the pipeline to create a central committee that would control the establishment of industries in the country. When operational, people wishing to establish industries would be required to furnish the committee with their energy requirements. This, he said, would go a long way in checking the indiscriminate location of industries which have affected the smooth supply of electricity in the country. COCOA REHABILITATION, COFFEE PRICES--The Nigerian Cocoa Board has spent 1.2 million naira on cocoa rehabilitation out of the 1.75 million naira allocated (?this year) by the federal government. The balance, according to Chairman of the Board Prince Gbade Adewoyi, has been committed to research and the purchase of vehicles. Prince Gbade said at the opening of the fourth session of the National Committee on Cocoa in Ibadan, Oyo State, that all the states have promised to make land available for commercial cocoa estates. OIL DISCOVERY--Lagos, October 23--Mobil Oil Nigeria has discovered a new oil field in South-East Nigeria, the DAILY TIMES reported today quoting Mobil Nigeria Chairman Carl Burnett. The new deposit has been estimated at about 1,000 million barrels, which represents about 12 years of production at the company's current production rate of between 75 and 85 million barrels annually. Overall Nigerian production is currently averaging about 1,000,000 barrels daily. (AFP) [Text] [Paris AFRICA AFP in English No 2839, 23 Oct 81 p 8]

SEPTEMBER OIL PRODUCTION INCREASES--The crude oil produced in the country in the month of September stood at over 31 million barrels. Of this figure, more than 24 million barrels were exported. This shows an increase of about 50 percent in production during the period compared with the figure recorded for August. A release today by the Nigerian National Petroleum Corporation says the increase is as a result of the positive effect of the discounts granted to buyers of the country's crude oil in August this year by the federal government. According to the release, the posted prices stood at 29 naira, 10 kobo per barrel of high quality grade and 28 naira, 13 kobo for medium grade. The official selling prices of 26 naira, 24 kobo and 25 naira, 39 kobo per barrel remained constant throughout the month. [Text] [AB241614 Lagos Domestic Service in English 1500 GMT 24 Nov 81]

WHEAT IMPORT PROJECTION--South Africa will probably have to import between 250,000 and 300,000 tons of wheat this season following a sharp deterioration in the crop's prospects during the past 3 weeks due to an unseasonal heat wave. The manager of the South African Wheat Board, Mr (Denin Van Arde), has said in Pretoria that the board has cut its latest crop estimate to nearly 2 million tons from a record 2.25 million forecast last month. Mr (Van Arde) attributed the cutback in the overall crop estimate to a heat wave throughout the Free State Province during the past 3 weeks. He added that lack of rain within a few days could further lower the Free State and national crop estimate. [Text] [LD200430 Johannesburg International Service in English 0400 GMT 20 Nov 81]

Mr. Kanyomozi said the Ugandan Government would consider granting tax concessions to interested Indian entrepreneurs in launching industries. UPM LEADER FREED--Kampala, November 2--The Secretary-General of the opposition Uganda Patriotic Movement (UPM), Jabeli Bidandi Sali, said today that no conditions were attached to his sudden release Friday after nine months in jail. "I have been released without preconditions," Mr. Sali told AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE at his home near here. "I am in good health... I am happy," he said as he was surrounded by dozens of well-wishers and relatives. Mr. Sali, 44, was arrested along with several other UPM officials on February 10 following a strike at Government installations. Most of the other officials have since been released. He said he had no idea that he was going to be freed until a prison guard ordered him to gather his belongings and then drove him home. In a telephone call to THE GUARDIAN newspaper here, Amin, who is in exile in Saudi Arabia, said he had had meetings with opponents of the current Ugandan President, Milton Obote. He had decided to back Mr. Binaisa, who was ousted in June 1979 a year after succeeding him, he told the paper. Amin said in the call that Mr. Binaisa, who arrived in London at the weekend from Nairobi after apparently being expelled from Kenya, "will be President of Uganda again." President Obote returned to power last December some 10 years after being overthrown by Amin, who was at that time Army chief. (AFP) [Text] [Paris AFRICA AFP in English No 2840, 27 Oct 81 p 20]

COTTON PRODUCTION PLUNGE--Kampala, October 25--Cotton production in Uganda has declined 16-fold over the last ten years, falling from the record 446,000 185-kilogramme bales produced in the 1969-70 season to the dismal 30,000 bales produced last year, the lowest since official records started 30 years ago. Officials of the Lint Marketing Board, the Government institution responsible for the production and marketing of cotton in Uganda, say output this year is expected to fall even lower. The Uganda Government earlier this month doubled the price paid to cotton growers, from 15 Uganda shillings to 30 (approximately 0.38 dollars) per kilo of raw cotton, in a bid to encourage farmers to produce more. This price is uniform for all types and grades of cotton produced in Uganda, but Lint Marketing Board officials privately admitted that it is too low. FRG WAIVES DEBT--West Germany has waived a debt amounting to about DM60 million owed by the Uganda Government as far back as the 1960's. The agreement transferring the loan into a grant exempting Uganda from payment has been signed by the minister of public service and cabinet affairs, Mr Wilson Okwanje, and the West German ambassador to Uganda, Mr Rolf Enders. The agreement does not cover Uganda's commercial debts owed to Germany by private firms totalling DM2 million. Mr Okwanje expressed appreciation for the assistance being rendered by the German Government in the task of rehabilitation and reconstruction of Uganda's shattered economy. He appealed to the international community for more assistance. In reply, Mr Enders told the minister that his government is aware of Uganda's needs and is ready to assist her in the task of rehabilitation and reconstruction. COMMENTARY SEES CONFUSION IN OAU LEADERSHIP

[Text] In conformity with the proposal made at the Paris conference, the Zairian contingent of the inter-African neutral peace-keeping force in Chad arrived in Ndjamena on Sunday, 15 November, after a week of indecision caused by some minor diplomatic misunderstandings. Then on Tuesday, the founding chairman of the MPR and president of the Republic of Zaire received a congratulatory message from the OAU secretary general. He congratulated the Zairian troops for being the first to be on the spot well before the contingents of the other brotherly countries that are to make up the neutral force.

The following day, however, a message dated 15 November from the current chairman of the OAU was received by the office of the founding chairman. The contents of this second message clearly demonstrated that there is lack of coordination within the OAU. The secretary general praised us on the preceding day but the following day the organization's current chairman was urging Zaire to urgently send a contingent which in fact was already on the spot. Worse still, besides urging his Zairian counterpart to urgently dispatch the Zairian contingent to Chad, President Arap Moi--in the first paragraph of his message--blithely proposed that the heads of state meeting scheduled for 20 November in Kinshasa be postponed. We all know that this meeting, which was decided at the foreign minister's meeting in Lagos, was aimed at providing the OAU countries contributing troops to the peace-keeping force an opportunity to exchange views.

It would appear that in his efforts to ensure the speedy dispatch of the troops to Chad, the OAU chairman has his feet on the accelerator and the brakes at the same time with the heavenly serenity of one who is unaware of realities. In any case and despite the contradictions besetting the OAU as far as the Chadian affair is concerned, Zaire is only worried by the postponement of the heads of state conference. This is because as far as its contribution of troops is concerned, one just has to go to Ndjamena to see them. One must also remember the visit which the president of the transitional national union government of Chad has just paid to our country.

OIL PRICE FREEZE--Kinshasa, October 22--The Zairean Government has decided to freeze fuel prices until the end of January, official sources said today. The sources said the decision stemmed from the serious consequences a price rise would have on key sectors of the economy, notably in agriculture and transport. It was alleged yesterday that a reduction in fuel supplies over the past two weeks was engineered deliberately by the oil companies in a bid to force the Government to agree to price rises. The last price rises, of some 30 per cent, occurred last July. (AFP) [Text] [Paris AFRICA AFP in English No 2839, 23 Oct 81 p 8]

GECAMINES FINANCIAL NEEDS--Kinshasa, November 5--Zaire's giant mining company, GECAMINES, needs 250 million dollars for its expansion programme, Zairese Finance and Budget Minister Namuisi Ma Nkoy said here Wednesday. He told reporters that talks had begun with the World Bank on financing the programme, which involves boosting copper production from the present 430,000 tonnes a year to 470,000 and modernising transport facilities from the Shaba mining area to the port of Matadi, in Lower Zaire. Most of Zaire's revenue comes from the sale of copper and cobalt. (AFP) [Text] [Paris AFRICA AFP in English No 2843, 6 Nov 81 p 23]

STUDENTS REPATRIATED FROM BELGIUM--Brussels, October 9--Almost 1,000 Zaireans studying in Belgium on home-government scholarships have been told to fly back to Kinshasa and finish their studies in Zaire, the Flemish-language daily DE MORGEN reported here today. The report said the repatriation decision, taken by the Ministry of Further Education and Scientific Research, affected all students whose subjects were taught in Zairean universities. The order even covered a batch of 300 students who arrived in Belgium only a few weeks ago, DE MORGEN said. According to the newspaper, Zairean student circles were upset because they felt that university education at home was "corrupt at all levels." 'TRAITORS' EXPELLED--The Central Committee has decided on the expulsion of several of its members found guilty of "serious offences against party discipline and various acts contrary to the regulations of the party." The Minister of Posts and Telecommunications, M. Tokwaulu Bolamba was arrested for embezzlement of funds and Citizens Ndeze and Mukwani were excluded from the Central Committee. M. Mukwani is the former Secretary General of the Zairean National Workers' Union. [Text] [London WEST AFRICA in English No 3350, 12 Oct 81 p 2426]

AID FROM BELGIUM, CANADA--The Belgian Minister of Development Co-operation, Mr. Daniel Coens, has said that, despite budgetary constraints, Belgium has maintained its level of co-operation with Zaire. The total appropriation for the current year is 4,000m. Belgian francs, about one-third of Belgium's total bilateral commitment. Canada is to give $500,000 for food and sanitary assistance to refugees in Zaire. The money is part of the $22.4m. Canada has promised to help refugees throughout Africa. The United Nations High Commission for Refugees (UNHCR) estimate more than 400,000 Ugandan, Angolan, Rwandan, Burundian and Zambian refugees are living in Zaire. OIL PRODUCTION--According to a World Bank report on energy, Zairian oil reserves stand at 130 billion barrels. According to the newspaper OIL AND GAS OWNERS quoted by the financial institution, Zairian oil production was 22,000 barrels a day in 1980 compared to only 21,000 barrels a day in 1979. MINISTER MALECELA ON MINERAL RESOURCES REGIONAL CONFERENCE

[Interview with Ndugu John Malecela, Tanzania's minister for minerals, by Christopher Magola, date and place not given]

[Text] Africa is substantially endowed with mineral resources whose exploitation is however hampered by financial and other limitations. In this interview with Correspondent Christopher Magola, Tanzania's Minister for Minerals, Ndugu John Malecela comments on efforts being made by African countries individually and collectively, to overcome those limitations towards promoting the mining industry.

Q:— The first Regional Conference on the development and utilisation of Mineral resources in Africa was held in Arusha a few months ago. What prompted Africa to hold such a Conference?

A:— The Conference held in Arusha is a step to achieve the preliminary studies relating to the appraisal of known African mineral resources and their present development with proposals as to how best they could be developed to meet the needs of the region.

The time has come when Africa should assess its mineral resources, review the present status of its development and identify existing weaknesses; endeavour to pursue the appropriate policies and action programmes which would strengthen the contribution of the mineral sector to the socio-economic development of the African region.

Q:— What was the outcome of the Conference especially on how the mining industry can play a major role in the economic and social development of African countries?

A:— As a result of the meeting, the focus on mining industry was very much sharpened. It was recommended that technical knowledge of Mineral Resources be built up to form a base of Mineral Resources Development in Africa. In view of this, state geological and mining services should be reviewed in order to advance geology-mining activities to be emphasized should be the study of new approaches to bilateral and multilateral technical assistance; consider the state geology-mining services as part of the basic infrastructure; prepare to facilitate research, evaluation and development of mineral resources, the basic thematic maps (geological, metallogenic, geophysical, geochemical etc.); accumulate all the available data and evaluate them in accordance with the United Nations classification; collection, preservation and proper use of documentation; taking of appropriate steps to exchange geological, technical and economical information at different levels of centres (state, sub-regional and international) and the use of remote sensing data for basic geological research. All these are but guidelines recommended by the meeting to the African countries.

Q:— Was a policy on African mining industry formulated? If such a policy was formulated can you give some details?

A:— The Conference, on policy issues, recommended that all the countries in the Africa region are charged with the responsibility of implementing the recommendations of the conference, i.e. Building up of Technical Knowledge of the Mineral Resources Base; Development of National and Multinational capabilities for mineral extraction and processing and for marketing of mineral products; protection of the environment and implementation and follow-up action.

Q:— You were the leader of our delegation to the Conference. What was the contribution of Tanzania, the host to the Conference?

A:— The government of the United Republic of Tanzania as a host made available at its expense the premises, equipment, utilities and stationery supplies for the conference. It also made arrangement for hotel accommodation for the participants (payable by the participants themselves). The participants were availed transport during the period of the conference at the government's expense. The Government also accorded protection to ensure smooth and efficient functioning of the conference.

Q:— Most minerals in Africa are exported in the form of raw materials. Was there any agreement to reverse this trend so that minerals could be processed in Africa and be exported in the form of goods or semi-finished products?

A:— The meeting recommended that African countries should now act to establish multi-national state mining, processing and marketing enterprises — these would in turn develop National and Multi-national capabilities for mineral extraction, processing and marketing of mineral products policy.

Technically it was recommended that action be taken to establish and/or strengthen State Mining Corporations by providing adequte technical facilities and incentives for high-quality performance by staff; encourage small-scale mining for mineral exploitation and skills needed for processing minerals to produce finished products be developed.

Q:— Can you assess the main minerals of the continent and the present status and development trends of minerals extractive industry in Africa?

A:— The region is potentially well off in mineral wealth, considering that our continent has 97 per cent of world reserves of chrome; 85 per cent of world reserves of platinum; 64 per cent of world reserves of manganese; 25 per cent of world reserves of, uranium and 13 per cent of world reserves of copper, without mentioning bauxite, nickel and lead.

The 1980s decade is Africa's decade for Industrial Development — thus creation at the National and regional levels of the proper scientific, technical and industrial environment necessary for the development and expansion of the mineral extractive industries.

Q:— How does the present geological activities in search of new mineral resources, distribution and evaluation of new discovered mineral deposits in Africa look like?

A:— Some bilateral, multilateral and international assistance, hitherto provided to African countries did not do much in the development of the mineral sector. Hence to improve the situation it was suggested that mineral development policies of African countries be harmonised, multi-country cooperation in all mineral development activities should be intensified; strengthen and establish multi-national institutions to carry out mineral resources development among African countries; and promote increased intra-African trade in minerals and mineral products.

Q:— What are the priority areas for the present and future activities in geology and mineral resources development in Africa?

A:— The folling constitute the areas of priority for the present and future activities in geology and mineral resources development; Building up of Technical Knowledge of the mineral resources base; Development of national and multinational capabilities for mineral extraction and processing and for marketing of mineral products; Development of intra-African market for minerals and mineral products; Protection of the environment; Manpower development, The development of National and international mineral exploration and mining processing equipment industries; Research and Development and The creation of financing, investment and insurance institutions.

Q:— Africa is rich in minerals but lacks the techniques for tapping them. What was the general consensus on tackling this problem to hasten the development of mining industry in Africa?

A:— The Conference urged African governments to do all they can, at all levels, to implement the recommendations of this first Regional Conference on the Development and Utilisation of Mineral Resources in Africa.

Q:— What are the urgent technical requirements for mineral resources activities in Africa?

A:— Today; the most urgent technical requirements in this sector for Africa would be to build up a technical knowledge base; develop national and multinational capabilities for mineral extraction and processing and marketing of the mineral products and making sure that the environment is protected.

Q:— Is there any research and development of new mining techniques and processing related to the African region?

A:— The conference was very much concerned with the research and development of the mineral sector of the African region. So it was recommended that analysis be made of industrial property rights (including trade marks) in parts and components, chemical and other supplies for the mining industry as guides to production and/or negotiations, policies/and strategies.

Secondly Research and Development should be organised on a multi-national basic relating to standardization of equipment and other supplies for the mining industry, with special reference to medium and small scale mining.

Thirdly, Regional mechanisms should be established for monitoring trends in technological change in mineral exploration, mining and processing for consideration of the implications of such change for mining in Africa and for providing advice to Governments and mining companies.

These activities could be undertaken by the three sub-regional centres for mineral resources development. In the Eastern and Southern Africa region such a centre is already established in Dodoma.

Fourth, studies should be made of capital labour mixes in exploration technology which favour the utilisation of hand-held, back-packed and other mobile equipment and of semi-skilled labour. Fifth, studies should be made of spatial and other aspects of the organisation of national exploration and geological mapping services, associated with the above.

Sixth, National corporations should be established for negotiating the transfer and use of imported technology.

Q:— Some African countries are experienced in planning and implementation of mineral resources development programmes. Was there any agreement to share such experience among African countries?

A:— In order that some of the African States could benefit from others it was recommended that:

- Mineral data should be disseminated as a means of promoting regional trade;
- Multi-national co-operation should be organized in establishing smelting and refining capacity at sub-regional level whenever and wherever feasible;
- The establishment of an African association of mining and mineral processing engineers is recommended in order to ensure that experience is shared among African countries and
- The Economic Commission for Africa (ECA) should undertake a study on the establishment of a regional sub-committee on mineral resources development.

Q:— The experience of multi-national mineral resources development centres and of the Geological Society of Africa is vital for the development of African Mining Industry. Now can this experience be widely utilised?

A — It is quite true that multinational centres and geological societies are vital for the development of African mining industry. That is why much emphasis was put on joining the Dodoma centre and that governments take full interests to see that the centre gets their high priority. The other similar centres were to be considered after 1982 — these include that of central sub-region (1980-81). North and West sub-region which will come later.

Q:— What are the prospects of the Dodoma-based East African Mineral Resources Development Centre (EANRDC) in relation to the African mining industry?

A:— As the name shows, this centre is a big prop in the development of mining sector in this sub-region. So in future this centre will co-ordinate the Scientific findings related to the sector and consequently contribute to the technical know-how of the whole region as regards African mining industry.

Q:— Do you see any need to establish an African Multi-national Corporation? If so how can such a corporation be beneficial to African countries?

A:— There is all need but time will come for this. At the moment it is not quite mature because not all African states have enough technical know-how in this field and many of the African states are not explored enough; hence meagre data for mining industry — not enough for preliminary take-off.

Q:— The Arusha Conference was attended by several non-governmental organisations and other international agencies. Were there any pledges for provision of external resources for mineral projects in Africa?

A:— In its "Implementation and Follow-up Action Programme the Conference charged the ECA with the responsibility to include the recommendations in its work Programme for 1982-1983 and in its medium-Term Plan of 1984-1989. The above actions should establish legislative authority for the secretariat to mobilize financial and human resources (regular budget, bilateral and multilateral) and proceed with the implementation of the recommendations.

Q:— Did the Conference reach an agreement on measive of conservation of mineral resources and environmental protection?

A:— The Conference looked, thoroughly, into the aspects connected with the development and utilization of mineral resources in Africa. Ways and means, as to how best the region could achieve its goals in this important field, were recommended. It was recommended that protection of the environment should constitute an integral part of exploration, mining and processing operations. It was further recommended that this be included in the national mining legislation. Where large-scale mining and mineral processing operations could adversely affect the environment in a number of neighbouring countries (e.g. operations in international waters): it was recommended that consultative bodies or joint co-ordinating organs should be established to monitor the protection of the environment.

Q:— Back home, what are the future prospects of the mining industry?

A:— The prospects of mining industry in Tanzania are getting much brighter in the sense that we now have one more institution which would help us to further the Development of the said industry.

The Minister of Finance and Economic Planning, Professor George Benneh signed on behalf of the Ghana Government and the West German Ambassador in Ghana, Dr G. Fischer, signed on behalf of the West German Government.

In a speech preceding the signing ceremony, Professor Benneh appealed to those in charge of the various projects to ensure that the loans were effectively utilized so that future generations who would be called upon to pay back the loans would have no adverse comments to make about their predecessors.

He conveyed through the German Ambassador to the Government and the people of the Federal Republic of Germany the appreciation and heartfelt gratitude of the Government and the people of Ghana.

Professor Benneh expressed the hope that the spirit of co-operation that had developed between Ghana and West Germany would grow until Ghana "discovers that magic formula that accelerated the West German Economy in the late 1950's".

Replying, the West German Ambassador, Dr G. Fischer said that the size of the loan showed his Government's continued support for Ghana and pledged that his country would continue to assist Ghana in her difficult period.

Dr Fisher, however, expressed the hope that in future, there would be more co-operation in the private sector.

[Text] THERE is an old joke about the fellow who loses his car keys. He is seen on the street corner, under the lamppost — on his hands and knees — searching for them. Soon, passersby join him in the search. One of them asks: "Are you sure you lost your keys here?"

"No, I lost them down somewhere on the middle block, but it's awfully dark down there. At least, there is good light here".

It may sound like a silly little story. But, it helps to illustrate the dilemma of Ghana's economics department. Since the People's National Party (PNP) got into power, Limann and his Minister of Economic Planning, Professor George Benneh have been on the street corner, on their hands and knees, searching for a solution to the progressively inflated cedi.

The vehicle for Ghana's economic progress will not move until the President finds a key to a cedi of value, a money Ghanaians can trust, a durable unit of account for making future plans, an anchor of stability — a cedi that is literally as good as gold.

When the PNP took over the economic reins, $1 was worth ¢15 on the free market. Today, $1 exchanges for about ¢40 while the official rate remains $1 to ¢2.75. The cedi, therefore, has suffered a 166% plunge in the 2 year span. The struggle for foreign exchange has become so intense that the cedi has been victimized in the psychological atmosphere.

Ghanaians have lost respect for the national currency. Actually, the real economic problem of Ghana is not in the quantity of cedis in circulation but its quality. The money supply was increased 80% in 1978 alone. This practice continues. Like post-war Germany, making simple payments has become an annoying chore in itself. Ghanaians have had to frequent the trunks of cars to haul in bulk amount of the cedi. As in a bank's vault, they go through the tiresome motions of counting hundreds and thousands of notes — in 1, 5 and 10 denominations — to fulfill everyday needs.

Lack of a better monetary policy remains a weak link in the PNP economic game plan. At the governmental level, huge supplies of the cedi are unleashed from the printers to balance budgets, and to pay the burgeoning number of civil servants — most of whom perform insignificant administrative roles.

Increases in the money supply relative to output have created inflation locally. Inflation has also been generated from abroad in the form of higher interest rates of international financiers, and the exorbitant prices of imports of goods and services.

The IMF prescription of devaluation of the cedi is not the answer to Ghana's economic malady. To begin with, the bulk of the sustained worldwide inflation originates in the industrialized nations, and then ripples through the African economies. In an interview by the California Business (July 1979) President Reagan admitted that the U.S. had to: "....ed the government's artificial stimulation such as the over printing of money— we've gone from $83 billion in circulation in 1960 to $[illegible] billion in 1977. There's been nowhere near that kind of increase in the goods and services behind that currency increase. So obviously the value of our money has gone down."

Again, in a televised address to the American people, Reagan dramatically demonstrated the inflated U.S. currency by holding in one hand a dollar note, and in the other a few cents representing the true value of the dollar. The dollar has not been devalued even under such blatant admission of inflationary circumstances. However, Reagan stressed the need for a greater productivity. Devaluation is a mere book-keeping exercise.

It is a pseudo-solution that enforces and maintains a no-growth situation. Furthermore, with all the emphasis on foreign investment, devaluation will cheapen Ghana's bargaining position considerably. The IMF should rather lobby for the developing economies in their demand for a 'New International Economic Order'. Not only will Ghana benefit from a just economic order, but also the rest of the African countries. If we devalue the cedi today, we will live to devalue it again. History has proven this to be true.

As a local remedy, the PNP administration needs to regulate the quantity of cedis in circulation. Higher denominations of 50, 100, 500 and 1,000 notes must replace the cumbersome situation described. A new approach to monetary policy should aim towards projecting a stable value of the cedi into the future. Ghana will then be preparing herself from a position of strength in the eventual ECOWAS currency unification.

The government employees, their salaries being a contributory factor to the present predicament of the cedi, need to leave the comfort of their offices in order to partake in the economic endeavour that will boost productivity. In work clothes, the ministers, the deputies and ministerial secretaries must be in the forefront of the struggle. Food production represents a genuine type of power.

Unless this is done some Ghanaians will, by virtue of their existence, be perpetuating the inflation merry-go-round.

FIREARMS SMUGGLERS ARRESTED AT AIRPORT

Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 5 Nov 81 pp 4-5

[Article by Debrah Fynn]

[Text] TWO persons who allegedly attempted to import 48 revolvers and 10 packets of .22 ammunition into the country were yesterday arraigned before an Accra Circuit Court.

Eric Kwakye, a student and Christiana Emma Adomaa, a trader, are charged on two counts each of importing firearms without authority and possessing firearms without authority.

They pleaded not guilty and were granted ¢25,000 and ¢5,000 bail respectively with one surety to be justified.

Christiana Emma Adomaa's surety was however, ordered to pay the ¢5,000 bail bond to court while Eric Kwakye's surety is required to have a building worth ¢25,000 and to deposit the title deeds of the building to court.

The prosecution led by Deputy Superintendent of Police (DSP) Gladys Ocloo, told the court presided over by Mr P. K. Owusu-Sekyere, that on October 29, this year, Christiana Adomaa was returning from Dakar, Senegal, to Ghana when Eric Kwakye approached her at the Dakar Airport to help him with a luggage which exceeded the normal weight.

Christiana Adomaa who did not examine the contents of the luggage, the prosecution said, agreed and both accused persons boarded a Ghana bound aircraft.

On their arrival at Kotoka International Airport, the revolvers and packets of the ammunition were found in the luggage which Christiana Adomaa offered on Kwakye's behalf for examination.

The prosecution said when Kwakye was searched 15 revolvers were found concealed in a backpack.

Upon interrogation, Adomaa told the police that it was Kwakye who asked her to carry the luggage for him.

DSP Gladys Ocloo said when Kwakye was interrogated, he admitted giving the luggage to Adomaa and claimed ownership of the firearms.

The case has been adjourned until November 8, for hearing.

According to the complaints filed by the citizens to the Justice Ministry, Governor Fukah had allegedly misappropriated $9,274.96 generated for the development of New Kru Town, Bushrod Island.

The citizens claimed that the Governor had received $2,686.68 as development budget for the period covering 1979 through 1980; sold public lands at the cost of $300; and received $1,545 for land deeds registration.

They also claimed that Governor Fukah collected $920 when he taxed each house five dollars for development; sold $550.00 tickets for the holding of Inter-Ministerial Queen Contest; collected $1,810.90 when he launched cake rally from schools in New Kru Town.

They further alleged that Governor Fukah, upon assuming office, received $113.40 from former Kru Governor Fuflenl Mnah; conducted market rally which yieled $906; and another general rally for water pumps installation in New Kru Town which netted $442.98.

The citizens alleged that when the discovered the misappropriation and an auditor was sent to audit the Borough's account, Governor Fukah claimed to have used the amount to purchase his office equipment.

But the citizens claimed that the equipment, if any, in the Governor's office, were credited from Extraco Company. They said even some of the materials being used by the Governor were voluntarily donated by some business firms when he launched the unsuccessful Inter-Ministerial Queen Contest.

At the investigation today, the citizens will be led by their spokesman, Mr. Roosevelt Toby.

IMMIGRATION AUTHORITIES CONTINUE ILLEGAL ALIENS' DEPORTATION

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 16 Nov 81 p 1

[Text] Forty eight more aliens, who entered the country illegally, were last weekend deported to their various countries by immigration authorities.

They include 30 Guineans who were sent home last Friday, and 18 Sierra Leoneans who were whisked off last Saturday across the Mano River and handed over to Sierra Leone's immigration authorities.

This brings to 88 the number of illegal aliens who have been deported in a week's time by the immigration authorities. The first batch to leave here early last week were 40 Guineans.

They were among 300 illegal aliens arrested recently and detained at the Central Prison in Monrovia. They all came from Guinea, Mali, Ivory Coast, Senegal and Sierra Leone.

Immigration sources described them as "undesirable aliens without any means of livelihood." It was learnt that they had entered the country without any travelling documents.

The sources said these aliens were mainly responsible for the high rate of vagrancy in the country.

Some of them had engaged in "petit" businesses without obtaining permits, and don't bother to pay government taxes, the New Liberian was informed.

Immigration sources confirmed that the various embassies and consulates of those arrested have cooperated with government since the raid on illegal aliens started a few weeks ago.

GIBI TERRITORY OFFICIAL SEEKS BONG COUNTY BOUNDARY CHANGE

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 17 Nov 81 pp 1, 6

[Article by Samuel Johnson]

[Text] Gibi Territory Superintendent Amos Bohn has petitioned government to re-define the common boundary with Bong County to include the Bong Mines Concession areas as part of Gibi Territory.

But Bong County Superintendent Gbardeh Zaza, in a request to government during last month's visit to that county by Local Government Minister Edward Sackor, appealed to have Gibi Territy adjoined to Bong County.

Superintendent Zaza argued that the areas now known as Gibi Territory were part of Bong County before they were given territorial status during the Tolbert regime and affixed to Montserrado County.

Gibi Superintendent Bohn did not detail reasons for his request, but appealed to Minister Sackor to "use his good office to retrieve our land." "We want our land," he said.

Superintendent Bohn made the appeal Saturday during arrival reception for Minister Sackor who visited the Territory in continuation of the second leg of his nation-wide tour to explain government's farming program.

Meanwhile, Superintendent Bohn has also appealed for the city status of Kakata to be elevated to a district. He claimed the city meets the requirements of a district.

He further stressed the importance of a centralized water system because, he said, the waters of the territory were being polluted by the pelletizing plant of the Bong Mines Company.

The provision of an operational budget for city corporation to carry out development programs and services to residents were also requested by the Superintendent.

Minister Sackor promised to channel the appeals through the appropriate authorities for redress, and advised Superintendent Bohn to make it formal through a petition to the PRC.

PRC SPEAKER WARNS LEBANESE AGAINST UNDERMINING STABILITY

Monrovia NEW LIBERIAN in English 20 Nov 81 p 3

[Text] PRC Speaker, Brigadier General Jeffred S.Gbatu,Wednesday warned all lebanese in the country to abide by the laws of the nation.

He gave the warning at his capitol office when he had audience with the President of the Lebanese Community in Liberia, Dr. Aref Kassas.

Speaker Gbatu informed Dr. Kassas that most of the complaints reaching the capitol have indicated that muslim and Christian members of the Lebanese community had been antagonising each other in many ways, especially in business.

General Gbatu pointed out that the Liberian Government would not tolerate anyone to take advantage of the good business atmosphere provided for all investors in the country.

He said government would take action against anyone undermining the stability of the country through "harmful religious" and other activities.

In response, Dr. Kassas thanked Speaker Gbatu for the meeting and said he would always endeavour to guarantee the unity and brotherhood of the Lebanese community in Liberia.

Dr. Kassas however lashed out at members of the Lebanese community who, he said, were in the habit of reporting cases directly to government officials.

PRESIDENT RENE'S BIRTHDAY MARKED

Victoria NATION in English 16 Nov 81 pp 1, 2

[Text] ONCE again today we devote space in our columns to mark the birthday of our Head of State, M. France Albert René. Our reason for doing so is not to foster any personality cult or to praise him to the heavens. He will be the last one to agree to such a course and would rightly object, if we were to do so.

Our aim is simply to pinpoint the significance of today's date in the history of Seychelles because it is the date of the birth of the man who has changed the course of our history and the destiny of the Seychellois people for the better:

— The man who challenged British rule in Seychelles and won;

— The man who brought about our Liberation;

— The man who has turned a class-ridden people dominated by a privileged few into a one-class society where the majority rules;

— The man who has given the humblest citizen pride in himself, his work and his country;

— The man who is changing a nation of tenants into home-owners;

— The man whose vision has provided free and equal education for all children and free medical service for each and everyone;

— The man whose economic policies have given us one of the highest minimum wage levels and standards of living in the Third World;

— The man who is giving every Seychellois equal opportunities in every respect;

— The man who has turned a poor, listless, subservient and divided people into a proud and respected nation.

These are but a few of the major achievements of Mr. René and we mark his birthday today to show our gratitude as a nation for what he has done so far and to show our appreciation of what he is still doing and will continue to do for the betterment of the Seychelles.

He has not achieved so much by waving a magic wand but through proper planning, dedication to the country and people, hard work and the backing of colleagues as well as the humblest party members who believe in his vision of a prosperous and egalitarian Seychelles.

France Albert René was not born with any "divine right" to rule or privilege. He comes from an ordinary working family and worked his way to the position he now occupies — a path which developed in him an overwhelming abhorence for the injustice then rampant in our society and decided to dedicate his entire life to its eradication.

That path forged his ambition and determination to mould the Seychellois people into one united family and create a society based on brotherhood and justice and in which there would be no place for the exploitation of one by another or of a group by another group.

That path also gave him his understanding of the Seychellois character and his personal simplicity of style and abhorence of pompous titles and ceremonies.

That same path too brought him the love of the workers who were the first to rally to his call for liberation until today he has the love and deep appreciation of all the Seychellois people.

The President is 46 years old today and he will be playing host at State House this afternoon to the elderly, after doing the same on La Digue and Praslin during the weekend. This is another indication of the importance which he attaches to the working people, young or old.

No man has done more for Seychelles and the Seychellois so far and it is proper that we acknowledge it at least once a year.

In the name of this same Seychellois people, we wish France Albert René a very happy birthday, long life and well may he continue to lead us, the Seychellois people, along the revolutionary path which we have chosen.

SPPF HOLDS SEMINAR ON DEVELOPMENT

Socialist Policies

Victoria NATION in English 9 Nov 81 pp 1, 2

[Text]

LAST SATURDAY district SPFF delegates to the one-day seminar on "The Role of the SPPF in National Social and Economic Development" left the Maison du Peuple conference room agreeing it had been one of the most enlightening and fruitful exchanges of information and ideas between party members and senior members of the Government.

Organised at the request of the Ministry of Planning and Development and the Department of Youth and Community Development, the event was the largest of occasional meetings between Government ministers and SPPF branch officials to bring the latter, and through them the party rank and file, up to date on the progress in carrying out the policies of Seychelles' socialist revolution.

Today NATION brings its readers the first of a two-part report of last Saturday's seminar, which covered national development and budgeting in the morning and rural community development in the afternoon.

SATURDAY morning's dialogue with some 120 district party leaders and senior officials of SPPF-affiliated bodies was nothing new to Dr. Maxime Ferrari, the Minister of Planning and Development. Like several other ministers whose work closely affects the daily lives and welfare of the country's citizens, Dr. Ferrari has often met branch representatives for discussions.

After an introduction by the SPPF Secretary General, Mr. Guy Sinon, who opened and closed the seminar, Dr. Ferrari described the Front branches as vital cogs in the machinery of state. As such it was important that they instilled in themselves an economic motivation to be coupled with the political drive the people were increasingly showing.

The Minister and other speakers then went on to explain how their respective ministries and departments put into effect the policies of the SPPF of which the Government is the executive arm.

The delegates were able to follow the progress of a development project from its birth in the party's policies and through its different stages of planning, financing, building and even maintenance after completion.

"It is vital to understand that this Government, under the guidance of the Front, is doing something extraordinary for the country, even if there are still things to criticise in ourselves and in others, both collectively and individually," Dr. Ferrari stressed.

Looking at how the country had managed to avoid the economic pitfalls that had trapped so many other developing nations, he described this as a compliment to the efficiency and wisdom of the Seychellois way of carrying out development for the collective good of the whole nation.

The continuation of this, however, would depend more and more on each Seychellois understanding the economic importance of his role in his country's development. Now, more than ever, was a time for reflection on what we all could do together for the nation at a time when there were more needy nations seeking international co-operation and financing.

"It is time to take stock of the difficulties ahead, of the obstacles that remain in the path of the revolution and of the constraints that may prevent us from moving as fast as we wish."

A sign that success was assured, Dr. Ferrari said, was the fact that although some of the promises made to the people after the June 5, 1977 Revolution had taken longer to carry out than anticipated, they had, sooner or later, been implemented.

Unforseen difficulties rose up now and then putting targets and plans behind schedule, but the will and determination of all concerned had seen things through.

Mr. Robert Grandcourt, the Principal Secretary for Planning and Development, likened the National Development Plan to a ship's vital navigation charts. The Plan explained how the people's policies would be carried out, when and in what sectors.

He explained how the plan was compiled and its projects spread out over five years in balanced social and economic groupings.

Mr. Grandcourt also talked of the financial, maintenance manpower and material constraints involved in turning the country's ideals into reality. Here exchanges of ideas with the SPPF branches were important, as the branches were in day-to-day contact with the grassroots of society in whose name all development was carried out.

Because of this, the Chief Economist, Mr. Emmanuel Faure, had gone out into the districts last year for consultations on drawing up the Plan.

Mr. Faure explained to the seminar the processes of planning. He described the National Development Plan as being very balanced with people knowing clearly what they wanted to do, why, when and at what cost. He also explained the different types of work that went into planning and carrying out a project.

Mr. Guy Morel, the Principal Secretary for Finance, followed with a clear explanation of budgeting and financing.

Budgeting was necessary, he said, because while the country's needs were unlimited, the resources available were very limited. A balance had, therefore, to be struck between revenue and the Government's expenditure, making his Department something of a financial controller.

There were so many things to be done that extra care had to be taken to keep the country's national development on the right financial track.

"Budgeting is the strategy of translating policies and plans into financial reality, costs and expenditure," Mr. Morel said. This involved limiting what some wanted to do to give others a chance to progress, too, thus ensuring a balanced development in all sectors of the economy.

Mr. Morel also explained the technicalities of recurrent revenue and expenditure, and direct and indirect taxation. It was important that the people increased their productivity if the country was to attain a real measure of self-reliance instead of depending on foreign financing and co-operation.

Minister Ferrari joined in the call for greater productivity, praising the will and motivation that had allowed the nation to achieve so much with so little in so short a time.

"If we do not produce, if we do not plan, budget, manage and unify productively and intelligently we will regress rather than progress," Dr. Ferrari cautioned. Knocking on foreign doors for an economic bailing out resulted in economic slavery and a mockery of the word "independence" he added.

Final Report

Victoria NATION in English 10 Nov 81 p 2

[Text] Today NATION presents its final report on the highly successful seminar on "The Role of the SPPF in National Social and Economic Development" held last Saturday at the Maison du Peuple.

Yesterday's report covered the morning session on national development. In the afternoon the 120 delegates from district SPPF branches, party-affiliated organisations, the SPPF Central Executive Committee, the Ministry of Planning and the Department of Youth and Community Development turned their attenion to rural and community development.

Introduced by his minister, Mr. Esme Jumeau, the Principal Secretary for Youth and Community Development, Mr. Ralph Adam, stressed the role of district SPPF officials in educating and mobilising to do voluntary community work and increase productivity.

"We are all making a cake," Mr. Adam said, "and the largest we make it the larger the portion each of us will receive. "He described a community as a group of people living, working and building together as brothers and sisters aiming for a more comfortable and dignified life.

Talking about the misconception that some people had about socialism, Mr. Adam explained that the morning of June 5, 1977 did not automatically usher in a socialist system in which the Government was expected to do everything.

"June 5, 1977 was but the first step on a long road. A true socialist should devote his time and effort to ensuring that in his community and nation things are continually changing for the better to his and his neighbours' advantage."

Acknowledging that the mobilisation of a people among some of whom the psychological vestiges of colonialism still lingered was no easy job even for an avant garde party, Mr. Adam stressed that branch officials and members should never allow themselves to be discouraged in teaching the creativity and dignity of hard work.

Old habits and mentalities died hard and Seychelles was still a young nation but despite all this the greatest encouragement was the progress the nation had made in the face of such odds.

Mr. Adam then encouraged the branch officials to meet their members and other people of their districts more often to listen to their problems and to explain, educate and mobilise. The fact that the officials had so willingly given up a day of rest to turn out in force for the seminar was a sure sign that the will and determination needed for such a task was as strong as ever.

The Chief Co-ordinator of the party, Mrs. Sylvette Frichot, addressed the meeting as the Front's representative on the Rural and Community Development Committee.

This includes members of all Government ministries, departments and divisions and non-governmental organisations directly involved in small community development projects in the rural areas, co-ordinating such development to prevent duplication of work in the same area or district.

Mrs. Frichot noted that all those in direct contact with the masses in one way or another were responsible for the education of the people in development.

Finding funds and materials was indeed difficult, but redirecting human thinking and nature was no easier. Yet this education was vital for the valid participation of a socialist-orientated people in their own government and development.

Mrs. Frichot advised branch officials to be extra careful in properly explaining to the people of their districts the importance and benefits of development projects to their community if they were to succeed in getting the people's support and active help.

At the same time the branches had to be sure that projects planned were really what the people wanted and not something that one or a small group thought the rest wanted.

The last speaker of the day, Mrs. Marie-Pierre Lloyd, is the secretary of the Rural and Community Development Committee and one of its representatives from the Ministry of Planning and Development.

She explained to the seminar the procedure used by the committee in planning, obtaining finance for and implementing the small projects — such as feeder roads and reservoirs — submitted by the branches.

Since most of these were self-help schemes with the districts providing voluntary labour, and since it often took time to raise money, it was essential that the branch committees kept up the people's interest and motivation so as to be ready for action when the funds were eventually found.

After calling for a special effort in setting up branch offices in all districts so as to allow an easier and more efficient exchange of information and ideas, the SPPF Secretary General, Mr. Guy Sinon, explained other steps being taken for branches to help each other.

Next year, he said meetings of branch chairmen would be organsed to allow them to discuss and solve common problems and to benefit from the experiences of the more successful branches. The number of branch co-ordinators would be increased from three to five to allow them to establish more regular contacts with the branches.

Expressing confidence in the pride and intelligence of the Seychellois to see things through, Mr. Sinon cautioned branch officials that the regard in which their districts held them depended on the manner in which they served the people who elected them and their approach to prospectives Front members.

This was the key to the unity needed if the people were to be successfully mobilised to increase production.

Before the seminar closed, Dr. Ferrari returned to the subject of increasing productivity. It was necessary to reach a state where people felt deep frustration at any drop in productivity, for whatever reason, or any slowing of the country progress.

Once this happened, he said, the nation would be on the verge of even greater success.

SPDF OFFICERS EXAMINE THEIR DEVELOPMENT TASK

Victoria NATION in English 9 Nov 81 p 1

[Text] THE contribution of the country's defence forces to the development of the people they serve is one of several important topics to be covered by a series of SPDF political seminars inaugurated last Saturday morning by Colonel Ogilvy Berlouis, the Chief of Defence Forces.

The seminars, to be held at the SPDF headquarters, have been organised by the forces' Directorate of Political Education.

They will allow detailed discussion of a number of international, national and security subjects including SPPF policies, the role of the defence forces in the hard struggle for self-sufficiency and in the construction of a socialist society, national security and international solidarity and peace, and the importance of the SPDF officers' responsibilities towards their nation, the defence forces and the soldiers they command.

Starting the talks, Col. Berlouis encouraged participants to contribute constructively to discussions on the subjects to be covered. The idea was to help one another, including the most senior officers, he said.

Col. Berlouis, who is also the Minister of Defence, called on his fellow officers to be frank and open to change and new ideas in the interest of a more disciplined, efficient and effective force.

Other subjects covered in the opening address included leadership and the exemplary discipline and sense of responsibility that officers and men should show as members of a true disciplinary force.

Inviting Col. Berlouis to open the seminar, Chief of Staff Mr. James Michel said that the meetings would allow the officer corps of the SPDF to reflect seriously and positively on the progressive development of the defence forces and to gain deeper knowledge of their roles.

SILHOUETTE, NATION'S LEAST-DEVELOPED ISLAND HIGHLIGHTED

Victoria NATION in English 11 Nov 81 p 2

[Article by Rene Morel: "It Is Time the Government Interfere"]

[Text] OUR third largest island and yet one of the least-developed, Silhouette, is set to its share of the social infrastructures being put up around the country for the better development of the people.

During the weekend a 40-strong delegation from the Department of Youth and Community Development, sailed to La Passe (the main village) aboard the Pioneer to enquire on the possibilities of introducing a branch of the Young Pioneer movement, to prepare plans for the construction of a community centre, proper crèche and clinic and the laying out of multi-purpose sports court.

As to the Young Pioneer movement, there are signs that the island's population would very much welcome the young militants among them. This was evident from the large crowd of La Passe residents who turned up at the school's compound to applaud a special show on Saturday night presented by a group of Young Pioneers from Mahé. The show presented to the inhabitants a cross-section of the movement's activities and left an impression on the island's youngsters.

ISLAND SPECIALITY

Schoolchildren on the island also joined in the show to present their own special songs and poems and their own brand of cultural music and dances. After four small school boys performed a lively dance of zinge it could be said that this was a speciality of the island.

A meeting held on Saturday for the young people interested in sports had many enthusiastic youngsters present. They were eager to ask questions and seek assistance from the sports officials who went along with the YCD delegation. They learned that they must cooperate together to build themselves a proper multi-purpose court, acquire their equipment and set themselves up as teams for the different sporting activities.

Mrs Antoinette Jolicoeur who is responsible for youth development had in the meantime held discussions with authorities on the island on the laying of the infrastructures. A YCD civil engineer architect was also present to study sites before the preparation of plans for the construction of crèche, clinic and community centre

DWINDLING POPULATION

Privately-owned Silhouette needs these infrastructures very urgently if its dwindling population is to live in a better environment. Only a few years ago, Silhouette had well over 600 people and was playing an important role in the economic development of the country, providing food for Mahé and other products for export. Today its population counts less than 300 while little or no vegetable and root crops are grown and only a few livestock are kept.

Picking coconuts and making copra is the sole economic activity. Cinnamon cropping has stopped, fishing is non-existent and there is little use of the abundant wood that makes up the heavy forests on the island.

The nurse in charge of the two bed hospital there reports malnutrition as the main cases requiring treatment and this she blamed on the absence of fresh vegetables and other vitamin-rich foods. She spoke of reports of the inhabitants preferring to buy lentils to brew la purée rather than as a protein-rich food.

Water supplies are not treated, toilet facilities are unhygienic whereas the marshes with improper drainage provide breeding grounds for mosquitoes.

The clinic itself, made of wood, has fallen in such a bad state that its labour room is no longer fit to allow deliveries. Expectant moters have to go to Mahé for deliveries on reaching their 36th week of pregnancy. If ever there is a severe case for treatment, the patient has to be sent to Mahé in a small open boat or a call made to the mainland via North Island, situated seven kilometres further away. Silhouette has no wireless contact whatever with Mahé and electricity is non-existent.

ALCOHOLISM

In all these miseries, a worsening situation of alcoholism is taking its toll. With nothing they can find to do—although they could easily produce their own food — the men and women alike take to drinking after a half-day's work of picking coconuts.

The island's administration has admitted the degrading situation on the island and the administrator said to a representative of the YCD delegation. "It is time the Government interfere".

The Government, through the Ministry of Education and Information, is devoting much of its energy to make out something good at least for the children. The school's headteacher Mrs Evana Philoé takes care of the 71 schoolchildren — 20 of them attending the crèche. Classes are held up to P6 and studies from P7 to P9 are attended on Mahé where the students either stay with their relatives or receive free accommodation at the Government Boarding House at Mont Fleuri.

The schoolchildren from Grand'Barbe and Anse Mondon in the past had to walk up to three hours a day to attend school at La Passe. This problem has been solved with the opening of a boarding house organised by the Ministry on the school compound. This prevents the schoolchildren from crossing the steep Gratte Fesse mountain everyday. They go home Friday evenings and get back to the boarding house for school on Sunday afternoons.

LITTLE COMMUNICATION

There exists little communication by boat with Mahé

Mrs Philoé pointed out that they receive the "Nation" newspaper every three months and when they receive a letter informing them of the start of special teaching courses, the training sessions have already started. It is even difficult then to leave the island to catch up with the course. There is no telephone communication with the island.

Silhouette lies very near to Mahé, yet it seems so far away on its own with its people leading a life different from that of the rest of the population.

While far-away islands such as Farquhar are making news with their development progress, ministers and senior government officials who visited Silhouette earlier this year have spoken negatively of that island and its people.

Life needs to be pumped back into Silhouette to make it productive once more economically and to save the population from further degradation of mentality. But a positive change for the island faces a problem of mentality as difficult as the inaccessible granite outcrops that make up the mountains on the island.

POWER PLANT CONVERSION TO CUT FUEL IMPORT BILL

Victoria NATION in English 19 Nov 81 p 1

[Text] SEYCHELLES' fuel import bill will be cut by a project to convert the New Port power station to use heavier but cheaper oil.

The Seychelles Electricity Corporation (SEC) has now completed plans for the R. four million scheme, on which work will start next January.

SEC's general manager, Mr. Jim Romanos, said that the size of the New Port power station and the growing electricity demand on Mahé now made it economic to convert to use of the heavy fuel.

At present all generators, including those of the Huteau Lane and Baie Ste. Anne stations are running on expensive diesel (gas oil).

TREATMENT

Conversion work will involve the installation of treatment plant to clean and heat the heavy fuel before injection into the engines.

By May 1982 all generators at the New Port will be using the heavy fuel but will still be able to work on diesel if required.

EMPLOYING

Mr. Romanos said the generating division will be employing additional skilled staff to maintain and supervise the running of the station once the conversion has been completed.

At Baie Ste. Anne, Praslin, the size of the power station does not allow conversion to the use of heavy fuel and the Huteau Lane station, which has been using generators up to 18 years old, is expected to be closed down by the end of 1982.

SUCCESS OF SENEGAMBIAN FEDERATION ENDORSED

Freetown DAILY MAIL in English 18 Nov 81 pp 1, 8

[Editorial]

[Text] The coming together of Senegal and the Gambia in a confederation surprises very few observers of the world that is around those two states.

If anything, it is more surprising that this legal togetherness took so long to shape itself.

The two states and nations have such common cultural, geographical and other similarities that their relationship could hardly be anything other than brotherly.

The Gambia with its tiny land area of 4,016 sq. miles as compared with Senegal's 76,124 sq miles and with just over half a million people compared with Senegal's 5 and half million definitely could do with a confederation with her close neighbour.

The Senegalese help in crushing the attempted coup of Kukoi Sanyang in August certainly compounded this fact.

The bigger market so provided for trade, the gains from financial cooperation and the new security from integrating the defence structures are attractions that lure with forceful effect.

The Senegalese on the other side of the coin will enjoy the free port facilities of Banjul and utilise the more cheaply acquired goods into the expansive Senegalese market that need such lower priced items.

Both countries will gain from having direct access to two important foreign languages--English (Gambia's official language) and French (Senegal's).

As a Commonwealth country the Gambia has preferential Commonwealth trade and other agreements to share with the French community's benefits from Senegal.

Senegal's President Diouf will head the confederation while Gambia's Sir Dauda will be the deputy--fair enough.

It is a union that has the hallmarks of future success around it.

Africa needs such cooperation and unions between its states as foro runners to contiuental unity.

In the interest of Senegalese, Gambians and the continent generally Senegambia must not fail.

PRESIDENT WARNS ILLEGAL IMMIGRANTS

Freetown DAILY MAIL in English 23 Nov 81 pp 1, 8

[Excerpt] President Siaka Stevens has given a final warning to immigrants in this country who do not possess the necessary residential qualifications to either decide to return to their countries or face drastic action by Government.

He described such immigrants as people who intend to worsen our already unfavourable economic situation and urged them to heed his last warning before Government adopts drastic measures.

Speaking at the weekend at Rolako rice station near Makeni in the Northern Province, he also stressed on the need to take a keener interest in the development of our agricultural potentials and called on the chiefdom elders to meet together and ponder over the situation.

He disclosed that government will soon enact laws to prevent the rapid migration from the rural to urban areas to contain the local migrant problem.

These Strange Strangers

President Stevens' warning to illegal immigrants puts the top to a burning issue that simply has to be tackled brazenly in the national interest.

At a time when many countries in the world are deeply re-examining their immigration situation and immigration laws it is of great concern that we have so many foreigners in our midst who entered this country illegally.

The problems arising from such a situation are myriadic but one basic and immediate one is FOOD.

This is manifest most vividly in Sierra Leone's rice situation.

Whatever the government does to make rice available, cut down on the price of the grain and to relieve tensions on that particular issue is doomed from the very start because we plainly have more mouths to feed that the official statistics cater for.

Immigrants who are here unofficially are not registered and consequently cannot properly be entered in the official figures.

All other sections of governmental work are also affected.

Buses become too few, houses become insufficient while landlords and land-ladies exploit the invited bonanza.

Of course, a stranger who lands on these shores illegally already has the trappings for a pursuit of crime.

He is non-existent legally and can strike with devastating effect where it hurts the community.

It is important that we act to arrest this situation at once while we effect better measures to prevent recurrences.

If we had seriously adhered to the maxim that prevention is better than cure we would certainly not have had the unflattering problem we now have on this issue.

SLLC OFFICIAL EXPLAINS DEMONSTRATIONS

Freetown DAILY MAIL in English 18 Nov 81 p 8

[Text] The Secretary General of the Sierra Leone Labour Congress, Mr James Baimba Kabia, has told the Taju Deen Commission of inquiry that the meeting convened by Congress on August 14, this year inviting students and housewives was aimed at holding a peaceful demonstration and submitting another memorandum to the Government.

He was answering a question as to why a similar meeting was not held in the provinces since they considered the issue to be of national importance.

Mr. Kabia contended that it was not necessary to hold such meetings simultaneously.

He added that though the demonstration was banned, yet they held the meeting and submitted an eight point memorandum to government.

Mr. Kabia told the Commission that on the same day, he received a letter from the State House signed by the Secretary to the President acknowledging receipt of their memorandum and inviting members of the executive to meet with the President at 3 pm.

He said after meeting with the President, a committee representing both sides was formed to look into their proposals.

The committee, he said, successfully met twice under the chairmanship of Second Vice-President, Mr C. A. Kamara-Taylor.

Answering questions from Mr. J. B. Jenkins-Johnson, Counsel for Labour Congress, he said that at the meetings, the status of Congress was not challenged nor did anyone ask them for a bargaining certificate.

Mr. Kabia said there was a breakdown in negotiations at the third meeting because they thought government was not treating them seriously since no minutes were recorded for the two previous meetings and the first point agreed on was not fully implemented.

When asked if there were doubts from any of the affiliated members that Congress should not speak for them, he said there were no doubts from any member but during the crisis, the Motor Driver Union dissociated from Congress.

Answering a question from Commissioner Benjamin, he said the motive of Congress to apply for drugs from the African Labour Centre was to assist the nation since there was a scarcity of drugs.

Commissioner Benjamin further asked why Congress did not do the same for rice.

DEVELOPMENT OF TRADE WITH SOVIETS HAILED

Freetown DAILY MAIL in English 16 Nov 81 p 3

[Article by Valentin Kozitsyn]

[Text] The USSR is developing wide-scale, mutually-beneficial economic and scientific-technical cooperation with the newly-free African states. Foreign trade is one of the forms of such cooperation.

In 1980 the Soviet Union had trade contacts with 139 countries, 97 of which are developing, among them the Republic of Sierra Leone.

From the very beginning bilateral trade relations were built on an inter-state basis and are regulated by a trade agreement signed in 1965. It is noteworthy that in it both sides granted the most favoured nation status.

Promotion

The promotion of trade between the two states is characterised by a steady growth of goods turnover.

In comparison with 1975 in 1980 the goods turnover between the USSR and the Republic of Sierra Leone has increased more than 3 times.

In 1980 it increased more than 3 times. Accordingly, exports also increased 3 times and imports more than 6 times.

Agreement

What are the goods exchanged by both countries? The USSR supplies Sierra Leone with lorries and cars, building materials (cement, glass and so on), quick-frozen fish, fabrics, medicines and utensils. It mainly buys cocoa-beans. In 1979 the Soviet Union purchased 4,200 tons of this product from its partner.

Besides, practice shows that there are possibilities to further promote mutually-advantageous trade, expand the range of exported and imported goods increase the volume of mutual supplies.

The businessmen of this young African country are constantly interested in further increasing the deliveries of building materials and motor vehicles and purchasing other goods.

The Republic of Sierra Leone, successfully trading in the world market, can also expand the range of goods sold in the USSR.

Taking into account all this, an agreement was signed in Moscow in July 1979 on cooperation between the USSR Chamber of Commerce and Industry and the Chamber of Commerce of Sierra Leone.

The agreement envisages every effort by the chambers of commerce to further promote trade and economic ties between the two countries.

Centre

In signing the agreement the sides pointed out that they proceeded from the striving of business circles in both countries to develop mutually advantageous contacts, from the acknowledgement of the significance of mutually beneficial cooperation on a non-discriminatory basis.

They agreed to utilize all opportunities for assisting, strengthening and expanding trade and economic as well as scientific-technical ties between the USSR and the Republic of Sierra Leone.

Under this agreement the sides exchange trade and economic information and delegations.

A great deal is being done in the USSR to help businessmen obtain necessary information, hold talks, arrange meetings with the representatives of Soviet trade organisations. The World Trade Centre was set up in Moscow for this purpose.

The sides agreed in 1981 that an Information Centre of the USSR Chamber of Commerce and Industry would function in Freetown from November 20 to December 2.

DRUGS, HOSPITAL ACCESSORIES GIFTS FROM USSR REPORTED

Freetown DAILY MAIL in English 18 Nov 81 p 2

[Text] Drugs and other hospital accessories valued at more than Le22,000 have been presented to the Government of Sierra Leone by the Government of the USSR.

Making the presentation at the Soviet Embassy on behalf of the USSR Red Cross, the Soviet Ambassador, Mr. Alexander Vorostov said that the gesture had been made in response to the call by the Ministry of Health to donor agencies and other organisations to assist in the maintenance of the health services of Sierra Leone.

Ambassador Vorostov said that like all other developing countries, no Government was able to meet the entire health needs of its people without outside assistance. He said also whilst the USSR Red Cross had heeded to the call for assistance, the gesture was also a continuation of the concretisation of the already cordial ties existing between Sierra Leone and the Soviet Union.

Receiving the consignment, the Chief Medical Officer, Dr. Belmont Williams, deputising the Minister of Health, Mr. Francis Minah, expressed profound appreciation and gratitude to the Government of the Soviet Union for what she described as this humanitarian gesture.

Dr. Belmont Williams commended the Soviet Government's continued assistance to Sierra Leone particularly in the field of health and gave a detailed review of the very good work currently being done by Soviet doctors at the Magburaka Government hospital.

The drugs, she said, would serve the basic needs of the people in this country especially those who will be utilising the facilities at Magburaka.

The Chief Medical Officer thanked the USSR Government for the inclusion of a Theatre Nurse, Gynaecoligist and other specialists in the new team of Russian Doctors working in Sierra Leone.

ISRAELI DETENTION MODEL IS SUGGESTED FOR COUNTRY

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 1 Dec 81 p 6

[Editorial]

[Text]

At least 17 more detentions — including those of a banned student leader, a former Nusas president and top officials from three trade unions — took place at the weekend.

We are not in a position to say why. Nobody is, since no reason is ever given.

Perhaps, having given the Blacks more liberal labour laws and watched the growing number of strikes with concern, the authorities have cracked down on union officials.

If so, it will have been foolish to do this since it cannot liberalise the laws and then used the security apparatus to negate the provisions.

Labour organisations say that the detentions appear to signal a new attempt to stifle worker organisations. The Council of Unions of South Africa has appealed to several powerful overseas labour organisations to send telegrams of protest to South African embassies and to the Prime Minister.

Other union comments include "outrageous," "smacking of fascist action" and "harassment".

The National Association of Distributive and Allied Workers' Unions says "the spate of detentions of trade unionists leads to the conclusion that there is a deliberate attempt to undermine reforms and rights for Blacks and other workers."

The Industrial Aid Society, the African Food and Canning Workers' Union and the SA Allied Workers' Union say the detentions will lead people to believe the "so-called labour reforms" the Government is "selling" locally and abroad are a bluff.

The president of the moderate Trade Union Council of South Africa, Dr Anna Scheepers, is also outraged, saying "it's like a reign of terror. No one can be sure the next knock is going to be on his door."

All of which casts doubt on the Government's labour reforms and its sincerity in introducing them.

The private sector, which has to bear the burden of strikes, is aware that the 1980's are going to be a period when Black trade unions will use strikes for political purposes.

Dr Zac de Beer, an Anglo American executive and former Progfed MP, said recently that labour relations in the next decade would be extremely difficult because Black workers would make deliberate use of the industrial relations system to gain social and political aims.

The recent agitation surrounding pensions legislation was evidence of the "deliberate use of industrial relations machinery for purely political purposes."

"Unjust as this is," it was likely to "be the order of our lives in the 80's," and managers would "have to live with it somehow."

Mr Mike Roshok, head of Barlows, the industrial and mining giant, says in his chairman's report that the year has been a fairly turbulent one, marked by an escalation in the number of disputes and work stoppages.

"Group companies have not been immune from these problems . . . but we regard this as predictable rather than a cause for alarm.

"Predictable for two reasons. Firstly, because the factory floor is a natural area for the manifestation of Black aspirations in the absence of acceptable constitutional rights, and secondly, because the labour reforms that have occurred since 1979 have been significant and change generally brings with it a period of instability."

Although some major employers may seemingly be reconciled to the prospect of strikes, they will soon change their minds if such stoppages are widespread, deliberate, intimidatory and possibly violent.

The State has a duty to ensure that strikes do not get out of hand in this manner.

No doubt because of this danger, the authorities feel it necessary to keep an eye on unions to ensure that nobody tries to undermine or overthrow the existing order by a campaign of industrial action.

However, detentions without trial and without recourse to the courts are neither acceptable in terms of the rule of law nor capable of stemming the agitation among Blacks for political rights, which will continue and get worse until there is a new and just dispensation.

We have spoken out against detentions on many occasions and we say again: All detainees, including the latest batch, should be charged or freed.

As for the question of detentions as a system, we quote a comment by the eminent South African advocate, Mr Sydney Kentridge, at a protest meeting last week:

"It is noteworthy that in Israel all detentions for security reasons must be justified to a committee which is presided over by a judge of the Supreme Court and which must include two representatives of the public other than State employees. The detaining authority must lay before that committee all the evidence on which the detention has been based."

The Government would do well to consider this procedure.

STUDENTS' PRESS UNION CONDEMNS OVERSEAS RECRUITMENT

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 1 Dec 81 p 9

[Text] CAPE TOWN. — The South African Students' Press Union (Saspu) has condemned the overseas recruitment of journalists by the South African Associated Newspapers group (SAAN) and supported recent industrial action by the Southern African Society of Journalist.

At its annual congress held at the University of Cape Town at the weekend, Saspu adopted a resolution supporting the recent work-to-rule action by certain SASJ chapels and said overseas recruitment would "influence future prospects of the South African student journalist."

Another resolution condemned the recent detentions of Saspu staff members, Clive van Heerden and Keith Coleman, and called for the unconditional relief of all detainees presently held under security legislation.

Mr John Lazar, a former editor of "Wits Student", was elected the new president of Saspu. He takes the place of Mr Norman Manoim, also a former Wits student editor and past president of the Wits SRC.

Mr Lazar said that despite detentions and other setbacks, Saspu had grown tremendously over the past few years and will continue to grow..

The organisation's main publication "National", had gained a strong following on the various campuses and would continue to inform students about campus and off-campus events.

Referring to the recent detentions and the banning of several editions of "National" this year, he said: "Despite this type of action, student journalists and their newspapers would continue to highlight news that is underplayed or ignored by the commercial press." — Sapa.

TWO STUDENTS ARE HELD ON TERRORISM CHARGES

TWO members of the banned Soweto Students' Representative Council, one also being president of the South African Youth Revolutionary Council, appeared briefly in the Johannesburg Regional Court yesterday on charges under the Terrorism Act which included harbouring insurgents and obtaining passports for illegals.

They were previously detained under Section 6 of the Terrorism Act.

Mr A Hattingh, prosecuting, handed to court a letter from the office of the Attorney-General stating that bail was not to be granted until their trial was concluded.

Remanded

Miss Mary Masohata Loate (23) of Xonile Street, Orlando West, and Mr Khotso Sidney Seatlholo (25) from Maletsane, were not asked to plead to the various charges which included incitement to disrupt law and order in South Africa. They will appear in court again on December 10.

According to the charge sheet the Soweto Students' Representative Council (SSRC) was declared an illegal organisation on October 19 1977.

The two accused were allegedly both members of the organisation and, with others, allegedly helped from the South African Youth Revolutionary Council beyond the borders of South Africa, with the aim of encouraging people to join up for military training outside South Africa.

Further aims were to contact organisations in South Africa and through them propagate the aims of the group. It is further alleged that an attempt was to be made to bring the Black people in South Africa to a state of revolt against the lawful authorities in the country.

Conspiracy

Count 1 refers to the period 1977 to June 17 1981 wherein according to the charge sheet the accused conspired with each other and other members of the Youth Revolutionary Council to attempt to destroy law and order in South Africa by means of violence.

Under Count 1, which deals with the charge of participation in terrorist activity, is also an allegation that the accused obtained South African passports which were then falsified for use by people entering the Republic illegally.

Once in South Africa they were assisted and given help an' introduced to other people.

Church meeting

The charge sheet states that at a public meeting on June 16 this year at the Regina Mundi church in Soweto, South African Revolutionary Council pamphlets were given to those present. The pamphlets urged people to revolt against the lawful authorities in the country.

The charge sheet states that during June this year one of the accused brought two people from Botswana, into contact with Thabo Ndabeni, national organiser of the Azanian People's Organisation, (AZAPO).

During 1981 the first accused allegedly joined the Azanian National Youth Organisation and introduced the national chairman and national president of the organisation to people in Soweto.

It is further claimed that during June this year the secretary of the Media Workers' Association of South Africa, Mr Themi Mazwai, was brought into contact with members of the Youth Revolutionary Council in Soweto.

The second charge related to allegations that the accused incited, encouraged or procured five persons from Soweto for the purposes of insurgent military training outside the borders of the Republic with the aim of such training being put to use inside the Republic to the detriment of law and order in the country.

Mr P A J Kotze was on the Bench, Mr G Dyson appeared for Miss Loate and Mr B Mokgoatleng for Mr Seatholo.

CITIZENS ARE CAUTIONED NOT TO OVERREACT ON BOTSWANA

Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 3 Dec 81 p 12

[Article by Keith Abendroth: "Don't Overact to Red Aid In Botswana"]

[Text] SOUTH AFRICANS were warned yesterday to beware of jumping to antagonistic conclusions about reports of a big influx of Russian military hardware into Botswana.

Mr Richard Cornwell, African geo-political analyst of the Africa Institute, said in Pretoria that overreaction to the reports would, in effect, "be playing into communist hands."

It suited Russia to build up an image of being almighty and everywhere.

"In a sense constant reminders of the Red danger are counterproductive because they contribute to this image — doing a better job of achieving it than even Moscow's propaganda machine," he said.

That Botswana had been receiving quantities of Soviet-made military hardware could not be disputed. Most of it was equipment that was probably well-known to the Indian experts who were training the Botswana Defence Force.

But at the same time it must be remembered that the Russians were unpopular, and that it was highly unlikely — as had been suggested — that Botswana would use the weapons to help arm political refugees in Botswana.

The refugees, in fact, had been making as big a nuisance of themselves in Botswana as they had in South Africa. In fact, the BDF was keeping a close eye on them to make sure that they behaved themselves.

"We must beware of an obsession about the 'total onslaught' developing to the point where it could blind us to other real threats to security in the Southern African region.

"Botswana — while well-known for her anti-apartheid feelings — had a reputation for exercising discretion in her dealings with South Africa.

The Botswana people were moderate and convinced that they could best contribute to the political future of Southern Africa by demonstrating that a multiracial democracy was workable and viable, said Mr Cornwell.

She was well aware of her military and economic vulnerability.

Nearly all her exports and imports were channelled through South Africa; overseas investment in mining, manufacturing and tourism were dominated by South African interests; and the country's infrastructure had been developed by South Africa.

Money earnt in South Africa by Black Botswana migrant labour was vital to Botswana's weak rural economy.

On the military side, the BDF was clearly well-armed and trained — but very small. The force consisted of only some 3 000 men and its main aim appeared to be to build up a feeling of national pride.

BRIEFS

CALL FOR CISKEI STAYAWAY--Umtata.--The Transkei President, Paramount Chief Kaiser Matanzima, yesterday called on Transkeians to stay away from the Ciskei independence celebrations this week. The president said Transkei would not recognise the "pseudo" independence of "a part of Xhosaland", which Transkei claims belongs to the Umtata government. "I should like to confirm and associate myself...with the declaration made by the Prime Minister (Chief George Matanzima) relating to the attitude of the Transkei people towards their relatives in the Xhosa area across the Kei River, commonly known as Ciskei. "Those people are our brothers and it is our intention to liberate them from the bondage into which they have fallen as a result of collaborators in their oppression whose intention is to destroy all that is their natural heritage and make them prey to a recolonisation of their land and destroy the Sandile royal house." Chief Kaiser Mantanzima said his government would never "sit with those people" at international conference tables. He added that a call by the Ciskei president-designate, Chief Lennox Sebe, to apprehend all Transkeian cars found on Ciskei territory, was tantamount to a "declaration of hostilities".--Sapa. SASOL DEAL FOR HOECHST--HOECHST AG'S UHDE GMBH has won a R60-million contract from Sasol Ltd, through its UHDE subsidiary, to build a nitrogenous fertilizer complex at Secunda, the site of Sasol Two and Three, a company statement said yesterday. Theo Stielau, managing director of the local company, said the project would take about three years to complete. He noted UHDE already had contracts worth more than $175-million in the pipeline in South Africa.--Reuter. [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 1 Dec 81 p 26]

MOLASSES FOR EXPORT--South Africa will export about 50 000 ton of molasses this season, Pure Cane Molasses Co managing director, Trevor Hill, said yesterday. He told Reuters by telephone from Durban that South Africa was forced to import around 48 000 ton of molasses last year from Mauritius and Swaziland because of a severe drought in cane growing areas, which cut the domestic sugar crop by over 22 percent. Last season was the first time South Africa had imported molasses. Pure Cane Molasses is one of four South African distributors appointed by the mills, and handles about 85 percent of South African molasses exports, Hill said. Surplus molasses is sold to Pure Cane's parent company, United Molasses Co, which is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Tate and Lyle and exported mainly to Europe and North America, he said. South Africa's total molasses output this season is estimated at 714 000 ton, against 605 482 ton produced last season, he added. Hill said about 40 000 tons of molasses had been exported so far this season. However, with domestic consumption rising sharply and projected at around 1,5-million ton annually by the year 2 000, against 600 000 to 700 000 ton at present, South Africa could become a long-term net importer, he noted. Molasses is used locally for fermentation products, agricultural feeds, yeast products and in the chrome industry for briquetting waste. [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 2 Dec 81 p 20]

RAIN RELIEF FOR MAIZE--South Africa's maize crop prospects have improved after widespread rainfall over the past few days in major production areas, agricultural co-operatives said yesterday. They reported up to 40 millimetres of rain over the weekend in some maize growing areas of the Transvaal and said about 90 percent of the crop had been planted in many parts of the province. Maize Board acting deputy general manager Peter Cownie said last week prospects for the 1981/82 crop were not rosy, but the situation would only become serious if plantirgs had not started by mid-December. The co-operatives said prospects in the maize belt of northern Natal, where farmers at one stage feared they would not be able to plant because of the long dry spell, were very good at the moment.--Reuter. TUTU'S SON REMANDED--Mr Thamsangwa Trevor Tutu (25) appeared briefly in the Booysens Magistrate's Court, Johannesburg, yesterday on charges of crimen injuria and public disturbance. He was not asked to plead and the case was adjourned at the request of the prosecutor to January 23. The charges relate to an incident last month when Mr Tutu, son of Bishop Desmond Tutu, was stopped at a road-block in Kimberley Road near Uncle Charlies, south of Johannesburg. The road-block had been set up as part of a crime prevention campaign. [Text] [Johannesburg THE CITIZEN in English 3 Dec 81 p 9]

FUTURE OF FORMER OFFICIAL REMAINS CLOUDED

Mbabane THE TIMES OF SWAZILAND in English 18 Nov 81 p 1

[Article by James Dlamini]

[Text] THE future career of the former Permanent Secretary for Health, Mr. Mboni Dlamini, in the civil service is shrouded in mystery and official secrecy.

Mr. Dlamini's term as Permanent Secretary officially expired on Monday. He went to his office at Richard's House to pack his belongings yesterday.

The expiry of his term follows a civil service reshuffle about two weeks ago in which, Prime Minister, Prince Mabandla, announced a number of transfers of top civil servants.

Mr. Dlamini was replaced by Mr. Tim Zwane, former Permanent Secretary for Economic Planning.

Mr. Zwane is currently out of the country on official business for the Department of Economic Planning. He is in London.

All top civil servants were officially allocated into new posts following the surprise shake-up, but there was no mention of Mr. Dlamini's new appointment.

The Prime Minister, through a secretary told The Times that he did not know yet what plans would be made for Mr. Dlamini. The Director of Personnel and Management, Mr. Shadrack Nsibanyoni, declined to comment.

A reliable source said Mr. Dlamini himself did not know what was planned for him. He is currently on leave. Mr. Dlamini was Permanent Secretary for Foreign Affairs before he moved to Ministry of Health. He spent some time in the foreign service.

REFUGEES BARRED FROM LAUNCHING MILITARY OPERATIONS

Mbabane THE TIMES OF SWAZILAND in English 16 Nov 81 p 1

[Article by Mashumi Twala and James Dlamini]

[Text] SWAZILAND will not allow refugees to use the country to laungh military operations against neighbouring states.

But the Kingdom is willing to do everything it can to give humanitarian help to refugees, Prime Minister, Prince Mabandla said at the weekend.

In a speech read on his behalf by Deputy Prime Minister, Senator Ben Nsibandze, he said Swaziland would continue to offer assistance to refugees who respect the laws of the country.

"But we are not in a position to sponsor their military operations or to allow them to engage in any activity that is likely to jeopardise our own national interests," he declared.

Nsibandze was speaking at a reception in honour of the visiting United Nations Deputy High Commissioner for Refugees, Mr. William Smyser.

He said the Swazi people would honour their obligations under United Nations Convention on Refugees. But he added:

Gesture

"The Swazi people are a nation of many limitations. Our country is small and our resources are severely limited. Consequently, what we can do to assist our displaced [illegible] man can be no more than a modest gesture."

He added that the Swazi government highly valued the co-operation it has had with the office of the UN High Commissioner for Refugees.

"We are, indeed, encouraged to learn that this organisation will continue to render assistance to refugees in this country."

He congratulated the organisation on its "well deserved award of this year's Nobel Peace Prize which was a fitting recognition of your organisation's outstanding service to mankind."

Prince Mabandla thanked the organisation "for the substantial amount of technical and material support we have received in the past few years and which has made it possible to undertake several important assistance programmes to alleviate the hardships of the refugee community."

At a press conference, Mr. Smyser said Africa's refugee situation was the single most serious problem facing his organisation.

"Viewing the global situation at the International Conference for Assistance to Refugees, it was felt that the refugee situation in Africa was more serious than anywhere else," he said.

"Our philosophy is to step in and help where it is most important so that refugees do not take away the facilities of the host countries, particularly because they have limited resources and are at development stage," he said.

Serious

He said most of the refugees were in the Horn of Africa, although there was a considerable number in Southern Africa.

In terms of numbers, the Lesotho, Botswana and Swaziland may have less refugees than countries in the Horn, but because of their small geographical areas and lack of resources, the problem was serious and given high priority by the UNHCR.

He said it was often difficult to determine who was a refugee. "They are often the same nationality and were only separated by international boundaries which were drawn without due consideration for the inhabitants of the people the borders were being drawn for," he said.

"If a country has problems determining who are refugees, we have experts who can assist if assistance is sought by host countries," he said. "From our standpoint, Swaziland's record in welcoming and helping refugees is extraordinary," he said.

He disclosed that a total of E2,250,000 has been budgeted by the UNHCR for refugee projects in Swaziland.

Mr. Smyser, accompanied by the Permanent Secretary in the Deputy Prime Minister's Office, Mr. A.R. Shabangu, visited the Ndzevane.

SA REFUGEES JAILED FOR POSSESSION OF ARMS

Mbabane THE TIMES OF SWAZILAND in English 19 Nov 81 p 1

[Text] TWO South African refugees have been jailed for being found in possession of arms of war.

James Sipho Mazibuko (26), a member of the African National Congress, was sentenced to two years' imprisonment. He was convicted on three counts.

George Sipho Nene (32) was sentenced to six months' imprisonment.

The two were arrested by Lomahasha border post police, following the discovery of arms in their vehicle. These comprised eight rounds of .38 ammunition, a pistol chamber and three hand grenades. They were also charged with importing the grenades into the country.

Delivering judgment yesterday, Mr. Justice D.D. Will, said there was no evidence that the accused imported the arms and the ammunition. He also dismissed a charge of attempted murder against Mazibuko.

It had been alleged that Mazibuko threatened to blow up himself and the policemen in order to secure the release of Nene who was arrested because of suspected contravention of the immigration laws.

In his judgment, Mr. Justice Will pointed out that Mazibuko did not proceed further than an act of preparation.

According to evidence by four officers, the accused had come to the station to ask for a spleen stocking to fix their vehicle's broken fanbelt.

The officers did not have any and later questioned Mazibuko. He first said he worked in a garage at Siteki, but later said he was an assistant chemist at Simunye. He originally denied being a member of the ANC, but later admitted that he was.

The arms were discovered when the police decided to search the vehicle.

Defence counsel Mr. Victor Dlamini said the two men had been granted political asylum in Swaziland.

"We are all aware that these people are involved in political matters. The possession of the arms was, therefore, for the furtherance of their political aims."

Mr. Absalom Tiwale, Deputy Director of Public Prosecutions, said that, although the accused were refugees, they had clearly abused the hospitality of Swaziland and demonstrated contempt for police order.

PARTY IDEOLOGICAL TUTORS' SEMINAR PASSES TWENTY-ONE RESOLUTIONS

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 18 Nov 81 p 3

[Text] A suggestion has been made that the number of nominated Members of Parliament be reduced or that of elected members increased to create a democratic atmosphere in the House.

This is one of the resolutions by a four-day seminar for tutors of Party Ideological Colleges which ended at Msaginya, Mpanda District in Rukwa Region at the week end.

The seminar participants observed that the number of nominated MPs or those elected by the House was bigger than those seated by popular votes, adding that the ratio between the two categories was undemocratic.

They also pointed out that the use of election symbols confused the electorate affecting election results, and suggested that only photographs of aspiring candidates should be used to identify them.

The seminar which discussed a range of topics covering the Party constitution, election and appointment of Party and government leaders suggested constitutional amendments to reduce the number of presidential appointments.

This, it said, would reduce both the responsibility vested in one person and blames heaped on him when the appointees performed poorly, something the seminar said was deserved by "bureaucratic institutions" suggesting the appointments.

The seminar underlined the need to strengthen Party leadership and pointed out that apart from educating the people on the qualities of a good leader, the qualifications listed in the constitution should be extended to include ability to read and write.

It said in addition to existing procedures, public institutions including Party affiliates should be empowered to criticise leaders, while the people were mobilized to participate in the exercise.

Seminar participants said the Party constitution should elaborate office terms allowable to elected officials, adding that two consecutive terms should be the maximum.

"It is evident that when an elected leader holds office for too long, the difference between the leadership post and an appointment disappears," they observed.

They further pointed out that the Party constitution only mentioned the existence of Party trustees but it did not explain how these would be obtained.

The seminar which passed a total of 21 resolutions said the constitutional procedure under which aspirants for district and regional Party posts were proposed and recommended by the District Executive Committee denied Party branches the right to participate in the process.

MINISTER SAYS TANZANIA TO NEGOTIATE WITH IMF

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 25 Nov 81, p 1

[Text] While Tanzania shall continue to strive, together with other developing and progressive countries to bring about most urgently needed changes in the international monetary system, it very much intends to do business with the IMF of which we are a member.

This was said by the Minister for Finance, Ndugu Amir Jamal, at a luncheon he hosted yesterday for visiting World Bank President A.W. Clausen at the Kilimanjaro Hotel in Dar es Salaam.

Ndugu Jamal said Tanzania proposes to negotiate exhaustively with the IMF with a view to reaching an acceptable arrangement.

He said Tanzania believes such an arrangement is possible provided the Fund shows an objective appreciation of the country's circumstances and principles as well as showing sympathy for the heavy dent in our economy.

He explained that the heavy dent is due to the collapse of the East African Community, the Uganda hostilities that were forced upon us, the unprecedented floods followed by drought conditions, not to mention the steep rise in prices of oil and of essential imports and the collapse of commodity prices.

Ndugu Jamal said: "The redeeming thought is that we have managed to struggle along despite such adversity".

He said Tanzania wishes the Fund to understand that a minimum period of five years is needed for us to bring our national budget and our foreign exchange account into a reasonable equilibrium accompanied with some growth.

He added: "We feel entitled to be assisted in making this effort."

Ndugu Jamal ventured to say that few economies South of the Sahara are likely to be able to do so within such a time-frame.

This is because, he said, so total is the imbalance between export potential related to effective demand and the need for servicing debt and for absolutely essential imports including oil.

He said Tanzania is now in the course of preparations for a period of negotiations with the fund, which the country hopes will not be of a long durztion.

He added: "If despite our best intentions, we fail to make progress we shall say so and why it happened."

The Minister said like most countries of the Sub-Saharan Region of Africa, Tanzania is under going serious difficulties.

He said Tanzania had its own share of inadequate management of resources which, he explained, added to our problems.

He said: "You these are challenges we face. We agree with you. Yes, we face quite a few challenges, and we are determined to meet them all the way".

Earlier, Ndugu Jamal praised the significant role played by the World Bank and many friendly countries in Tanzania's economic development.

He hoped the World Bank would continue to do so in the future, adding that Tanzania had been fortunate in having developed a relationship with the World Bank since independence.

Replying to Ndugu Jamal's speech, Mr Clausen said the bank would continue helping developing countries to develop their economies.

He said Tanzania and the World Bank had a "long and rich" experience of working together and that the bank supported more projects in Tanzania than it did elsewhere in Sub-Sahara Africa.

The World Bank President, who arrived in Tanzania on Sunday for a familiarisation visit, yesterday held talks with Ndugu Jamal and the Minister for Planning and Economic Affairs, Professor Kighoma Malima.

He also met President Nyerere and the Prime Minister, Ndugu Cleopa Msuya, in the afternoon.

Mr. Clausen, who is accompanied by his wife and three bank officials, leaves this morning for Malawi.

MINISTER ANNOUNCES FORMATION OF CREDIT POLICY MONITORING BODY

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 24 Nov 81 p 1

[Article by Seth Kamuhanda]

[Excerpt] A special body to monitor and supervise the implementation of the national credit policy, which enables Regional Trading Companies (RTCs) to buy commodities on credit, has been formed.

This was announced in Tanga yesterday by the Minister for Trade, Ndugu Ali Mchumo, when opening the annual meeting of the Board of Internal Trade (BIT) at Mkonge Hotel.

Ndugu Mchumo said the special body, whose task is to ensure successfull implementation of the credit policy, draws its members from the ministries of Trade and Industries, the National Bank of Commerce and the BIT.

He said the government had decided to form the board due to the importance attached to the credit system aimed at facilitating easier and quick distribution of industrial products in the country. The BIT would follow up the implementation of the system by finding solutions to its problems, he explained.

The Minister stressed the necessity for both industries and RTCs to abide by the new system, warning that the government would take stern measures against those failing to do so.

He added: "On the other hand we expect RTCs also to fulfill their obligations by paying the industries within a reasonable period of time to enable them carry on production smoothly."

Ndugu Mchumo explained that the credit system, whose implementations took effect this month, was the best substitute to the former system whereby RTCs were forced to pay cash to manufacturing industries.

Speaking on the role of the BIT, Ndugu Mchumo said one of its major tasks was to formulate better ways of distributing goods and ensure that they reached the people.

He noted that the present distributions system was slow and urged RTCs to cooperate with other public corporations in transporting commoddities to the villages and vice versa.

Ndugu Mchumo directed the BIT to make sure that such cooperation was cultivated to avoid delayed supplies to the rural areas and warned that the tendency of attributing every operational problem to the country's economic situation would not be entertained. He said one must distinguish between the economic situation facing the country and inefficiency.

FIRST SWAHILI-SWAHIL DICTIONARY BY EAST AFRICAN AUTHORS COMPLETED

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 17 Nov 81 p 1

[Text] THE first Kiswahili/Kiswahili dictionary to be produced by East African authors is expected to be published by the Oxford University Press (OUP) on December 9 this year.

In a telephone interview with the Daily News yesterday, an official of the OUP East African headquarters office in Nairobi said "the attractive and large-sized" 325-page dictionary was the work of East African Kiswahili experts and a Polish expatriate.

Linguistic scholars who collaborated in the vast work are: Professor George Mhina (Tanga), Hamisi Akida (Tanga), Yohana Mgange (Tanga), Sheikh Mohammed Ali (Tanga) Burhan Mkelle (Zanzibar) and Muhsin Alidina (Zanzibar). Others are Jaffar Tejani (Zanzibar), Abdillatif Abdallah (Mombasa), Tigiti Sengo (Dar es Salaam) and Zubeida Tumbo (Dar es Salaam).

Yet other scholars are Joseph Kimbila (Bukoba), Kamute Temu (Moshi), David Masamba (Musoma) and Professor Rajmund Ohly (Poland).

The major part of the editorial work was carried out by a team from the Institute of Kiswahili Research of the University of Dar es Salaam and three Kiswahili authors from OUP office in Nairobi. The OUP team consisted of Sheikh Abdillahi Nassir, Caroline Agola and Ali Attas.

The dictionary, which has a large number of coined-vocabulary words in current use, also encompasses the present state of standard Kiswahili.

The OUP official said that the dictionary, which is quite authoritative, contained well-created definitions and some 50,000 vocabulary items such as entries and word meanings.

Work on the Kiswahili/Kiswahili dictionary started in 1975 and by June, 1978, the manuscripts had been completed. The dictionary was scheduled to be published in July last year but difficulties in importing paper delayed the task until December this year.

The first edition of the dictionary has a print run of 100,000 copies which are to sell at 55/- each, said the OUP official.

MINISTER ANNOUNCES JOINT TANZANIA-MOZAMBIQUE TRADE POLICY

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 17 Nov 81 p 1

[Article by Emma Faraji]

[Text] A FREE trade area is to become operational between Tanzania and Mozambique and the two countries have also agreed on a joint foreign trade policy that will cover common export and import products.

Announcing this in Dar es Salaam last evening, the Minister for Trade, Ndugu Ali Mchumo, said the agreement would take effect early next year after its ratification by the two governments.

Speaking to newsmen at the airport, he said an agreement signed in Maputo yesterday stipulated the formation of a body that would co-ordinate the flow of trade commodities between the two countries.

Ndugu Mchumo, who arrived from Maputo, said the co-ordination of sale of common exports would include cashewnuts, sisal, and tea while that of imports would include cereals, fertilisers and crude oil.

He said the formulation of a joint foreign trade policy would lessen the country's import bills on commodities that Tanzania would now be importing in bulk jointly with Mozambique.

A free trade zone between the two countries would render trade transactions more advantageous, particularly to the consumer who would pay cheaper for his commodity, he explained.

The Minister said: "It will likewise be a saving for the whole economy depending on the number of goods we decide to trade in any given period".

On bilateral trade, he said, the agreement identified items that could be purchased by either country at reduced tariff rates.

The rates that differ according to the annex of the agreement are: 50 per cent rebate on food products, 80-85 per cent on intermediate products (includes glues and adhesives, timber products and aluminium products) and 60 per cent on consumer durables (includes fridges and radiators).

Agricultural products will be subject to a rebate of 70 per cent, non-consumer durables to 55 per cent rebate (includes plastics, umbrellas, tyres and tubes), and items of particular importance to economic development 90 per cent.

The last category will include insecticides, electric cables and wires and capital goods such as rail wagons.

Luxury goods such as cigarettes will obtain a rebate of 30 per cent.

A list of products earmarked for preferential treatment in exportation from Tanzania to Mozambique include tyres and tubes, rubber sheets glues and adhesives and chemicals.

Ndugu Mchumo said these products qualified for immediate trade transactions.

Items from Mozambique qualifying for immediate trade transactions include: wire gauzes, asbestos, water taps and pipes sanitary fittings and rail wagons.

Ndugu Mchumo also discussed with Mozambican Minister for Foreign Trade, Ndugu Salomao Munguambe, on developments in implementation of annual trade protocols covering 1979, 1980 and 1981.

The two ministers agreed that the achievements so far in the implementation of the protocols had been commendable, Ndugu Mchumo said.

SIGNING OF AGREEMENT WITH MOZAMBIQUE

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 19 Nov 81 p 1

[Editorial]

[Text] TIES between Mozambique and Tanzania have been growing stronger by the day ever since the people of Mozambique won their independence from Portugal.

The links, cemented by blood during the Mozambicans' liberation struggle, have grown in stature and are binding the peoples of the two countries even closer.

The latest milestone registered in the field of Mozambique-Tanzania co-operation is the signing, in Maputo, of agreement on free trade and common foreign trade policy on specific export and import products.

The agreement on free trade, signed last Sunday, paves the way for progressive elimination of tariff barriers through the formation next January of an association to be known as the Ruvuma Free-Trade Area.

The one on joint foreign trade policy, also expected to take effect next January, will co-ordinate sale of such common exports as cashewnuts and sisal.

In the import field, Tanzania and Mozambique will co-ordinate the purchasing of such items as crude oil, cereals and fertilisers.

The initialling of the agreement, which will soon be ratified by the two governments, is a result of two years of hard work, preparation and commitment.

The agreement would not have been possible had there not been in existence the Mozambique-Tanzania Joint Commission established soon after Mozambique's independence in 1975.

The achievements of Tanzania and Mozambique co-operation is seen in better perspective when it is remembered that there was no bilateral trade at all until Mozambique became independent.

That there has been such successful and growing co-operation is due to the fact that there has always been good political will between the parties, governments and peoples of the two countries.

Furthermore, Mozambique and Tanzania, being proponents of the belief that in unity lies strength, have been effectively demonstrating the virtues of uniting for mutual benefit and greater strength.

It is thus not surprising that the Ruvuma Free Trade Area will be open to other independent states in the region at a later date.

Therefore, it is incumbent upon those Mozambicans and Tanzanians who will be entrusted with the responsibility of effecting the agreement to be honest, efficient and dedicated to the true interests of the peoples of the two countries.

The Crown Prince, who arrived in the country early yesterday morning for a two-week official visit, made the remark at the inauguration of the TANELEC transformer and switchgear plant at Themi Industrial area.

On the future of TANELEC, he said: "The factory is our co-operative effort. It is up to us to make it a going and growing concern".

The colourful inauguration ceremony was also attended by his wife, Crown Princess Sonja.

Earlier, NDC Chairman and Managing Director Arnold Kilewo announced that a national electrical maintenance and repair centre for servicing and repairing various electrical instruments and equipment, plant and machinery used in Tanzania will be set up in Arusha shortly.

The centre, worth 15 million/- and which will be of the Tanzania Electrical Goods Manufacturing Company (TANELEC), will have a navigational aids and calibration unit in the first stage. Such facilities are virtually non-existent in the country today.

Announcing this at the inauguration of the transformer and switchgear plant of TANELEC in Arusha, Ndugu Kilewo, said the unit would be the first in East and Central Africa.

Scheduled to become operational during the first quarter of 1982, the unit will not only be import substituting, but export-oriented as well.

Two twin-engine aircraft, calibration equipment and spare parts for the project have already been acquired through an import support provided by the Norwegian Agency for International Development (NORAD).

The maintenance and repair centre, Ndugu Kilewo said, would also repair radio/telecommunication equipment belonging to local institutions not having their own workshops for such services.

Further, the centre proposes to establish services which will cover the calibration of airport instruments — including Instruments for Landing System (ILS) and very high frequency Omnidirectional Radio Range (VOR) which give an airplane pilot the necessary assistance he requires to get correct direction.

Ndugu Kilewo told the guests at the ceremony that total fixed investment of the TANELEC transformer and switchgear plant was an estimated 118million/- by the fifth year of operation. The return on investment is estimated at 14 per cent.

Underlining the importance of establishing these services, he said the lack of repair and services of machinery had caused untold loss in the production and service sectors.

The third wing of TANELEC is a training school built at a cost of 11,850,000/- — also provided by NORAD. The school will train personnel to run the national electric maintenance and repair centre.

Appreciating the Norwegian assistance, Ndugu Kilewo remarked that transfer of technology was only possible and meaningful when the people of the recipient country trained in the skills related to the technology being transfered.

And Minister for Industries Basil Mramba informed the Norwegian royal couple that under Tanzania's Third Five-Year Development Plan, the industrial sector envisaged a total investment of 7.2 billion/-, equivalent to 26.6 per cent of the total plan investment.

Even if the figure were to be slightly reduced, he said, external financial participation would be necessary in the implementation of the plan objectives.

He said the Government would continue to solicit partnerships of overseas public and private investors because the country's Foreign Investment Protection Act, which guarantees expatriation of dividends to a foreign investor, was one of the incentives for implementing the policy.

Referring to TANELEC, Ndugu Mramba said it was the first industrial venture of any standing in which a Norwegian company, the National Industry, and two Tanzanian parastasls — Tanzania Electric Supply Company and NDC — have participated as joint owners and collaborators.

CANADIAN FIRM GIVES GOVERNMENT CLEAN WATER PLAN FOR TWO REGIONS

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 12 Nov 81 p 1

[Article by Simeon Ileta]

[Text] CONSTRUCTION of dams, boreholes and reservoirs are part of an ambitious masterplan for providing safe and clean water to 1.4m residents of Dar es Salaam and Coast regions by the year 1991.

The 546m/- masterplan was handed over to the Tanzania Government on Wednesday after five years of study by a Canadian firm CBA Engineering Ltd.

The masterplan, whose implementation is expected to start as soon as funds are available, lays emphasis on village water supplies in consonance with Tanzania's efforts to improve the social and economic conditions of the rural population.

Two bulky books on the masterplan made available in Dar es Salaam yesterday reveal that priority for water supplies would be given to villages with populations greater than 3,000, with second priority given to service centres and third priority to other villages with acute scarcity of water.

On the village water supplies, the masterplan recommends that 62 settlements would be supplied by extensions of the Dar es Salaam city supply, eight by boreholes, 100 settlements by large-diameter wells, 28 settlements would be supplied by individual surface water sources (rivers and lakes), 127 from surface water sources as part of 14 group village schemes and 14 would be supplied by rainwater catchment system.

Under the plan, a dam will be constructed at Kidunda, 90 kilometres upstream on the Dar es Salaam Morogoro Road to regulate the Ruvu River to enable it meet the demand equal to the installed capacity of the Upper and lower Ruvu schemes and for future water demands.

The Kidunda dam, whose construction has been estimated to cost 50m/-, will have a storage capacity of 160 cubic hectometres (160 hm3). The plan recommends that the latest acceptable date for completion of the dam should be 1987 to avert frequent water supply shortage.

Also under the plan, 30 small dams will be constructed for livestock watering. Construction of the dams have been estimated to cost 11m/-.

To enable effective implementation of the plan, it has been recommended that two new divisions — dam construction and well construction — be created within the water department of the two regions.

The masterplan has further recommended that the hydrologic data network should be maintained and expanded. In areas where shallow wells are proposed, seasonal and long-term fluctuations in groundwater levels should be monitored, according to the plan.

Of the estimated sum for the whole projects, 424m/- has been estimated for construction of village water supplies, 50m/- for construction of Kidunda dam, 11m/- for other water resources development projects and 61m/- for recurrent costs from 1981 to 1991.

SWEDEN, CANADA PRESENT WATER SUPPLY PLANS

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 21 Nov 81 p 1

[Text] TANZANIA yesterday received from the Swedish government three rural water supply master plans for Mara, Mwanza and Kagera Regions, all under the country's programme of providing people with clean domestic water by the year 1991.

The master plans, prepared by a Swedish consultancy firm, VIAK AB after a study financed by the Swedish government, were received by the Minister for Water and Energy, Ndugu Al Noor Kassum, from the Swedish Ambassador to Tanzania, Ndugu David Wirmark.

The master plans for the three regions are among others being prepared by the Ministry of Energy with the assistance of foreign financiers and consultants.

Last week Canada presented to the Tanzania Government another such master plan for Dar es Salaam and Coast regions.

The master plan for the two coastal regions were prepared by a Canadian firm, CBA Engineering Limited, at a cost of 18million/-. The plan was presented to Ndugu Kassum by the Canadian High Commissioner to Tanzania, Mr. Karl Johansen.

According to the country's national programme, 1,500,000 people should be provided with clean water each year for the next decade to achieve the nation's target by 1991.

Under the programme, the government aims at having water accessible to the rural population at an average of 400 metres, according to a statement issued by the Ministry of Water and Energy in Dar es Salaam yesterday after the presentation of the plans.

The Party and government launched the ambitious programme in 1971 with the aim of providing water to the rural communities. Year 1981 was set as the target date by which every village would have a reliable source of clean water.

The aim was also to provide the whole rural population with access to a public water point at an average distance of 400 metres by the year 1991.

"As the rural populations will have grown to some 22 million by 1991, more than 1.5 million people need to be provided with water during each of the next 10 years to reach the 1991 goal"

The implementation plans for the lake regions is the first step taken by the ministry and the Swedish International Development Agency (SIDA) to facilitate the concentration of Swedish assistance in the three regions.

The statement said Dodoma Region had been identified for Swedish assistance and a separate feasibility study was earmarked.

The plans cover five years. In it the consultants have estimated the resources required for 1981/82 to 1985/86 for the supply of water to the rural communities.

Receiving the plans, Ndugu Kassum thanked Sweden for its support to Tanzania's efforts to improve life in the rural areas through providing such services like water supply to villagers.

The Swedish Ambassador, meanwhile, hailed Tanzania for being able to provide water to 40 per cent of the population in the last 20 years despite problems such as acute shortage of foreign exchange.

"This is an outstanding achievement", he said.

Sweden had co-operated with Tanzania in the rural water supply sector since 1965, four years after Tanzania's independence.

Ndugu Wirmark said his country had so far distributed a total of 700m/- to the rural water supply sector alone in Tanzania.

TANESCO FINANCE MANAGER PRESENTS COMPANY 1982 BUDGET

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 21 Nov 81 p 3

[Article by Isaac Mruma]

[Text] THE Tanzania Electric Supply Company (TANESCO) anticipates a revenue of 591.2 million/- next year, 10.3 per cent above the earnings expected in by the end of this year.

TANESCO Finance Manager Ndugu J.B. Ndallahwa said in Dar es Salaam yesterday that total operating expenses for next year would total 454.8 million shillings. He was presenting the Company's 1982 budget.

Fuel, which powers thermal generators run by the Company in the regions, but which it plans to phase out eventually in preference to hydropower, is expected to gobble 94.0 million/-, he said.

The TANESCO budget was presented to the Company's Annual Master Workers' Council which started meeting at the Diamond Jubilee Hall in Dar es Salaam yesterday.

A total of 538.57 million/- is expected to be realised by the end of this year after selling 820.83 million units. Each unit costs an average of 65 cents.

The expected revenue by the end of this year is 11 per cent above the 1980 figure of 479.97 million shillings.

The two-day Workers' Council meeting is expected to discuss the budget and consider a number of proposals made by representatives of TANESCO branches in the regions.

Some of the representatives have proposed that service line charges should be increased and also that the computer services should be reviewed.

There is also a proposal to increase the daily allowance paid to a worker on transfer to a new station to cover one month instead of 14 days only. Some have proposed that the company should subsidise the rent paid by workers who were accommodated in houses belonging to individuals.

Opening the meeting, the Minister for Water, Energy and Minerals Ndugu Al Noor Kassum asked TANESCO employees to be inventive and manufacture some of the spares for the company's machinery.

He said this, together with a reduction in operating costs and together with co-operation among the workers would enable the company solve the problems facing distribution of electricity in the country.

Ndugu Kassum said that the government's long-term objective in the power sector was to utilise non-oil sources wherever feasible to produce electricity at low cost.

Such sources are water and eventually coal, he added.

The Minister explained that the completion of a 220 kilovolt line from Kidatu to south western Tanzania and of a similar line to central and north western Tanzania would greatly reduce the dependence on diesel for providing power to the people.

The meeting will be closed today by the Party Chief Executive Secretary Ndugu Daudi Mwakawago.

MUTEX MANAGER DISCUSSES EFFECT OF FUEL SHORTAGE ON OPERATIONS

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 16 Nov 81 p 1

[Article by Alley Kayamba]

[Text] THE Musoma Textile Mill (MUTEX) expects to export 8,000,000 metres of textile worth millions of shillings in foreign exchange to West Germany, France and Swaziland, the MUTEX management said here.

In an interview, the General Manager, Mr. Georges Tonneauc and the co-General Manager, Ndugu P. Salamba, said they were still negotiating the prices with the would be clients.

Representatives of three German companies are expected in Musoma today to discuss the prices. The names of the companies were not disclosed.

The West German companies, according to the managers want 500,000 metres of linen, one million metres of poplin and five million of bedsheet.

The companies have agreed on quality of the clothing material following samples sent to West Germany by MUTEX.

A French firm Schaeffer Engineering company, want a monthly consignment of 55,000 metres of kitenge, khanga and poplin. The annual consignment will be 660,000 metres.

Swaziland had placed an order for 500,000 metres of textiles specially designed by themselves, the managers said.

According to the managers, the European countries developed interest in MUTEX products when the mill participated in the Frankfurt Trade Fair early this year.

"The West Germany companies have said if we maintain the quality of our bed sheets they can buy all our annual produce," Mr. Tonneauc said.

However, the manager expressed fears that MUTEX might not meet foreign market orders if the present shortage of fuel did not end.

MUTEX resumed production last week following the arrival of some fuel in Musoma. The mill was idle for seven weeks.

The mill's 1,200 workers operating on two shifts were working for 11 hours instead of the normal 15 hours daily due to the shortage of fuel.

The MUTEX production would be in full swing when the Tanzania Electric Supply Company (TANESCO) had at least 400,000 litres of fuel, Mr. Tonneauc said.

The TANESCO Mara Regional Manager, Ndugu A. Ally, explained that an average of one road tanker with 900 to 12,000 of diesel arrive in Musoma daily. The Tanzania Petroleum Development Corporation (TPDC) last week gave TANESCO 90,000 litres of diesel which were ferried in by the Lake Victoria tanker, mv. Nyangumi.

Nearly a week after the lake zone Regional Commissioners had met in Mwanza to discuss fair distribution of fuel, both MUTEX and TANESCO managers described the flow of fuel "a bit encouraging."

MUTEX had suffered a loss of 26 million shillings in the past seven weeks due to the shortage of fuel.

JANGUO ANNOUNCES PLAN TO EXTEND PRESENT POWER SUPPLY GRID

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 17 Nov 81 p 1

[Article by Isaac Mruma]

[Text] TANZANIA provides electricity to only four per cent of the country's total population despite her enormous hydro-power potential, the Principal Secretary in the Ministry of Water and Energy, Ndugu Athumani Janguo, said in Dar es Salaam yesterday.

Opening an experts' meeting on rural (electricity) distribution systems, Ndugu Janguo said, however, that a number of efforts would be made to supply more Tanzanians, particularly the rural dwellers, with power.

"Rural electrification is a must if the majority of our people are to benefit from our power programmes", he said.

The Principal Secretary said the rich hydro-electricity potential was untapped because of lack of know-how and finance. The availability of these and proper planning could enable the potential to be harnessed and distributed to the countryside, he added.

"As the country is divided into regions and areas, so far our electrification programmes focused initially on regional town centres and districts or area headquarters", he said.

All regional headquarters now had electricity, he said, adding that three district centres — namely Kondoa, Njombe and Babati — were electrified this year. By the end of next year another four district towns would get electricity, he said.

He announced plans to extend the present power supply grid to form the national grid. It would be an extension of the coastal grid feeding Dar es Salaam, Tanga, Moshi and Arusha, he explained.

Ndugu Janguo said the south-western grid would go through Iringa and Mbeya and the north-eastern one would go through Dodoma, Singida, Tabora, Shinyanga, Mwanza and ultimately to Musoma.

"Consideration is also being given to providing an extention from Dar es Salaam to the south-east through Lindi and Mtwara", he said. The national grid would be fed by the Kidatu/Mtera complex.

He explained that Tanzania could not afford "a proliferation" of thermo power stations in view of the rocketting prices of oil, an item that gobbles down a tidy 60 per cent of the country's expert earnings.

Potential mini hydro-power sites and the electrification of nearby towns and villages would therefore be undertaken, he stressed.

At the seminar yesterday, experts from US-based Westinghouse Company made presentations on appropriate systems of distribution suitable for Tanzania.

The Assistant Regional Director of Westinghouse Power Systems International, Canada Region, Mr. David Langdom, said that although most of African countries used distribution systems developed in Europe, the systems developed in North America were more appropriate to the continent.

The European systems were technically different from the North American systems, he added, saying the distribution of population in Africa differed from that in Europe but was almost the same as in North America where population groups are more scattered.

He said the North-American distribution systems were cheaper to instal and were 20 to 30 per cent cheaper than the European ones.

Such systems had been used successfully in Tunisia and Liberia. Negotiations were underway with the Ivory Coast to introduce the systems, Mr. Langdon said.

The Westinghouse experts leave Dar es Salaam tomorrow for Lusaka. They will also visit Zimbabwe, Kenya and the Ivory Coast.

MINISTER KADUMA GIVES GUIDELINES TO CFB

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 25 Nov 81 p 1

[Text] THE Government has spelt out guidelines for the newly-established Central Freight Bureau (CFB) whose Board of Directors held its first meeting in Dar es Salaam yesterday.

Addressing the board members at the Kilimanjaro Hotel the Minister for Communications and Transport, Ndugu Ibrahim Kaduma, said the bureau must ensure that import and export cargo generated by the country were handled by the local shipping lines.

He said the bureau must negotiate with foreign shipping lines with a view to cutting down freight charges they imposed on the country's cargo.

The bureau, he said, should ascertain that foreign shipping lines allowed to handle the country's cargo paid the bureau a certain commission.

Out of the commission, he said, the country would be able to establish its own merchant fleet.

Explaining the formation of CFB, Ndugu Kaduma said the Government had been paying excessive billions of shillings to foreign shipping lines every year.

For example, he said, Tanzania paid 2 billion/- in foreign exchange to foreign shipping lines in 1979 alone.

The bureau, which is yet to take off, will control all import and export cargo generated by the country.

Ndugu Kaduma, warned that foreign shipping lines, most of them from capitalist countries and are the biggest beneficiaries of the present unequal system, would not be happy with the establishment of the CFB.

"We will be insane to expect them (capitalists' shipping lines) to applaud the formation of the CFB. The formation of the CFB is therefore a declaration of war", he said.

He said the CFB would win this war only if it employed diligent, hard-working, skilled, disciplined and, above all, honest workers.

The one-day board meeting is expected to formulate a programme for launching the operations of the bureau whose act was passed by the Parliament early this year.

Ndugu Kaduma told the board members that they should ensure that a firm base was built before the CFB took off.

The meeting was expected to discuss, among other things, the bureau's organisational structure, scheme of service, salary structure as well as ways of employing and training skilled manpower.

Pledging the Government's commitment to assist the board and the CFB management, he said they should learn from other countries — notably Sri Lanka, China, Singapore, Ivory Coast and Cameroun — which had successfully controlled the shipping business in their respective countries.

The CFB is also empowered to spearhead the establishment of a national merchant fleet.

CDA BOARD SEEKS TO END DELAYS IN CAPITAL'S CONSTRUCTION

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 18 Nov 81 p 1

[Text] THE board of directors of the Capital Development Authority (CDA) has directed the authority to seek new ways immediately of curbing constraints causing delays in the construction of the new capital.

The fuel transportation problem, arising partly from Tanzania Railways Corporation's lack of sufficient tankers, could be offset by the CDA purchasing its own oil tankers, the board noted after meeting in Dar es Salaam on Monday.

Members of the board also called for an increase in CDA's capacity to store construction materials so that construction of houses for civil servants could be through by 40 per cent by 1985/86 as planned ealier.

It was noted that meterials such cement, however, could not be stored for long periods without getting spoilt. Nevertheless, the board members called for importation of all building materials in good time to allow smooth construction of the new capital.

The board meeting, chaired by the Minister of State for Capital Development, Ndugu George Kahama, also approved a new tender system for contractors.

Under the new system, all prospective contractors would be invited to appear in person for negotiations instead of simply forwarding tenders to the CDA in writing.

The new system is expected to facilitate lively and direct negotiation involving both parties. This would also help the CDA to select better contractors.

The board meeting also noted with satisfaction CDA's performance which, among other accomplishments, saw the completion of Chamwino presidential complex phase I and II.

MINISTER DIRECTS TWO RTCS TO OPEN RURAL BRANCHES

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 24 Nov 81 p 3

[Excerpt]

THE Minister for Trade, Ndugu Ali Mchumo has directed Kilimanjaro and Arusha Regional Trading Companies (RTCs) to open branches in the rural areas.

The Minister gave the directive yesterday when opening the Board of Internal Trade (BIT) Annual meeting in Tanga.

He said although the two RTCs were financially well off, they had not opened branches in the rural areas, thus causing people to travel long distances to District headquarters to purchase their daily requirements.

As a result, many people in the two regions were complaining about this time-consuming situation, he said.

Ndugu Mchumo therefore directed that the two RTCs make immediate efforts to establish branches in the divisions to bring their services near to the people.

Elaborating the Minister said it was the government's policy to have RTC branches in every division. At present almost half of the total divisions have an RTC branch.

"It is the obligation of every RTC to open up branches in every division and in order to achieve this, RTCs should immediately start doing so by establishing a few branches every year," the Minister advised.

He reiterated his call made earlier at Moshi that regional authorities should cooperate with and help RTCs to perform their duties successfully.

He said it was through such help and cooperation that the services of the trading companies could be expanded and consolidated.

BODY'S FORMATION 'WELCOME IDEA,' EDITORIAL

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 25 Nov 81 p 1

[Editorial]

[Text] THE leading instruments for the distribution of goods to the people, are the Regional Trading Companies (RTCs) for which every effort must be made to ensure that they fulfil their responsibilities.

It is common knowledge that the work of RTCs has been hampered by a number of factors including shortage of goods, lack of sound transport facilities and limited financial resources.

These inadequacies have often led to the creation of a vacuum in supplying the people and middlemen have quickly intervened but at great cost to consumers as well as the overall national economy.

Therefore, until the national distribution system has been perfected it will be impossible to ensure that supplies get to the people as and when they need them.

Faced with a serious economic situation, it is not too easy to meet all the requirements of a sound distribution system. The most we can do is cut the hand of the racketeer through judicious use of available goods and distribution facilities.

The Ministry of Trade in conjunction with the Ministry of Industries, the National Bank of Commerce and the Board of Internal Trade seek to bail out RTCs through firming up the national credit policy.

A body to monitor and supervise the implementation of the national credit policy has been formed. This is a welcome idea.

For very often RTCs have been greatly constrained due to lack of funds. They have also been required by manufacturers to pay cash for the goods they need. This lack of ready cash, perhaps for reasons beyond their control, explains their failure in distributing goods to the intended consumers.

Availing RTCs credit facilities will help them operate in a business manner. But the whole system will also depend on how quickly they honour their obligations to the manufacturers and the bank.

In order to help RTCs serve the people better, goods must get to the supply points in time. As it is right now, there is too much red tape in the regions where committees spend too much time deciding on how to allocate goods.

We are in no doubt that the body created to monitor and supervise implementation of the national credit policy would go beyond mere provision of credit to RTCs.

There is also need to look into all aspects of marketing the available goods including market surveys to ensure that only goods needed in a particular area are supplied at any one time.

We cannot afford to fail in supplying the people especially when we have limited availability of goods in the country. Where the system has been perfected, there can be no room for the middlemen or racketeer.

IDS EXPERTS BACK GOVERNMENT'S FOOD, CASH CROP STEP UP PLAN

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 23 Nov 81 p 3

[Article by Halima Shariff]

[Text] ECONOMIC development experts of the University of Dar es Salaam have strongly backed the government move to step up food and cash crops production in the country.

The experts drawn from the University's Institute of Development Studies (IDS) came up in full support of the government move at the end of their three-day workshop held in Tanga last week.

The workshop which was organised by the IDS emphasised that there was felt need for state farms and those of peasants to step up production of both cash and food crops.

This positive move, it was observed, would enable the nation to be self reliant on food and also fetch the country substantial foreign exchange.

Attended by villagers from Tanga, Dar es Salaam, Morogoro, Coast, Dodoma, Singida, Kilimanjaro and Arusha regions the workshop discussed: "A Village — The Centre of Social and Economic Development".

The participants emphasised that the villages be given loans to enable farmers produce more food adding that irrigation farming should be practised.

This, participants argued, would improve the country's agricultural production which, they added, has not been yielding good results for quite sometime now.

On the problem of leadership in villages, the workshop proposed that village leaders should be elected and not appointed.

AMBONI COMPANY'S INCENTIVE CAMPAIGN FOR SISAL WORKERS OFF TO GOOD START

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 21 Nov 81 p 3

[Article by Charles Kifunta]

[Text] THE Amboni group of companies, which owns a number of sisal estates in Tanga Region, has spoken of a good start in their recently introduced incentive-giving campaign aimed at getting more and reliable sisal cutters.

The campaign, known as Mkato Bora (Master Cutter Category) launched on November 1, guarantees among other things, high salaries and other fringe benefits for workers willing to work hard everyday.

The group's Managing Director, Ndugu A. Turrian, however, said yesterday that although it was too early to assess the campaign's success or failure, "it has so far shown an improvement".

He said discipline, attendance and workers' morale had improved tremendously compared with the past, adding that even workers who were not in the system had shown interest to join.

Ndugu Turrian said most of their shops in sisal estates had been reorganised by restocking them fully and replacing private businessmen who had rented them.

He said in places where co-operative shops had been run properly they were left to operate on behalf of the company.

He said the shops were now popular among members of the Master Cutter Category who got most of their needs at prices lower than those in most shops run by individuals.

On social activities, Ndugu Turrian said the company had spent 165,000/- to revive social welfare centres by providing music sets and buying sporting equipment like footballs and jerseys.

He said day-care centres for the workers' children had also been revived in many estates.

IRINGA REGION PEASANTS MAKE GOOD HARVESTING EFFORT

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 21 Nov 81 p 1

[Article by Charles Kizigha]

[Excerpt] Peasants in Iringa Region are recording impressive results in food crop harvest and regional authorities are sparing no effort to ensure that the crops are moved to storage facilities before the onset of rains.

The Iringa Regional Party Secretary, Ndugu Athumani Kabongo, said in a telephone interview yesterday that the peasants in the region bad done their share in contributing to the nation's food basket.

So far, he explained, about 29,249 tonnes of food crops have been sold to the National Milling Corporation (NMC) out of this season's crops.

During the same period last year, peasants had sold only 16,700 tonnes of food crops to the NMC, he said.

Regional authorities are hopeful that the peasants, given all facilities, should easily surpass NMC's target of buying 35,150 tonnes of crops before the current season ending this month.

Ndugu Kabongo said since the crop buying season began last June, by Thursday this week peasants had sold about 27,448 tonnes of maize; 222 tonnes of beans; 67,213 tonnes of millet, about 1,447 tonnes of wheat and a negligible 4 tonnes of paddy.

However, the Regional Party Secretary said not less than 8,000 tonnes of food crops were still lying in the villages and that if the NMC lived up to its promises to bring in the necessary bags it would take only two weeks to clear it.

Out of the maize held up in the villages, about 3,000 tonnes were those of maize and the rest constituted various other grains, he said.

The region's requirements for bags is about 300,000, but the NMC managed to supply only 80,000 bags. This, Ndugu Kabongo said, has meant delayed collection of crops from peasants.

Because the long rains are expected to start towards the end of this month or early next month, the Regional Party Secretary fears that it could damage most of the uncleared crops.

He appealed to the NMC and other concerned institutions to speed up delivery of bags to save most needed food crops for the country.

Asked if the peasants had set aside some food for their own consumption, Ndugu Kabongo said most of them had sold their food to the NMC only after ensuring that they had enough stock to last them until the next season.

He elaborated: "the NMC's target was to buy 30,000 tonnes of maize, 614 beans, 283 millet and 2,270 tonnes of wheat and no target was set for paddy."

Ndugu Kabongo said the regional authorities were all the time strict about selling food crops outside the NMC. "We refused a number of people and organizations permission to buy crops direct from the villages. They were all referred to the NMC," he said.

STUDY OF REGIONAL PERSPECTIVES OF NATIONAL FOOD STRATEGY

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 13 Nov 81 p 1

[Article by Anaclet Rwegayura]

[Text] A comprehensive programme on implementation of the proposed National Food Strategy will be ready next April, it was learnt here yesterday.

Reliable sources within the Ministry of Agriculture which is preparing the programme said that a three-day workshop which ended here Wednesday called for further study views on regional perspectives for the strategy.

The workshop has developed a programme summary encompassing the aspects of food production and consumption in the country. This will be utilised in preparing investment proposals towards implementing the National Food Strategy.

Top officials of the Ministry of agriculture declined to reveal the views and recommendations of the workshop. However, it is understood from regional reports presented at the workshop that each region has already devised some immediate action plan to ensure food security.

Observing that a national food policy was long overdue, the Singida Regional report point out vermin, the use of hand hoes and increased use of cereals for local brews among causes of food deficit in the area.

Crop devastation by vermin and voracious birds, particularly quelea quelea, is rated between 40 and 50 per-cent annually in most central regions of the country, according to the reports.

Food crop diversification and exploitation of all irrigable land is planned by Kagera region to meet its food requirement which has already outstripped the regional population.

Irrigation schemes are planned for low lying areas of Ngono River basin, Kyakakera, Buzirayombo, Nyakato and Lake Ikimba plains in order to introduce double-crop production of paddy, maize and beans annually.

Fight against banana weevils and nematodes which have drastically cut down banana production is to be intensified while cultivation of root crops (potatoes and cassava) is expanded in the region.

Meanwhile, Mbeya region has surpassed by 14.5 per cent its 1980/81 food production target of 800,000 tons. It has been reported that the region harvested a total of 916,470 tons of various food crops but only 4.9 per cent of the amount was sold as surplus through legal channels.

With the principal objective to satisfy basic nutritional requirements of its population, Mbeya plans dairy development and intensive beef production while poultry, pig and rabbit rearing will be encouraged around urban centres and in villages.

The regional reports tabled at the workshop generally outline similar constraints in agriculture ranging from poor crop husbandry on farms, inadequate mechanisation, slackened extension services for both crop and animal husbandry to heavy post-harvest losses.

Post-harvest losses of grains are mainly due to unskilled threshing methods and poor storage, the reports indicated.

The Arusha workshop brought together all Regional Agricultural Development Officers, Regional Planning Officers as well as technical experts from the Ministries of Agriculture, Planning and Economic Affairs, Livestock Development and Natural Resources and Tourism. It was also attended by several experts from the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organisation (FAO).

MBEYA AUTHORITIES TAKING STEPS TO SAVE COFFEE, COTTON CROPS

Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 13 Nov 81 p 1

[Text] MBEYA regional authorities are taking steps to save coffee and cotton crops piled up in villages due to lack of transport and storage facilities, Shihata has reported.

The Mbeya Regional Party Secretary, Ndugu Kingunge Ngombale-Mwiru, yesterday called to his office all parties concerned and directed that the Tanzania Railways Corporation (TRC) should speed up haulage of coffee from the villages before rains set in.

Coffee estimated at 5,400 tons worth about 40 million - is held up in several villages in Mbeya and Mbozi district, awaiting transportation to the Coffee Authority of Tanzania (CAT) headquarters in Moshi.

Briefing the Mbeya Regional Party Executive Committee yesterday, the CAT Zonal Manager, Ndugu Samuel Mpayo, charged that transportation of the crop to Moshi was hindered by TRC's failure to honour its contract.

He claimed that TRC had also refused other transporters, hired by CAT to help TRC, permission to offload coffee at the Mikumi railways godown for transshipment by rail to Moshi.

Ndugu Mpayo explained that transporters were reluctant to haul coffee all the way to Moshi apparently because they were not sure of getting a full load on their way back.

Bad roads in the villages, he said, were also another factor discouraging transporters to clear coffee from the villages.

Ndugu Mpayo said transporters demanded anything up to 20/- per bag of coffee brought from the villages to CAT's godowns at Vwawa in Mbozi.

The manager said out of the 8,600 tons of coffee worth 60,472,937/- bought from peasants this season, only 3,170 tons had so far been transported to Moshi.

However, TRC authorities in the region maintain that they have a fleet of heavy load trucks capable of hauling all the coffee in good time.

Meanwhile, cotton weighing 900 tons worth over 4 million/- bought from Chunya and Mbeya districts this season may be destroyed by rains for lack of storage facilities.

The unprocessed cotton is reportedly piled up outside godowns of the Mbeya Industries Limited in Mbeya town.

Ndugu Ngombale-Mwiru, who inspected the Mbeya Industries following public complaints about poor storage facilities, was told by an official that the crop could not be processed fast because of the factory's limited production capacity.

The official said the factory's capacity is 1,000 tons of cotton seed oil per month, but frequent machine breakdowns, non-availability of spare parts and shortage of electricity have been the main constraints.

The Regional Party Secretary directed the Mbeya Industries officials to transfer all the piled up cotton to the unused buildings at the Saba Saba grounds for temporary storage.

DANISH GRANT--Denmark has agreed to grant Tanzania 1,200 million/- between 1981 and 1985 and will also consider prouding emergency food aid worth 28 million/- this year. The Danish grant, which is over and above the loans during that period, will be concentrated in the education, health and rural development fields, including water supply projects, with emphasis on the consolidating of on-going projects. A statement issued in Dar es Salaam at the end of the Tanzania-Danish Development Cooperation consultations says Denmark has given development loans, the most recent one of 120 million/- going the sugar and cement industrial sectors. Denmark has also agreed with some other donors to coordinate the supply and distribution of essential drugs and medicine to Tanzania during the coming years. Cooperation between the two countries started in the mid 1960s and since then Denmark has consistently increased the volume of her assistance to Tanzania which, at the moment, is the largest single recipient of Danish aid. The grant agreement was signed by the leader of the Danish delegation, Ndugu N. J. Lassen from the Danish Ministry of Foreign Affairs and the Principal Secretary to the Treasury, Ndugu F. M. Kazaura, who signed for Tanzania. [Text] [Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 25 Nov 81 p 1]

FRG SURVEY EQUIPMENT DONATION--The Federal Republic of Germany (FRG) has donated survey equipment worth 270,000/- to the Zanzibar Government. The equipment was handed over yesterday to the Zanzibar Minister for Lands, Construction and Housing, Ndugu Edington Kisasi by the Director of Germany Agency for Technical Cooperation (GTZ) Mr. Reiner Holstein. Ndugu Kisasi thanked the FRG government for the donation which he said would be very useful to Zanzibar. CONSTITUTION AMENDMENTS REVIEWED--The week-long meeting of the National Executive Council (NEC) which opened in Dar es Salaam yesterday reviewed draft Party Constitution amendments table by a special committee set up to formulate the Party Programme. The special committee was appointed by NEC in September this year. The Party Chief Executive Secretary, Ndugu Daudi Mwakawago, told press men last night that NEC members studied and discussed the proposals which seek to amend the CCM Constitution. He did not indicate areas of the Constitution which would be affected by proposals. He said NEC formally received JUWATA's newly-appointed

Secretary-General, Ndugu Joseph Rwegasira, who becomes a member of the Council by virtue of his position in the mass organisation. NEC will also discuss the Government's proposals to establish co-operative unions which were abolished in 1976. The Council will also review progress made on the implementation of National Economic Survival Programme (NESP) and the coming Five-Year Development Plan (1981-1986). The plan details development strategies, priorities and goals for both parts of the United Republic. The NEC meeting continues this morning at the Karimjee Hall under the chairmanship of Mwalimu Nyerere. [Text] [Dar es Salaam DAILY NEWS in English 24 Nov 81 p 1]

OIL SEED CAKE EXPORTING--Tanzania loses millions of shillings every year by exporting oil seed cake with a very high oil content, the Minister for Industries, Ndugu Basil Mramba, said here yesterday. Briefing the World Bank President, Mr. Clausen, on industrial development in Morogoro Region, Ndugu Mramba said existing oil mills in the country did not have the technology with which to extract the maximum oil from oil seeds. Facilities for extracting oil through the solvent process were not available in Tanzania and ginneries handling cotton oil seeds at their earliest stage in oil processing were very old, he said. As a result Tanzania's oil cake, a by-product of oil processing, was left with an oil content of about 12 per cent. "We are losing millions of shilling by exporting oil cake which has a lot of oil," he said. The oil cake could be further processed by using the solvent extraction method, he added. BAMBOO IRRIGATION PIPES--The Head of the Bamboo Pipes Water Project, Ndugu Thabit Lipangile has said that plans were underway to introduce irrigation schemes using bamboo and wooden pipes in ujamaa villages. Ndugu Lipangile said the new scheme would help villages to expand agricultural activities and ensure year-round production without depending on rains. He said the plan would help the villages to get more food. Ndugu Lipangile said some 70,000 people would get water from bamboo pipes on completion of the laying of 260 kilometres of bambo pipes in five regions. Ndugu Lipangile said through the Swedish International Development Aid (SIDA), more projects would be established in Ruvuma, Kilimanjaro, Iringa, Mbeya, Morogoro and Dar es Salaam regions. Meanwhile, SIDA experts recently launched a Bamboo Pipe Water Project at Mgama village in Iringa Rural District. SIDA officials from Dar es Salaam yesterday visited the project. Commenting on the project, the Head of the SIDA team, Mr. Lars Linablad, said he had been impressed by the bamboo pipe water project in the country. DPRK AGRICULTURAL EXPERTS' REPORT--Agricultural experts from the Democratic Peoples Republic of Korea (DPRK) who are in the country looking for a suitable place to build a non-aligned agricultural research centre will today hold formal talks with government officials at the Ministry of Agriculture. The Ministry's Director for Agricultural Research Dr. John Liwenga told SHIHATA in Dar es Salaam that the experts would in today's talks present their report after visiting various areas within the Ruvu and Rufiji river basins. The agriculturalists spent the whole of Saturday finalizing their report. They continued with the exercise yesterday after their visit of Ikwiriri in Rufiji last Friday. Dr. Liwenga said that the Koreans will also meet Coast Region Party and Government leaders today and visit the Kibaha

Sugar Cane Research Centre, several kilometres from the city. The seven agriculturalists led by the Vice-Chairman of the DPRK Agricultural Commission Ndugu Ryom Uizae arrived in Dar es Salaam last Monday. The decision to establish an Agricultural Research Centre for the Non-Aligned states in the Eastern, Central and Southern Africa Zone was reached by the movement's Agriculture Ministers meeting held in Pyongyang, August this year. SPARE PARTS SHORTAGE--Almost half of Air Tanzania's fleet has been grounded due to lack of spareparts, Air Tanzania Corporation General Manager, Ndugu Bakari Mwapachu said in Dar es Salaam yesterday. In an interview with the DAILY NEWS, Ndugu Mwapachu said out of the airlines 11 aircraft only five were operating. This has deprived ATC a lot of revenue, he added. He further said that the situation was such that most of the airlines technical staff--pilots, cabin crew, technicians, engineers and the traffic and operations personnel--are underutilised. The airline's two Boeings, he explained, were in sound order, but out of the five Fokker Friendship planes only one was flying. Ndugu Mwapachu said out of the four twin Otters, two were serviceable--one operating in the Lake Victoria zone and another in the Coast zone. However, he said a third Twin Otter was awaiting arrival of a component from Canada to put it back in service. The General Manager, who recently returned from Canada, said Canada had agreed to assist ATC in rehabilitating a fourth Twin Otter. He said he met officials from the Canadian International Development Agency (CIDA), Canadian Credit Co-operation and DeHavilland who agreed in principle to assist ATC. Ndugu Mwapachu also said ATC was looking for a potential buyer for two of its old Fokker Friendship planes which used to belong to the defunct East African Airways Corporation. PARASTATAL LOAN RECOVERY SOUGHT--Government intervention has been called for to recover overdue loans extended by the Tanzania Rural Development Bank (TRDB) to parastatal organisations. In the meantime TRDB would employ all means including legal action, to intensify loan recovery, the Bank's Zonal and Regional Managers Conference resolved in Arusha over the weekend. They insisted that interest on all funds due for payment to the Bank which were either retained or diverted to other uses by crop authorities, should be paid by the same authorities. SA RESPONSIBILITY FOR BEIRA HARBOR SABOTAGE EXAMINED

[Editorial]

[Text]

THE recent acts of sabotage in Mocambique, culminating in the destruction of marker buoys in the approaches to Beira harbour, are obviously part of a campaign to hamper the movement of goods to and from Zimbabwe.

It has been alleged that the dissidents in Mozambique responsible for the sabotage have the support of the South African government. There have certainly been reliable reports of sightings of South African military aircraft within that country.

If the South African government is supporting internal opposition within Mozambique, and the hindrance of Zimbabwe's exports and imports, it is embarking on a cynical and dangerous policy of deliberate destabilisation in Southern Africa.

For Zimbabwe, the routes to ports in Mozambique and South Africa are essential lifelines — without the free movement of goods into and out of this country the economy will founder.

It might be surmised that South Africa would prefer to see Zimbabwe more dependent on its railways, and that the increased use of the Mocambique system is an unwelcome demonstration of growing independence.

Yet, what has South Africa to gain from unstable neighbours? Is the alleged support of extra-territorial measures a government decision, or the manifestation of another secret department running amok?

The Zimbabwe government has never made a secret of its detestation of South Africa's political philosophy, but has said it will not — and realistically cannot — take overt action. Trade, and the movement of goods, must continue.

If the South African government has decided to force the issue of relations with this country into more than the present state of uneasy pragmatism, then it is making a major error of political judgement.

BARCLAYS, FRENCH BANK CREDIT REPORTED

Salisbury THE FINANCIAL GAZETTE in English 20 Nov 81 p 1

[Text] BARCLAYS Bank (Société Anonyme) and Société Générale Bank, the third largest bank in France, have negotiated a general purpose line of credit worth one hundred million French Francs (Z$12,5) to aid Zimbabwe's importers.

The new line of credit came into effect on October 22 and covers the usual plant and equipment purchases as well as technical documentation, services and combined units of production, but not raw materials or consumer goods.

Mr Geoffrey Wood of the local corporate finance division of Barclays Bank, told The Gazette that the line of credit covers 85% of the cost of goods or services sought by local importers. A special Euroloan, negotiated at a higher interest rate, is also possible to cover the remaining 15%.

The credits can be for any amount and up to seven years depending on the size of the loan and how the foreign exchange will be used. But all loans must be for a minimum of one million Francs and two years.

Interest will be 10% for loans up to five years, and 10¼% for periods of more than five years. These rates will apply for the life of the loan, and repayment will be in six-monthly installments. In addition, standard service and negotiation fees ranging from ½% to 1% will also be charged.

An unusual feature of the new line of credit is that all loans must be guaranteed by Barclays Bank in Zimbabwe, said Mr Wood.

Monsieur L M Burnat, Société Générale's permanent representative in Zimbabwe said the French Government required that all credits outside the country be guaranteed for two reasons.

"In France, when we lend money overseas where we have no operational branches and can't check references we ask to get approval from a first class banker", Mr Burnat.

"And whenever the loans are at a lower interest rate than would be normally negotiated for a private transaction we also demand a guarantee."

The loans are also covered by the Compagnie Francaise d'Assurance pour le Commerce Extérieur, which specialises in providing insurance coverage for external French loans.

Mr Burnat, who is a technical advisor for the French bank, added that Société Générale was also deeply involved in providing finance for the Wankie project, and felt it could help boost French exports to Zimbabwe by keeping a permanent representative here.

MINISTER DESCRIBES MEDIA'S NEW ROLE, RESPONSIBILITY

Dar es Salaam SUNDAY NEWS in English 22 Nov 81 p 5

[Interview with Information Minister Shamuyarira: "Mass Media for the People"]

[Text] At independence in April last year, the Zimbabwe Government inherited news media structures biased in favour of the minority Rhodesian regime and against the interests of the black majority and progressive forces. In this interview with the Mozambican News Agency (AIM), Zimbabwean Minister of Information and Tourism, Ndugu Nathan Shamuyarira, comments on changes and improvements being made in the field for the people's good.

Q: — In the transition from Rhodesia to Zimbabwe, what were the main problems, both ideological and economic, that your ministry has had to deal with in the mass media?

A: — In my ministry we had a lot of problems. One of them was that the ideological orientation of the staff and the structures of the ministry were geared to serve the previous colonialist structure, and we had to transform that. We have taken a good part of a year and a half to work on the transformation of the staff and of the structures. And we have gone a long way towards resolving the contradictions.

We had first, and firmly, to remove South African influence from the newspapers and from the radio and TV. And also from the ministry. We had South African influence both in terms of personnel and of financial ownership. Papers were essentially owned by South Africa, and the news agency was entirely owned by South Africa. And we had to purge them of South African influences. This has been the most important factor in the first year.

The second one, which we have not yet succeeded in, is to inject Zimbabwean thinking into the media, in newspapers, TV, radio and in the ministry. That is our next step, because it is one thing to expunge South African influence, but another to project Zimbabwean thinking in our structures and staff. We are working very hard on this, and we hope in the next year or two to achieve success.

We could not project a Zimbabwean way of thinking until we had established complete peace and order throughout the country, and until we had established the economic priorities which we have now established, rural development being the most important, both in the equity and gross document and in the Riddell Commission. Now that we have set out certain priorities, we will be able to project our economic thinking at the superstructural level.

Q: — What underlying principles of journalism are you trying to encourage in this period of reconstruction?

A: — We are essentially trying to promote two basic principles of journalism. One is the freedom of the press. We want our journalists to be as free as possible to write creatively and to write positively about our situation. The second principle is that freedom in our context is also freedom from colonialist and imperialist influences. Our journalists must be committed to the new Zimbabwe, to the new social and economic order so that they can write for liberation, so that they can write for a liberated citizen in Zimbabwe and show him the way to prosper, to advance the new Zimbabwe. These two are related issues. We want our journalists to be free, and we want them to be instruments of liberation.

Q: — Part of the old heritage is that the focus of the media is very much concentrated on Salisbury, and to some extent Bulawayo, but some of the most crucial aspects of the transformation of Zimbabwe are going on, and have to go on, in the countryside. What measures do you think you can take in order to cover that properly in your media?

A: — We have taken some measures already. We have established information offices in all provinces, and we are going to establish rural offices for ZIANA, the news agency, and for the Zimbabwe Broadcasting Corporation (ZBC). But we could not do this before purchasing new equipment. We are now in the process of buying new equipment for ZBC which will enable them to go out into the rural areas to record or document the activities of the rural population for use on the screen.

I agree entirely with you that the media was concentrated in the cities, because this is where the European population lives, and the previous colonialist media was concerned mainly with supplying information to the European population. They were not really interested in the rural areas, except for propaganda. They sent cinema vans and other propaganda material to the rural areas. There was no need, no desire, on the part of the regime to engage in dialogue with the rural population and to improve their general standards of living, but our government is committed to rural development and to really giving the rural population a stake in the system.

But you know, in ZBC, for instance, we had no equipment. Throughout UDI (Unilateral Declaration of Independence) they couldn't buy new equipment, or replace old, and we are only now purchasing the equipment which will enable them to go and document or record material outside. In this equipment we will also include new transmitters and new booster stations so that TV can be sent throughout the country, and radio can be heard throughout the country. That is not yet the position. There are parts of the country that cannot be covered by ZBC or radio, and we have to improve that.

Q: — You said that you are going through a transition to a Zimbabwean way of thinking. Now, what strikes the visitor is that the mass media here, the Salisbury-based mass media especially, which I know better, really does not reflect the armed liberation struggle and the values it created. In your opinion, is this a reflection of a lack of personnel who know the armed struggle, or is it, so to speak, a negative side of the philosophy of national reconciliation?

A: — The two points you've mentioned are valid, and in a way related. Firstly there is the constraint of the policies of reconciliation coming out of the Lancaster House Constitution. We are constrained by the Lancaster House Constitution which imposed a peace on the country, to which we subscribed and to which we added the policy of reconciliation, as a way of harmonising the different racial and political groups that were fighting in the country.

We felt that it was necessary and important to introduce and propagate the policy of reconciliation, and establish an entirely new basis on which the various groups could be coordinated and harmonised and built into one nation. And one of the imperatives of that is that we should not harp on the past and what you describe as the values created by the armed struggle and by liberation.

The second factor is, again, one you've mentioned — that we don't have the personnel in the newspapers. In ZBC we have a number of cadres who took part in the war and who know the general direction and orientations, but we don't have cadres at all in the newspapers and in the news agency. That is a limiting factor, because even if you say that because of reconciliation we cannot harp on the past, you could, in talking about the project an ideological element, project what I have described as new Zimbabwean thinking in the present situation. The fact of not harping on the past does not prevent one from projecting a strong ideological position from the present. That could be done and would be done if we had the cadres. But we have a shortage of cadres with the skilled knowledge as well as the orientation to do this.

We are going to overcome this problem. In the Institute of Mass Communication we are training a number of cadres who are ideologically motivated, who understand the imperatives of the new Zimbabwe much more, and who will be able to project the new Zimbabwean thinking into the newspapers. I agree with you that the projection of the new Zimbabwe is still weak, but it will come as we build up the cadres. If you read the mass media here twelve months ago, it was very different from what it is now. It will come, and we have to go step by step. We have taken major steps forward in the last sixteen months from where we were to where we are now, and in the next sixteen months we are going to take major steps forward as well.

Q: — The editor of the Umtali Post was recently sacked, apparently for her criticism of the presence of military personnel from the People's Democratic Republic of Korea. Anything that comes from a socialist country is "foreign," and anything that comes from the west is "natural." Would you say that that is the kind of thinking dominating certain sectors here in Zimbabwe?

A: — Yes and no.

The editorial which was written by the editor of the Umtali Post — the title was "sinister motives" — we considered very bad. It was the inaccuracies and the inflammatory nature of it that concerned us very much. The arguments that she was putting forward, or the way it was put, was that the Cubans are in Angola, the Chinese in Tanzania, the East Germans in Mozambique, the Russians in Zambia, now the Koreans are in Zimbabwe — therefore there is a red menace, a communist menace coming into the country. We felt that was inaccurate in many respects. If there are a few East Germans in Mozambique, that doesn't mean that Mozambique has been taken over by them, or by Russians.

There are 106 Koreans here, yet there are three times that number of British officers training our people in the army. She (the editor) has no objection to the British, but she has a very strong objection to the presence of Koreans.

She was due to retire anyway in December, but we felt that she couldn't stay there and continue projecting that South African point of view, that South African thinking which says that anyone from a socialist country presents a red menace, a menace to the region. This is totally opposed to our own view. We want Koreans to come here, we have a Soviet embassy, we want Chinese to come here, as long as they are all coming on a friendly basis to help us.

And there is also a racial element in the editorial that also spoke about neo-colonialism, saying: why are these agents coming here? Meaning the Koreans. We couldn't accept this racism, and as a consequence we indicated to the proprietor of the newspaper that that woman should be sacked, and she was sacked. We will not tolerate South African views being injected into our newspapers, as I indicated earlier. The whole purpose of buying the Argus company, and of establishing the Mass Media Trust was to expunge South African thinking and South African views from our people. This woman was just projecting South African views.

Q: — How do you draw the line? Zimbabwe is living through contradictions and there is an extremely wide range of opinion. We only have to read the reports on parliament to see this illustrated. Do you have a more general policy by which you decide what is critical but acceptable?

A: — Yes, we have a general policy. We are not afraid of criticism. We welcome criticism and self-criticism, discussion and dialogue between the editors, the Government, the Party, the parastatal bodies, the public, and so on. But this debate must have certain parameters, and one of the parameters is that the injection of South African thinking and racism into the situation is unacceptable to us. But if it is a debate on houses, welfare, economic system, our directions, ideological or otherwise, the Party — that's all right. There is a big debate now about a one party state, whether there should be a one party state or not. That is acceptable to us, and we want criticism on that.

There are very clear limits to the criticism. Every government does that. Every society has got boundaries beyond which you cannot go, and if you go to the US or Britain there are boundaries beyond which you will not be allowed to go, and the same happens here. There are certain things we just will not tolerate. That is normal, that is how a government and a society function.

I want to contest your other point, that there is a wide range of views here. Not really. We travel in the rural areas a lot. There is generally a very strong and formed and articulated point of view of the masses, of the Africans in the rural areas who form 90 per cent of the people in the country, and there is a very concerted and clear view and clear direction as well.

It is only in the cities, and largely in Salisbury and Bulawayo, where there have been differences of opinion — really between the Europeans and the Africans, the Europeans represented by the Republican Front (RF). Yet not all the Europeans support the RF. Many of them accept the new social and economic order — but they have limitations too, and they will accept the new order only up to a point.

Q: — During the war, the Rhodesian apparatus controlled what is called the mass media — which meant one particular way of putting out information. At the same time the liberation movement, particularly the Zimbabwe African National Union (ZANU), was controlling a whole different mechanism of information, which is not normally called "mass media," but is in fact more "massive" than the other mass media. So the act of reaching independence through armed struggle created information mechanisms. The questions is: where are they now? Do you have some professionals, or intellectuals, or artists, or journalists who are at all interested in recovering this heritage from the armed struggle, and giving it a shape in terms of newspapers, radio, TV — i.e. the most professional mechanisms of mass media?

A: — Yes, we have brought in the ones who were in Maputo, and some were already here. We have a definite desire to recapture the spirit and thrust of the armed struggle and make it an integral part of the new society. You should read a book of poems published recently by two professors of the University of Zimbabwe, Zimonya and Kadanyi — these poems were all from the armed struggle. They interviewed comrades who were in the armed struggle and just recorded poem after poem, and that has now been published.

At the university there are some young professors and certainly students who are active in promoting the culture and political objectives of the armed struggle. In culture there has been a most dramatic factor — the Chimurenga songs have now become the culture of the new Zimbabwe. If you go to the rural areas, you find people singing Chimurenga songs all the time.

But the most substantive aspect, the political aspect, is that the comrades who were with us in the war, who were running the Voice of Zimbabwe from Radio Mozambique, were very few. We had about ten people on Voice of Zimbabwe. They did a very good job, and we brought them here and put them at ZBC. But there are 300 people there. So we put the ten in key posts, and they are in a position where they can direct the policy of ZBC — and they are directing the policy to a large extent.

The objectives of the struggle will not be lost, cannot be lost, because there are enough cadres in the Government, and also in the Party, who maintain the general objectives. So the objectives of independence and freedom cannot be lost.

But I must say that in the mass media these objectives have to be fitted into new structures and new cadres. This is what we are establishing now. The transition has been very difficult. We think it will take three years of building new structures to really project a new Zimbabwe, and a new Zimbabwe is no more than the realisation of the objectives of the struggle for independence.

Q: — With which countries do you have the closest cooperation in general, and also specifically in the training of journalists?

A: — We are training journalists ourselves here (Salisbury) now in the Institute of Mass Communications. I think very few have gone to other countries. I think we have sent about ten to Romania and about five to Yugoslavia. But we are training 60 here and next year we are going to be training 100. We train our own staff. That is why we have established an institute. We are not really in a close association with anybody. We think we can do our own training.

Q: — There is a big community of foreign correspondents in Salisbury. Do you think Zimbabwe is getting fair coverage in the foreign media?

A: — We are getting fair coverage now, but we had a very bad press immediately after independence. The foreign media gave Zimbabwe a very bad press overseas because they proceeded on two assumptions that were both inaccurate. One was that there would be a civil war in this country, and the second was that there would be a mass exodus of Europeans. And they fitted everything into these two pre-conceived ideas. Whenever there was an incident here, like robberies or so on, or incidents like the eruption of violence in Bulawayo in November last year and again in February this year, the foreign press would merely say "now the civil war has come," or "now the mass exodus of Europeans has begun."

We told them from the beginning that the Party was in firm control, the government was in firm control. There will be no civil war, and no mass exodus of Europeans. Those Europeans who don't accept the new social and economic order will of course leave, and they will be welcome to leave. But we believe that the majority of Europeans will stay and accommodate to the new situation once they see there is going to be a peaceful and ordered society. The only thing that we are saying to them is that there will be no privileges based on skin colour or racism as in the past. The man will be taken for his work, whether he is black or white, and given a job according to his skills, and according to what he contributes. And once this message gets through to the Europeans, we are certain that the majority of them will stay. That's what we told the correspondents.

Now, because we have succeeded in establishing peace throughout the country, and we have formed one national army, it is quite clear there will be no more war. There has been no mass exodus of Europeans and the press now knows that they were wrong, and they are giving a better coverage. But one of the disadvantages is that most of the foreign correspondents don't live here, but in Johannesburg. They come here once a month for a week or so, and they go back to South Africa. About half the correspondents here are also covering South Africa. They come here with the image they get from the South African press — which is not friendly to us, as you know. They come with that image and they project it in their news stories.

In the past, the regime had a very closed censorship and they expelled many journalists from here. We have not expelled anyone, even those who have written the most negative stories about us. But we are going to tighten up on the foreign correspondents because many of them just continue to write inaccurate stories and negative stories to create negative opinions about us in the minds of their readers overseas.

Q: — Does you ministry have any concrete programme to involve the newspapers, TV and radio in the wider struggle for literacy? "We are going to have a channel on TV and radio which will be entirely devoted to education."

A: — Yes, we intend to use the newspapers in support of the Ministry of Education in promoting literacy throughout the country. We are going to have a fourth channel on TV and in radio which will be entirely devoted to education. It is coming into operation by the middle of next year and we are now busy preparing programmes devoted entirely to education throughout the day — adult education, school education and skills that can be taught on radio and TV.

We are already thinking of doing some vernacular papers. We have the People's Weekly, which is a vernacular paper, now. But we want to do some vernacular papers to disseminate in Shona and Si-Ndebele in the provinces and in rural areas.

We also want to involve the papers in the wider struggle for the liberation of Namibia and South Africa. We are already using a lot of material which we get from South Africa about the ongoing struggle there, and we are already using material from Lusaka, from the liberation movement. But we intend to use more material and to use our papers and our media to put it at the disposal of the people's struggles for liberation in Namibia and South Africa.

BRIEFS

POLICE BARRACKS--Expansion projects worth $750 000 aimed at increasing accommodation facilities at the Zimbabwe Republic Police's Morris and Tomlinson Depots, are currently being supervised by Anderson and Anderson Architects. Mr Maurice Munro, Salisbury office manager for Anderson and Anderson said that the work at Morris Depot was worth about $500 000 and involved the supervision of the construction of a four storey, 60 bed hostel for recruits with each room accommodating 15 men. He said the work was being carried out by the Portuense Construction company for the Ministry of Works and would consist of a re-inforced concrete frame and floor, and brickwork. The other building is a dormitory to accommodate 120 men, it is designed in two wings with a ground and two upper floors. The dormitory will have self contained ablution blocks and will be constructed from load bearing brick work. Each dormitory will house 20 men and will have built-in storage facilities to accommodate riding gear used by the recruits. The work at Tomlinson Depot is estimated to be worth about $250 000 and involves the construction of two standard barrack blocks by the GVR Construction Company. COMMENTARY CALLS ON CITIZENS TO BE VIGILANT

AB041821 Luanda ANGOP in Portuguese 1055 GMT 4 Dec 81

[Commentary: "Necessity of Vigilance"]

[Text] Luanda, 3 Dec (ANGOP)--For all those who, having fallen into their routine and indifference, still believed that the war waged by international imperialism against the People's Republic of Angola was merely something being referred to in a remote southern province....

For all those who feel they can never jeopardize their privileges and clearly opt for or against the revolutionary process, the sabotage carried out by the mercenaries in racist South Africa's pay against the petrangol oil installations was a lesson which should give them something to think about.

No one in the People's Republic of Angola can, for even one moment, remove himself from the war imposed upon us by the enemies of the people and of the revolution. Deliberately taking the risks that his high office involves, Comrade President Jose Eduardo Dos Santos was one of the first to reach the disaster area, directing and guiding the unselfish struggle of so many [words indistinct] immediately began to fight the fire.

The unknown effort of these true heroes prevented the fire from spreading and lessened the impact of the sabotage, further permitting the discovery of evidence that shows the direct participation of white mercenaries in Pretoria's pay in the attack against the people and economy of the People's Republic of Angola.

Others would have looked on from the top of the Miramar Hills--throughout the night and day--at the spectacle of flames and think, black smoke. They are the same ones who, as in Cunene, would also be spectators to the installation of racist troops and their stooges. In short, they are those who continue to believe that the revolution and the defense of the motherland is the duty of others only. By their physical presence, the enemies came to remind a wide sector of the indifferent population that the total war being waged by imperialism against Angola concerns each and every one of us. Never before has the statement by our departed leader, Comrade President Agostinho Neto, that each and every citizen is and should necessarily feel like a soldier, held such perspicacity as today.

When reference is made to the threat against the Angolan motherland, it is not a mere repetition of patriotic rhetoric which imperialism claimed to impose on us, but the need to defend the revolutionary achievements of our people and to apply the country's socialist option. In fact, what is involved is an actual threat to the life of each and everyone of us. Who but ourselves is responsible for our defense?

Ensuring this defense is less difficult than we think and it does not call for military training (our military and paramilitary are there for that). Today, to defend the Angolan motherland means for the ordinary citizen, intensifying production and productivity, reinforcing discipline and increasing vigilance of our (?duty) stations, fighting terrorism as well as confidence in the party and government to overcome the cirsis that imperialism has caused and tries to exploit in its favor through direct and indirect agents.

To defend the motherland also means to keep calm and to avoid panicking at the least signal of alarm and not to give ear to absurd rumors which are merely denigration campaigns aimed at lowering the morale of the ordinary citizen. For instance, what was the purpose of the hurried and uncontrolled rush to the petrol pumps? What security could a full tank in a car provide?

The wave of selected attacks that have recently terrorized Luanda, the most primary acts of banditry that the puppets continue to carry out everywhere, the sabotage at various levels of the country's economic life, the repeated acts of aggression by the racist South Africans against Angolan territory--these are only portions of a vast war aimed at diverting Angola from its socialist option and from the internationalist support of the people who are still fighting.

The Angolan people have already shown their ability to overcome such difficulties. The vigilance of the masses will frustrate all attempts to check the struggle for the consolidation of our true independence and the promotion of socialism.

FRENCH DELEGATION'S VISIT--A delegation of French parliamentarians composed of two deputies and a functionary in the national assembly is expected to arrive in Luanda this evening for talks with Angolan authorities on the Namibian question. The French delegation will be in Angola for 4 days and will also hold talks with SWAPO officials, after which they are expected to visit the Namibian refugee camp. According to the French News Agency the mission also has the objective of evaluating SWAPO's response to the recent proposals presented by the so-called contact group involving itself in the SWAPO-South Africa conflict on the territory. The proposals from the West, among other things, call for the election of a so-called constituent assembly and the guaranteeing of the interests of the Boer minority in Namibia. After visiting Angola, the French parliamentarians will also visit Namibia, a territory illegally occupied by the South African racists. However, SWAPO and the Frontline States have presented their counterproposals to those made in the United States. They recognize the right of the Namibian people to draw up their own constitution and elect their own government. [Text] [AB021234 Luanda Domestic Service in English 1130 GMT 2 Dec 81]

INTERVIEW WITH USSR AMBASSADOR AGAPOV

AB031645 Cotonou Domestic Service in French 1930 GMT 2 Dec 81

[Text] The first deputy chairman of the Permanent Committee of the Revolutionary National Assembly, Comrade Rene Durand Guezo, this morning received in audience the Soviet ambassador to Benin, His Excellency Vitaliy Agapov. After the audience with the first deputy chairman of the Permanent Committee of the Revolutionary National Assembly, the Soviet diplomat made the following statement to our reporter Sani Lassi Salakor:

[Begin recording] [Question] Mr Ambassador, you had private discussions with the first deputy chairman of the Permanent Committee of our Revolutionary National Assembly this morning. Would you tell us the purpose of your visit?

[Answer] During my visit to the first deputy chairman of the Revolutionary National Assembly of the People's Revolutionary Republic of Benin, Comrade Rene Guezo, we exchanged views on a series of issues concerning foreign policy and the bilateral relations between our two countries. We observed that out relations are developing in an atmosphere of friendship and that there is the possibility of further development in various sectors. Thus, this discovery has once again confirmed the fact that we have every possibility of strengthening our relations in the political, economic, cultural and other fields in conformity with the objectives of our revolution and of our two peoples.

We also discussed the factors which unite our two countries' parliaments--the Supreme Soviet and the Revolutionary National Assembly of the People's Republic of Benin. In fact, there is every possibility that relations between our two parliaments will develop and grow stronger because the People's Republic of Benin and the Soviet Union have similar objectives as far as the struggle for peace, disarmament, detente are concerned, and we have every opportunity to advance together toward this just and noble struggle which concerns the aspirations of all humanity.

[Question] Mr Ambassador, are you satisfied?

[Answer] Yes, I am very satisfied with my conversation with Comrade Rene Guezo. I have noticed that each time I hold discussions with him I note the mutual understanding between the leadership of the People's Republic of Benin and the Soviet Union on major current issues. We also always note that in all areas our relations are getting closer and are developing significantly.

I also took the opportunity to again congratulate the comrade first deputy chairman on the occasion of the 30 November national day which the friendly people of Benin have just celebrated. Incidentally, the month of November is the month in which our two countries celebrate their national days. We also celebrate the anniversary of our revolution in the month of November. We celebrated the 67th anniversary of our Great Socialist October Revolution on 7 November. I am, therefore, very happy with my visit to the comrade first deputy chairman. I think this contact enabled us to raise several problems of common interest and to clarify them within the framework of strengthening our friendly, bilateral relations.

[Question] You have just said that this contact with our first deputy chairman has enabled you to make some clarifications on certain problems. Could you tell me about these problems?

[Answer] We talked about cooperation--political cooperation, problems of cooperation between our state organizations and economic cooperation. The Soviet Union is helping the People's Republic of Benin to create state farms on an area of 1,100 hectares. The Soviet Union has just granted a supplementary loan to this end. This loan, which is equivalent to 3 million rubles, of which 2 million [words indistinct].

Our experts are now part of a specialized delegation which is exchanging ideas on procedures with Beninese experts and with representatives of various organizations to negotiate all sorts of contracts to ensure that our cooperation in the field of agriculture will be further developed. We also discussed the prospects of cooperation in the economic field. I think that from the contacts between our specialized organizations will emerge concrete measures to strengthen this cooperation. [end recording]

LIBYAN ENVOY EXPLAINS U.S. 'HATRED' FOR LIBYA

AB041120 Cotonou Domestic Service in French 1930 GMT 2 Dec 81

[Summary from poor reception] "The press and information attache of the People's Bureau of the Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriyah, Brother (Gariani) Mahmud, this morning gave a press conference in Cotonou. In his preliminary statement, Brother Mahmud paid a glowing tribute to all African heroes, particularly Behanzin [former king of Abome in Benin], whose ideals of anticolonialist and anti-imperialist struggle constitute the source of the friendship and solidarity between Benin and Libya.

"The speaker continued by defining the subject of his press conference. The purpose of the conference, he said, is to objectively inform the brotherly and friendly countries about the U.S. hatred for Libya." According to Brother Mahmud, the United States sees Colonel al-Qadhdhafi's hands behind any action whatsoever. He said Libya is thus subjected to accusations which are often denied by the Americans themselves because they are based on mere suspicion. "The accusations include the alleged Libyan attempt to assassinate the U.S. charge d'affaires in Paris."

[Begin Mahmud recording] "For the United States, all the Arab and African peoples are no better than sheep which are ignorant and without a will." All the various U.S. administrations have scorned the deep aspirations of the Arab and African masses and have always seen Libya's specter behind their opposition to injustice, alienation, exploitation and enslavement. "It is because of this machiavellian conviction that the yankees consider all the Arab and African patriots who oppose their hegemonic designs as terrorists armed and financed by Libya. In fact, they are following the policy of the ostrich: they deliberately refuse to face facts in defiance of the most elementary commonsense by describing the PLO, the ANC of South Africa, the SWAPO of Namibia, the POLISARIO Front of Western Sahara, and so on as terrorist groups."

"One of the important facts which provoke the rage of the Reagan administration is the living example represented by the direct exercise of power by the Libyan masses, who are ruling themselves for themselves." [end recording]

U.S.-CUBAN TENSION--Cotonou, 4 Dec (AFP)--The charge d'affaires of the Cuban Embassy in Benin, Reinaldo Derivet Zarzabal, told the press that on Thursday he informed Col Mathieu Kerekou of the tension between Cuba and the United States [words indistinct] during an audience granted him by the Beninese head of state. This tension, he explained, has increased since a few months ago following the U.S. plans of direct military aggression and open statements concerning a blockade of Cuba. Mr Zarzaba said the United States was training Cuban and Nicaraguan counterrevolutionaries to invade Cuba and Nicaragua. COUNCIL APPROVES 5-YEAR PLAN, POINTS OUT PROBLEMS

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3354, 9 Nov 81 p 2677

[Text]

The first ordinary session of the Cameroon Economic and Social Council for the year 1981/82 has just ended in Yaounde after examining and approving the fifth five-year plan for the country.

Apart from approving the plan the council also examined a draft Bill to lay down forestry and fisheries regulations and a Presidential decree to implement the law.

In its plenary session, members unanimously and officially approved all the projects earmarked in the plan for the economic, social and cultural development of Cameroon in the next five years plan.

Whilst approving the plan, the council used the occasion to draw government's attention to a few points which it said ought to be given special attention throughout the execution phase of the fifth five-year plan. These included adverse effects of rural exodus or urban inpulsion, the necessary dynamisation of the village communities, the need to safeguard the nation's food sufficiency, the decisive impact of infrastructures and communications equipments on the overall economic, social and cultural development, the necessity of refresher courses, the irreplaceable role of the woman in the education of the youth, the follow-up of the anti-corruption campaigns and the bad utilisation of consumer credits.

NEW PRESS LAW WILL REPORTEDLY CURB NEWSPAPERS

London WEST AFRICA in English No 3349, 5 Oct 81 pp 2299, 2301

[Text] A NEW PRESS LAW in Cameroon is causing concern for freedom of the press in that country. This follows cause for concern about press freedom in Ghana, Sierra Leone and Nigeria.

In Ghana a group of six journalists have been fighting a battle with the Limann Administration over alleged government interference in their working conditions. Some cases have been settled in and out of court, with the journalists claiming a victory for press freedom in Ghana.

In Sierra Leone, a controversial Newspaper Amendment Bill first published in November, 1980, and much debated since, has now been passed into law, with some amendments in favour of newspaper proprietors and journalists in that country. And in Nigeria, hitherto the haven of press freedom, some journalists have recently been harassed, arrested and charged in court. Charges have been dropped in two cases. In most Francophone West African countries freedom of the press does not exist, for most newspapers are government-owned and run and censorship is the order of the day.

In Cameroon censorship has been going on from time immemorial. The controversial modified press law was published in a Presidential decree number 81/244 of June 22, 1981, stipulating the conditions of authorisation or prohibition of a newspaper, periodical or magazine. The press law was passed into law during the Budget session of the Cameroon National Assembly in June. It has not been discussed publicly since but waits for the President's assent to be in full force.

In the last three months the proprietors and editors from the private sector have been feverishly compiling the required "dossiers" or particulars that will be required this month if they are to continue publishing. The responsibility for their survival rests with the Prefects, the Governors and their Chiefs of Cabinet, the Minister of Information and Culture and the Minister of Territorial Administration.

The present modification of the Cameroon Press law is the third in the series of previous amendments since independence and reunification and is seen in the country as a means to make it difficult to publish private newspapers, periodicals and magazines and to cut down on the existing ones.

English text of decree

For the interest of our readers and the public I will publish unedited the English version of the new Cameroon press law recently distributed to publishers who have to comply with it within three months after the signing of the Presidential decree:

Decree number 81/244 of June 22, 1981, stating the conditions of authorisation or prohibition of a newspaper, periodical or magazine. The President of the Republic, mindful of the Constitution of June 2, 1972; mindful of law number 80/81 of July 14, 1980, modifying and completing certain provisions of law number 66/18 of December, 1966, on the press; decrees:

ARTICLE 1: (1) Any physically normal person wishing to create a newspaper, periodical or magazine shall compile a dossier requesting authorisation containing the following documents: (a) a stamped application showing: the name, object and periodicity of the publication; the name of the proprietor or co-proprietors, managers, administrative associates and agents responsible; the name and residence of the director and co-director responsible for the publication; the press in charge of the publishing; the organigramme of the paper's service; a forecast of operating accounts showing the means of financing as well as the nature of origin of the resources; an attestation certifying that the applicant is not owing taxes; a bank attestation certifying that a minimum security of 500,000 francs has been lodged for the financing of the paper; a certified true copy of birth certificate or any other document in lieu; a copy of police record number 3 of non-conviction, not more than three months old.

(2) Any change or modification in the information listed in paragraph (a) above should be made known to the Minister of Territorial Administration within two months of the change of modification.

ARTICLE 2: State-owned or party-owned institutions wishing to obtain an authorisation to publish should comply with the provisions or article 1 paragraph (1) (a) or the present decree except for the affixing of stamps.

ARTICLE 3: (1) The complete dossier is deposited in return for a receipt at the office of the Senior Divisional Officer of the place of publication; the SDO has two months in which to transmit the dossier together with his comments to the Minister of Territorial Administration who will either grant or refuse authorisation following advice from the Minister of Information and Culture.

(2) Authorisation is given through an order; it is refused by a letter stating the reasons, and the applicant notified by any written means.

(3) A silence of over 90 days on the part of the Minister of Territorial Administration from the date of receipt of the dossier is equivalent to a refusal to grant authorisation.

ARTICLE 4: Without prejudice to the criminal sanctions stipulated by the law, the Minister of Territorial Administration may, ex-officio or upon proposal from the local administrative authority, temporarily or permanently stop the publication of a newspaper, periodical or magazine that has previously been authorised to exist, on grounds of serious disturbance of public peace or morals. He may, moreover, delegate his powers to Governors and SDOs particularly in the creation of local organs of information.

ARTICLE 5: Proprietors, managers, agents or directors of existing newspapers, periodicals or magazines shall continue their activities and have a period of three months from the date of signing of this decree to produce all the documents required by the provisions of article one, paragraph (1) of the present decree.

ARTICLE 6: The present decree shall be registered and published in the official gazette in French and English.

There is also a clause or an article in the present modified Cameroon press law which stresses that newspapers which have been censored and confiscated over three times are subject to be entirely closed down by the Minister of Territorial Administration.

In Cameroon there is no Press Council, Press Commission or even a union or association of journalists to debate the new press law as was the case in Ghana, Sierra Leone and Nigeria. In the case of the Sierra Leone Newspaper Amendment Bill after a Parliamentary debate a new clause was inserted which read: "Where the minister refuses, suspends or cancels a certificate of registration under the preceding sub-section, an aggrieved proprietor of a newspaper shall have the right of appeal to the high courts against the minister's decision."

Newspapers affected

The following newspapers are likely to be affected by the present modified Cameroon press law; Cameroon Tribune, government owned and published daily in French, with an English version published once a week every Wednesday in Yaounde; the Gazette and Douala Express, which are weeklies published in Douala; Cameroon Times and Cameroon Outlook, published weekly in Victoria in English; Cameroon Sparke and Cameroon Guardian, also weeklies published in Bamenda in English for the North-West Province; and the mainly sporting newspapers published weekly in Douala: Cameroon Sports, Football Elite, Football 7. FLEEING LAWYER'S 'POLITICAL REFUGEE' STATEMENT DERIDED

Not Supreme Court Justice

Praia VOZ DI POVO in Portuguese 5 Nov 81 p 3

[Text] Lawyer Antonio Caldeira Marques, who represented himself in Lisbon as a justice of the Supreme Court of Cape Verde, has announced in the Portuguese capital--where he claims he is "vacationing," "his intention to ask Portuguese authorities for asylum," according to the ANOP [PORTUGUESE NEWS AGENCY].

In a press conference, lawyer Marques stated that Cape Verde is a "totalitarian" country. Having become the focus of the attention of certain organs of the state Portuguese press, Caldeira Marques, who claims to be persecuted because of the country's "repressive policies" affirms that he is an activist in the field of "human rights."

A press note published in Cape Verde stated, meanwhile, that Caldeira Marques has never been a judge of the Supreme Court of Cape Verde, but was rather a counselor of the former National Council of Justice, from which he was dismissed on 12 August 1978. Before that, he was a judge in the Sotavento region. After 1978, he worked in the studies and planning department of the Ministry of Transportation, and beginning last year, until his departure, he worked at the government general secretariate.

There was surprise in Cape Verde following the statements made by Caldeira Marques, given the fact that as head of the Cape Verdian delegation to the law of the sea conference, he used to spend a significant portion of the year abroad (in the United States, Switzerland and also Portugal), thus enjoying every opportunity to establish a residence abroad wherever he pleased.

Newspaper's Comments

Praia VOZ DI POVO in Portuguese 5 Nov 81 p 3

[Text] It used to be that only political refugees could claim asylum in a country of which they were not citizens. However, since everything always changes, it seems that such a practice has gone out of fashion without our having become aware of it. Or else, it is that our jurists' "jurisdiction" has fallen on evil times.

All this is about Dr Antonio Caldeira Marques' intention to ask for political asylum from the "metropolis."

He represented himself as being a justice of the Cape Verde Supreme Court. He made himself out to be a political refugee. He had a good time in Switzerland defending "the rights of fish" before becoming the "defender of human rights." Was he being persecuted for political reasons? Is he a defender of human rights? In Cape Verde people have all the rights, because no one thought of founding an association to protect the animals. Already, in a follow-up statement, he specifically talked about the "Soviet-Cuban threat" in Cape Verde. Yes, sir, now he is more attuned with the issues of today... He is a clever fellow: he learns his lesson very quickly!

Caldeira Marques, who left Cape Verde in perfectly legal fashion, having openly disposed of his belongings (to go on "vacation"?), said before leaving to whomever wanted to listen that he was going to reopen his law practice in Lisbon. As far as we know, only those who are members of Portugal's law association can practice law in that country. And, again as far as we know, no foreigners can become members of this association. Nevertheless, this gentleman felt sure that he could furnish proof of Portuguese citizenship as soon as he would touch Lisbon.

Most probably, he kept his dual citizenship--which is forbidden by Cape Verdian law--in the tradition of other individuals for whom a passport is not a question of honor, but a lottery that can be played again and again.

Thence this bizarre case: a "political refugee" who spent most of the months since August 1977 as head of the Cape Verdian delegation to the law of the sea conference in Switzerland introduces himself as the "defender of human rights, without political ambitions," and asks for political asylum from the country whose nationality there is every indication he never gave up.

What a mishmash, gentlemen!

It is easy to understand that this is the return home of the spoiled son who made a foray into the lands of independence.

The rest is only the fireworks with which "nostalgic fathers" greet the return of the prodigal son.

Portuguese Press Attacked

Praia VOZ DI POVO in Portuguese 5 Nov 81 p 4

[Excerpts] Newsmen often see strange things in the course of their work: a piece of information is gotten hold of, some clean prose is written, but nevertheless, there is one detail that is unconfirmed, and everything goes to waste.

In such circumstances, a self-respecting newsman exercises strict self-vigilance. But if he is motivated by passion...

Now, the press uses facts, norms, a given deontology, precisely because it is made by men who seldom are not motivated by passion, so often petty!

It is only in this light that it can be understood how the ANOP [PORTUGUESE PRESS AGENCY] swallowed and published the hoax that lawyer Caldeira Marques is a justice of the Cape Verde Supreme Court, when it employs a full-time representative in Praia, from whom it could have asked for confirmation of these facts.

A certain Portuguese press had specified--we don't know why or whether it was done on orders from someone--that the label of supreme court justice that Caldeira Marques so abusively used was indeed extremely useful. Would it be worth someone's while to verify its authenticity, thus running the risk of spoiling everything? The temptation is indeed great.

One thing is certain: certain Portuguese press and political circles--including papers, and state radio and television--have remained fascinated with empire and throw truly hysterical fits whenever there is the slightest chance--however infinitesimal--to feed the myth of restoration.

Does a South African agent, a bearded man called Jonas Savimbi, appear? Right away, the Portuguese press, radio and television are quick to inform on everything that smacks of opposition to the regimes that have sprung from the movements of national liberation, if that can feed, even for a short time, the aspirations of those who, even if the slogan "Angola is ours" has vanished, hope that it will some day remain in good white hands?

Does a group of a half-dozen returnees appear in front of one of our embassies, shouting that they want to be Portuguese? The temptation is great to grab the event and present it as a pro-colonial plebiscite. One just had to see, the other day in Lisbon, the Portuguese radio and television crews maneuver the cameras so as to make believe that the demonstrators in front of the Cape Verde Embassy were more numerous than in reality.

In an "off voice," the commentator was as emotional as if he were witnessing the departure of the first caravelles from the Tagus River.

Of course, everyone sells the kind of fish one wants. But the one who sells me spoiled fish should not hope that I would buy it again from him. It is perfectly natural that, given the over-abundance of information organs in Portugal, it is necessary to manufacture news that will sell.

However, there is one question: by behaving in this manner, does the Portuguese press render a service to Portugal?

We are not demanding that the Portuguese press serve our regimes. But what we are lamenting is that the irresponsible and unrealistic actions of certain Portuguese information organs should permanently poison the relations that we have always wished to remain mutually profitable and respectful of each other.

'PANA' MEMBERSHIP AGREEMENT--Dakar, 3 Dec (AFP)--Cape Verde has signed the membership agreement of the Pan-African News Agency (PANA), whose headquarters is in Dakar. It, therefore, becomes the 15th member state of that agency. Henceforth, only one more state has to sign for the PANA agreement to have legal force. The formalities for the membership of Cape Verde were completed in Dakar by Corsino Fortes, the deputy Cape Verdian secretary of state for information who ended an official visit to Senegal on Thursday. Mr Fortes asserted that Cape Verde was ready to lend its support to PANA in order to make it a success and he stressed that the pan-African agency constitutes a weapon of defense against the big agencies. On his part, Chiekh Ousamne Diallo, director of PANA, said that the agency, which is to begin its activities in 1982 constitutes a complex and delicate undertaking and a challenge that the African states must meet. He announced that a school of journalism for the Portuguese-speaking countries would be created soon. A joint commission of the PANA and UNESCO will visit Cape Verde and Guinea-Bissau this month in connection with this, Mr Diallo said. [Text]

GOVERNMENT WANTS TO DEVELOP FARMING ACTIVITIES

AB061330 Paris AFP in French 1249 GMT 6 Dec 81

[Text] Bangui, 7 Dec (AFP)--After the start of a reorganization of public finances, a restoration of an atmosphere of confidence and a resumption of work, the CAR authorities now intend to redress the country's economy with objectivity, observers in Bangui noted.

In this field, one of the main concerns of the Military Committee for National Redress (CRMN), which has been ruling for 3 months, will be to develop farming activities. To this end, the government intends to mobilize all able bodied people to take part in the cultivation of foodcrops around the major cities and to develop cattle raising in order to ensure sufficient food at moderate prices.

The CAR authorities are also planning to introduce modern farming techniques and to develop the areas that are mapped out for export products.

The government also proposes to improve the road network throughout the country, continue the negotiations for the construction of the trans-African highway from Mombasa to Lagos and to develop regional airports.

In order to exploit rationally the mineral and forest resources, it intends to expand prospecting, strictly check the still-disorderly exploitation of these resources and organize tree-planting campaigns.

In the field of trade and industry, the CAR Government plans to encourage the establishment of small agro-industries in the various areas of the country.

CENTRAL AFRICAN REPUBLIC

OPPOSITION PARTIES COMMENT ON KOLINGBA REGIME'S PROGRAM

Dakar LE SOLEIL in French 27 Oct 81 p 17

[Report: "Political Parties Doubt a Quick Return to Multiparty System"]

[Text] Bangui. Almost 2 months after Army General Andre Kolingba's ascension to power in the Central African Republic, the political parties in that country believe that a return to a multiparty system is "far from certain" "in the short run."

The four parties which were President David Dacko opposition--the Movement for the Liberation of the Central African People (MLPC), the Independent Group for Reflection and Action (GIRA), the Republican Party for Progress and the Oubangui Patriotic Front (FPO)--also point out that the new head of state is still refusing to see them. Their activities and the Constitution remain suspended and his public statements on the "quick return to true democracy" are not being translated into facts.

They regret also the fact that General Kolingba's initial visits abroad were to Gabon and Zaire, countries where there is no multiparty system.

They also point out that at home the new head of state is still holding on to the vague promises he made starting with 1 September, when ex-president Dacko was overthrown, but that no program, economic in particular, has been made public so far.

Official circles state that the Central African political parties have proved their "inability" to pursue a policy which is "healthy, coherent and favorable" to the defense of the interests of the Central African nation. It is further claimed that so far there is no reason to question General Kolingba's statements. Ever since his access to power, he has claimed that his mission was "to enhance the economy" and "to create the necessary conditions for the practice of true democracy."

The Central African political parties have stated they are "satisfied" with the "purge" ordered by General Kolingba within the civil service--more than 1,000 officials will be pensioned off between now and next January--but openly object to one of the two criteria for this action: retirement after 27 years of service.

"In a number of cases this means blindly depriving ourselves of officials between the ages of 40 and 45, i.e., of the services of experienced people. It would have been preferable to operate only on the basis of inability, corruption and elitism," a political leader stated.

Conversely, these same parties are pleased by the disciplinary measures planned in the struggle against absenteeism. The advent to power of the military has already provoked a minor revolution in ministerial offices: generals accustomed to military life begin work at 0730 hours which forces the other employees to begin work at this early hour.

The political groups also give credit to the efforts of the military to improve Central African public life. These efforts have resulted in the detention of Nicolas Gotouas, former Minister of Public Education, two bank directors and two legal representatives, or some 30 people in all, for misappropriation of funds. An extensive investigation is currently under way in the customs service.

The political parties, which were split under the multiparty system, remain divided today in the face of the military regime. The suggestion of Ange Patasse's MLPC (36 percent of the voters) that presidential elections be held next December, is therefore unanimously rejected.

"This will provide yet another opportunity for accusing Central African politicians of a thirst for power. Even if General Kolingba were to accept that, no party would be ready within the next 2 months, unless we return to electoral fraud as under President Dacko," claims a political leader.

With the exception of Patasse, all politicians have indicated their readiness to collaborate with General Kolingba. "However," says another politician, "we would like to express our views on a specific publicly announced program."

"It is not a question," he adds, "of saying 'Yes' to a person but of agreeing on a policy. General Kolingba must also be willing to hire technicians and civilians. Too many of his ministers, all of them in the military, are notoriously incapable people."

Nevertheless, the political parties in the Central African Republic make it clear that if by the beginning of November, or 3 months after his accession to power, President Kolingba has not submitted a governmental program, this means that he intends "to remain in power for a long time." A pamphlet, as virulent toward the political parties as the military regime, is being circulated in Bangui, capital of the Central African Republic, claiming that a "new dictatorial regime" has taken over.

WITHDRAWAL OF LIBYAN TROOPS BELIEVED AIDED BY PRESSURES ON QADHDHAFI

Paris LE MONDE in French 2 Nov 81 p 18

[Article by J.-C. P.: "Libyan Forces Will Remain in Chad Until an Inter-African Force Has Been Constituted"]

[Text] "Libyan forces will remain in Chad until an inter-African force has been constituted," stated Arap Moi, interim chairman of the Organization of African Unity, following the request formulated by the Transitional Government of National Union (GUNT) for a "total withdrawal" of these forces before 31 December.

Sources close to the presidency in N'Djamena pointed out on Friday that the Council of Ministers spent 5 hours in deliberations before reaching a decision. A single minister, whose identity is unknown, refused to the very end to the insistence of President Goukouni Weddeye who favored that a request for a withdrawal be filed. These same sources specified that the decision had been made without any preliminary agreement with Tripoli and also because "the conditions for maintaining peace in Chad seem to be secured," specifically as a result of the "determining" offer for "logistic support" made by Paris.

The GUNT initiative, which was "duly noted" by Paris, although without comment, was qualified as an "important step forward" by Washington and approved by Cairo.

On Friday, recalling that contact with Tripoli had been maintained "on a permanent basis," in the past few days (our final edition of 31 October), the Quay d'Orsay dismissed the "alarmist" rumors regarding the Chadian crisis. Contrary to what some press organs have reported, there has never been a "coup d'etat" in N'Djamena; there was not even a "failed coup d'etat."

However, ever since Mitterrand called upon the OAU to organize "on an urgent basis" an inter-African force, from Cancun, French diplomacy which, meanwhile, had accepted without particular enthusiasm the need of delivering light weapons and munitions to Goukouni Weddeye within the framework of "logistic support," could hardly deny having triggered, if not orchestrated, pressures on Colonel Qadhdhafi to undertake the withdrawal of his forces stationed in Chad. What compensation is the Libyan leader being offered?

To begin with, it is a possibility, if not a guarantee, that both Egypt and above all the Sudan will cease helping Hissein Habre's armed guerillas who are engaged in guerilla warfare in the eastern part of Chad. One of the reasons for tension between Tripoli, on the one hand, and Khartoum and Cairo, on the other, would be thus eliminated. As far as Colonel Qadhdhafi is concerned, the easing of his military machinery in Chad would be equally welcome in this period of economic difficulties. Finally and above all, at a time when the cards are being redealt in the Middle East, the West will make it clear to Tripoli that the growing isolation of the Jamahiriya, or the lonely prospect of a private conversation with Moscow, do not necessarily serve its interests well.

On Paris' initiative, converging and better coordinated pressure will be applied on Colonel Qadhdhafi henceforth. President Goukouni Weddeye seems to have wanted to accelerate this movement by asking for the withdrawal of Libyan troops from his territory within 2 months.

JOINT PCT-SED COMMUNIQUE ISSUED FOLLOWING SED VISIT

Brazzaville ETUMBA in French No 615, 24 Oct 81 pp 1,3,6

[Report: "Friendship and Solidarity Between the SED and the PCT"]

[Excerpts] Responding to the invitation of the Congolese Labor Party Central Committee, a delegation of the Socialist Unity Party of Germany (SED), headed by Comrade Konrad Naumann, member of the SED Central Committee Politburo, made a study and friendship visit to the People's Republic of the Congo between 15 and 22 October 1981.

The SED delegation was granted an audience by Comrade Denis Sassou-Nguesso, chairman of the Congolese Labor Party Central Committee, president of the republic, head of state and chairman of the Council of Ministers, to whom it delivered a message of fraternal friendship from Comrade Erich Honecker, SED Central Committee general secretary and chairman of the State Council.

The delegation was also received by the following comrades members of the Congolese Labor Party Central Committee Politburo:

Camille Bongou, Central Committee member and secretary general of the Congolese Labor Party Central Committee attached to the presidency.

During their visit the SED delegation visited the areas of La Cuvette and Kouilou, where they were shown the economic and social achievements of the People's Republic of the Congo.

On the other hand, during its visit the SED delegation held political and economic discussions of interest to both parties with the delegation of the Congolese Labor Party, headed by Comrade Pierre Nze, Politburo member and head of the Foreign Relations Department and Minister of Foreign Affairs.

Also participating in the talks were the following:

On the Congolese side:

Charles Madzous, Central Committee member and permanent secretary for foreign relations;

Bouka Boniface, Central Committee member and member of the Armed Forces Permanent Commission;

Gamboumba Moukengue Jean, Central Committee member, division head, Central Control and Auditing Commission of the Party;

Jean Raymond Loumabeka, PCT [Congolese Labor Party] member, head of the Communist and Socialist Parties division; and Yandza Jeanne, member of the URFC [Revolutionary Union of Congolese Women] Standing Bureau.

On the German side:

Helmut Hackenberg, second secretary of the Leipzig SED federation;

Horst Kohl, ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary of the GDR in the People's Republic of the Congo;

Elisabeth Quart, member of the SED Central Committee Foreign Relations Department.

The talks were held in an atmosphere of fraternal friendship and revolutionary frankness. The two parties emphasized their bilateral cooperation and studied ways and means for its further development in order to concretize the desire expressed by the heads of the two parties, Comrades Erich Honecker and Denis Sassou-Nguesso, to consolidate relations for the greatest possible good of their respective peoples.

The SED delegation was acquainted with the intensive efforts of the Congolese Labor Party since its third extraordinary congress on the application of the new development strategy, the purpose of which is to enable the Congo to eliminate its dependence on and domination by foreigners.

The Congolese Labor Party delegation was told of the political and economic achievements of the GDR aimed at the building of an advanced socialist society in accordance with the decisions of the 10th SED Congress, and of SED international activities in favor of peace and detente.

After a profound examination of relations between the two parties, both delegations noted with satisfaction the quality of relations existing between the SED and the PCT and resolved to strengthen them further with a view to consolidating the friendship and militant solidarity which exists between the peoples of the GDR and the People's Republic of the Congo.

Furthermore, both delegations agreed on the need to strengthen the ties of friendship, solidarity and cooperation between the two parties, their mass organizations, states and governments.

In the area of international problems, those delegations expressed their concern regarding the international situation, which has been aggravated by imperialist maneuvers which threaten the freedom of the peoples and their right to dignity and progress, and therefore, world peace and security.

They spoke out in favor of giving firm support to all actions undertaken by progressive forces throughout the world in favor of peace, disarmament and detente.

The two parties reaffirmed their active solidarity in the face of anticommunism and subversive imperialist activities aimed at destabilizing progressive regimes in Africa and throughout the world.

In the case of Namibia, both parties condemn the illegal occupation of this territory by and dilatory maneuverings of South Africa and its imperialist allies, aimed at obstructing the implementation of United Nations Resolution 435 on Namibia, and restate their firm support of SWAPO, the only legitimate and authentic representative of the Namibian people.

The two parties strictly condemn the aggression of South African racists committed against the peoples of the People's Republic of Angola.

After examining the situation in the Middle East, the parties reasserted their firm condemnation of the Camp David Accords and reassured the Palestine Liberation Organization of their total support of the right of the Palestinian people to the establishment of their independent and sovereign state.

Having examined the situation in Latin America, both parties welcomed the victory of the people of Nicaragua headed by the Sandinista Front.

As to the situation in Southeast Asia, both parties expressed their satisfaction at the continuing success of the peoples of Vietnam, Kampuchea and Laos in their struggle against imperialist interference, characterized by the growing number of countries which are recognizing the legitimacy of their revolutionary systems.

Both parties reasserted their firm active solidarity with the struggle waged by the Afghan people against the interference of imperialism and its allies and for safeguarding its national sovereignty and building a progressive society.

Following their discussion of development problems, both delegations emphasized the need to reorganize the global economy on a just and democratic basis and agreed on the need to spare no effort in promoting the establishment of a new international economic order.

The two delegations expressed their complete satisfaction with the quality of their talks which were imbued with friendship, frankness and reciprocal understanding and, above all, revolutionary warmth.

Issued in Brazzaville on 22 October 1981.

MEBIANE DISCUSSES RESPONSIBILITY OF GABONESE

AB030750 Libreville Domestic Service in French 1830 GMT 2 Dec 81

[Excerpt] Last night, Prime Minister Leon Mebiane delivered a nationwide speech to make each of us understand where the interest of the country lies:

[Begin recording] Dear countrymen, about (?10) days ago the president of the republic presided over a cabinet meeting which was enlarged to include the chairmen of the constituted bodies and members of the Political Bureau of the Gabonese Democratic Party. You still remember the decisions made at the meeting on the major political, economic and social trends of the country. In this regard, I am planning to brief you on this matter after the approval of the 1982 finance bill. Today, the head of state, who is anxious to speed up the implementation of these resolutions, presided over a cabinet meeting during which specific objectives were set for the government to pursue.

While the head of state, my government and I were thus working hard in the supreme interest of the nation, some individuals--former convicts--were writing leaflets and spreading false rumors aimed obviously at breaking down public order. In this regard, these individuals used our children in an attempt to implement their sordid intentions. This morning at the Libreville Truck Park they tried to prevent the students from being driven to their schools. You can easily figure out the consequences of such an act.

Dear countrymen, President Bongo has been ruling this country for 14 years in the interest of all. For 14 years, the development of this country has continued: children are in schools, the sick are being attended to, roads and railroads are being constructed and job opportunities are being created. We all live in peace and tranquillity. Of course, there is still a long way to go and the government is aware of this.

Who then are these individuals who now want to jeopardize all the achievements of our political stability by disrupting public order? They are: Jules Mba, Simon Oyoula Mba, Jean-Marie Obam; Jean-Baptiste Obiang Etougou; Thomas Didier Nze; Guy Obama Nze; Guy Obama Nze and Jerome Mvinbi. What are they? Former convicts who had benefitted from President Bongos' pardon. They have since proved they were unworthy of the tasks entrusted on them. To those people and others to be discovered within the framework of the inquiry which has been ordered, I want to say that my government will assume all of its responsibility.

Parents as we are, we will not stand for the manipulation of our children by a few irresponsible persons. We Gabonese people will not allow ourselves to be deceived by those irresponsible individuals. We Gabonese people will not allow ourselves to be led into mistakes by them, because I know the Gabonese people wish their country to continue its progress in national unity and peace. Gabon is not the exclusive property of a group, an ethnic group, or a province. It is for everyone, for all those who are mobilized behind President Bongo, his government and the party to work toward the development of our country and the well-being of its people.

Dear countrymen, I know that you have understood me and I thank you. [end recording]

TONGUE-IN-CHEEK COMMENTS ON CREATION OF NEW PARTIES

Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 14 Nov 81 p 3

[Article by Kofi Akumanyi]

[Text] Accra, Wednesday--A new political party to be known as the Dynamic Party is to be formed soon. The party with the motto "Honesty and hard work--surest way to success and "Asantrofie" as its symbol, proposes to bring the white man back to Ghana.

I have not as yet talked to the Accra businessman who in a statement to the press published in a local daily early that week announced his intention to form this new party but I can very well imagine what could have happened if he had called the usual press conference with the media in full attendance. The proceedings could have gone something like this:

"Mr Chairman! Mr. Chairman!..."

"Yes, the lady at the back."

"How different is your party from the existing parties?"

"As a matter of fact there is not much difference in its composition for it will be composed of Ghanaians and will aim at making Ghana a better place for all. What actually bothers me is the preconceived idea that the two parties originating from Dr Nkrumah and Prof. Busia are the only parties which can rule Ghana. I simply want to debunk that silly notion. "Everybody can form and lead a party in this country."

"Mr Chairman, as you may be aware getting a new party together is not like organising a cocktail party. What then is the basis of your optimism that your new party can do better than the ruling party?"

"You see, the PNP government claims it is doing its best under the circumstances. The President has said that he is a sprinter and when he gets going we can't keep up with him. So far its been a crawl. Salaries can't buy much because of the galloping inflation. The merger isn't working. My party will wipe the gloom and definitely put the smile back on your faces."

"Mr Chairman, Mr Chairman!..."

"That gentleman at the back in dark glasses."

"What exactly would be your programme of action when your party comes to power?"

"Good question. I was afraid nobody would ask. First on the list of my economic package is Devaluation of the currency according to I.M.F. and World Bank recommendations, by 70%. I can already feel the deafening applause around the country for such a bold step."

"Mr Chairman, with all due respect, if Acheampong couldn't do it and Limann is still undecided about it, how come you think you can do it?

"I expected this reaction. Like the typical Ghanaian you believe more in problems than solutions. I want to assure you that I hold the answers to our economic problems in my hand as I stand here at the moment. We have to succeed."

"And what is the answer?"

"The return of the White man to take over the administration of the country."

"You must be joking." Someone shouts from the back.

"I couldn't be more serious. The Caucasian race can handle this mess better. I have been in touch..."

Mr Chairman! Mr Chairman!! Mr... (big uproar).

"Ladies and gentlemen. There is no need to get excited... Yes, the man in blue tie."

"I wonder whether you've weighed the full implication of what you've said. I mean, bringing back the Whites. Look at the condition of Blacks and the horrible treatment meted out to them by whites in countries still under colonial rule..., Namibia, Azania... the activities of the multi-national companies in developing countries..."

"I want to disabuse your mind of this impression people have that the whiteman is bad. Look at Zimbabwe. With Ian Smith's people around, that country has enough to eat and currently exports thousands of tons of surplus maize. If the white man is deeply involved here all malpractices in import-export business to name a few would be stopped"

"The important thing to note is that nobody is starving in these countries. economies are booming. That's more than you can say for a country like ours with 25 years experience in Military/Civilian rule."

"Mr Chairman, when the whites come will they hold only advisory positions in your government?

"They will be in full control of the vital areas of the economy and national security because, as the saying goes, things done in halves are never done right."

"Mr Chairman!, Mr Chairman!..."

"Yes, that lady in the red dress."

"Mr Chairman when do you hope to launch the Dynamic Party and which part of the country do you hope to draw your support from?"

"On March 6, 1982 to coincide with the Silver Jubilee of Ghana's Independence when the whiteman handed over power to us. My main support will come from the older generation who are nostalgic over the good old days when the Europeans were here."

"And what is the significance of your symbol--"Asantrofie?"

"I am glad you've asked this question. It simply means that the Whiteman is like the Asantrofie bird which, in the Akan proverb loosely translated means, if you catch it you have bad luck but if you let it go your problems would never end!"

DETAILS PROVIDED ON LOAN AGREEMENT WITH CANADA

Accra DAILY GRAPHIC in English 18 Nov 81 p 8

[Article by Malek Eshun]

[Text]

THE Canadian Government is to grant Ghana loans totalling ₵23.9 million (10.4 million Canadian dollars) to expand projects being undertaken by the Volta River Authority (VRA) and the Ghana Water and Sewerage Corporation (GWSC).

Two separate agreements and an exchange of letters for the loans were effected at the Ministry of Finance and Economic Planning yesterday.

The Minister of Finance and Economic Planning, Professor George Benneh, signed on behalf of the Ghana Government while the Canadian High Commissioner to Ghana, Mr Marc Faguy, signed on behalf of his government.

The first agreement covers general development co-operation between the two countries.

The second makes available to the Ghana Volta River Authority (VRA) a loan of ₵6.9 million ($3 million — Canadian) to establish a training programme for its staff in order to produce highly qualified personnel to man existing and future hydro-power installations in Ghana. The loan which is interest free is repayable over 50 years with a ten-year grace period.

The Ghana Water and Sewerage Corporation also gets ₵17 million ($7.4 million — Canadian) under the same terms to improve and extend its services to the people in the Upper Region.

In a speech at the signing ceremony Professor Benneh disclosed that a committee — "Ghana Aid Planners" had been set up to monitor the effective and efficient utilization of all foreign aid to the country.

He said the government attached great importance to hydro-power development since "it is a potential source of saving the country from the disastrous effects of increasing oil prices."

The Minister appealed to the Canadian Government to consider instituting a technical assistance programme to Ghana under which VRA personnel trained locally could be sent on short-term practical attachment to Canada with the view to exposing them to pertinent skills and techniques.

In reply the Canadian High Commissioner said he was happy that the fruitful co-operation between his country and Ghana had lasted for more than 20 years.

He expressed the hope that the investment being made in the Upper Region would make a major impact on the lives of the people.

Present at the signing ceremony were the Chief Executive of the Volta River Authority (VRA), Mr I. Casely-Hayford and Mr S. R. Hagan, managing director of Ghana Water and Sewerage Corporation.

IVORY COAST-GHANA DIVERGING ECONOMIC SYSTEMS COMPARED

Accra THE LEGON OBSERVER in English Vol XIII No 10, 18 Sep 81 pp 218-220

[Article by Danny B. Safo]

[Text]

On April 6, 1957, one month after Ghana won her political independence from Great Britain, the Prime Minister, Kwame Nkrumah, dined as a guest of the Minister of the French Republic of the Ivory Coast, Felix Houphouet - Boigny. At that dinner, on the initiative of the host, a wager was struck between the two men. The wager may be restated here:

> You are witnessing the start of two experiments. A wager has been made between two territories, one having chosen independence, the other preferring the difficult road to the construction, with the metropole France, of a community of men equal in rights and duties.....let each of us undertake his experiment, in absolute respect of the experiment of his neighbour, and in ten years we shall compare the results.

At the commencement of the wager Nkrumah was leaning towards socialism and Houphouet towards capitalism. Both men remained faithful to these chosen paths. How well then did each of their two nations, the socialist -oriented Ghana and the captalist - oriented Ivory Coast, achieve the principal aim of all less developed countries, that is, the upliftment of their societies in the socio-economic field? Indeed how well is each of the two nations performing on the eve of Ghana's silver jubilee of her political independence?

Beginning of Wager

At the commencement of the wager, geography, location, labour composition, and production capacities were similar. Ghana had a slight edge in terms of population and infrastructure. The only profound difference sprang mainly from the French and British influence on the Ivory Coast and Ghana respectively. The British pursued in Ghana a policy of indirect rule. This policy had seen the birth of some development; for example the establishment of schools, roads, and a port. On the other hand the French pursued a policy of direct rule and trixd to assimilate the African elite into the French culture. After the attainment of political independence Nkrumah tried to steer Ghana onto what Eliot J. Berg terms the 'structural transformation' path. Houphouet-Boigny, on the other hand, pursued a policy of "gradualism". Ghana consequently concentrated on industrial development rather than agriculture. In agriculture, the country put much emphasis on capital-intensive, large scale schemes (such as state farm) aimed at fundamentally changing the technology and organization of peasant production. Much attention was also paid to import-substitution as a way of eliminating Ghana's dependence on the outside world. Price controls and other measures to abridge the market mechanism were also introduced in Ghana.

Ivory Coast's gradualist approach, in contrast, emphasised growth based on the use of external loans, promotion of the export sector, and encouragement of peasant agriculture. The individual's self-interest and the market forces were given much freedom to operate in the economy.

Approaches Compared

Which was the more effective approach? In an attempt to answer this question. Jean M. Due holds the views that while the Ghanaian policy failed to generate high Gross National Product per capita it might have produced development without growth. She uses indicators such as education, health care, employment, water supplies, communication, transportation, and housing to measure development in Ghana. To her, the Ivory Coast, in contrast, was an example of growth without development. Up to 1961, the Nkrumah government failed to introduce an overall plan for the economy. The sterling reserves held by the Ghana Cocoa Marketing Board and the favourable position of cocoa on the world market might have given Ghanaians a false sense of security. In the works of Killick and Szereszewski"..... The growth patterns of the 1950's were to too easy, too faultless...it could not last."

In 1962, however, Nkrumah's party introduced its Programme of Work and Happiness. In relation to planning, the political document stipulated that the country's economic planners should decide how resources were to be mobilized and how they should be used. In 1963 the Seven Year Development Plan (7YP) was launched. The plan envisaged major increases in the level of investment away from infrastructure and other social overheads in favour of directly productive sectors, and an expanded output of trained manpower. The 7YP was, on the whole a dismal failure. Though the Plan provided detailed fiscal projections, subsequent annual budgets ignored the Plan almost completely. For instance in the budget speech of 1963/64 the Minister of Finance made only a passing reference to the 7YP. Again in direct opposition to the Plan he proposed an increase in government consumption relative to capital expenditure. The Plan also exerted very little impact on the balance of payments situation. For instance, the Plan stipulated that foreign reserves should not be significantly reduced below the level pertaining at the end of 1963. However, there was a substantial reduction in international liquidity during 1964 and 1965.

Individual Ministers refused to submit to the discipline of the Plan. The drastic fall of cocoa prices on the world market was also a blow to successful implementation of the 7YP. It is thus perhaps not surprising that when traditional indicators of economic growth are considered a dismal picture emerges. GNP per capita in constant prices dropped ₵3.00 in the period 1960-66. At the same time, the consumer price index rose 40% above 1960 prices level by 1965. Again Government expenditure rose 17% per annum in the 1960-65. The internal debts which stood at ₵78 million in 1960 rose to ₵408 million by 1965, and external debt increased from $16.3 million in 1961 to $395 million in 1966. Growth rates for the period 1963 — 65 were 2.7%, 4.5% and 0% respectively. The 7YP target had been 7.3% growth per annum.

There was also very little diversification in agriculture. Cocoa continued to contribute over 60% of the value of the exports of domestic produce in the period 1961-65. Only cocoa butter, timber and manganese exports showed significant increases. Also in the period there was only a 7% increase in manufacturing. However, there was great improvement in social services. The Ghana Government was at least reaching out to its people.

The Ivory Coast too had a development strategy. This was the Ten-Year Development Plan 1960-69 (10YP). The major objectives of the 10YP was in the words of Miracle: "to achieve vertical and horizontal diversification of production through: (1) initiating or expanding industrial enterprises using locally available resources (backward linkages) and (2) diversifying agricultural exports by addition of new exports and expansion of existing mineral exports." In the case of the Ivory Coast what do the traditional indicators show? From 1958 to 1965 GDP increased 15% per annum, government revenue grew faster than GDP and saving as a proportion of total revenue grew from 28% to 34$ between 1960 and 1965. Growth of the export sector was also very rapid. Between 1958 and 1968 value--added in manufacturing expanded at 20% per annum. A significant share of total investment was export oriented. Emphasis on the export sector sprang from the Ivorian relaization that import substitution led to an even more acute form of reliance on the outside. To the Ivorians a completely self-reliant growth was not feasible for small nations at the beginning of modernization. In the words of Berg, again, the Ivory Coast exploited her dependence on other nations by insisting on: "preferences in Europe, aid flows, technical assistance on relatively good terms, private investment and the export market that often accompanies it."

Who Won?

Did the Ivory Coast grow without developing? If one were to use Reginald Green's criterion of dependence, which is percentage GDP involved in external trade or concentration of markets for exports and sources of imports, the Ivory Coast fell far behind Ghana. If education is regarded as a key factor, it could be said that the Houphouet government did not encourage development. The government made an attempt at keeping Ivorian students in the country by cutting down on scholarships abroad and establishing a University in Abidjan. However, not enough students were educated to replace foreign personnel in specialized jobs, and those who had adequate training were not hired. To quote Rake "The policy in the past has been to quite unashamedly employ foreigners as advisors and in all jobs which need technical skill or expertise. Even now there is no intention of replacing a whiteman until an African can do the job equally well." Indeed the number of foreigners in the Ivory Coast since independence has increased several times over.

Who won the wager? Houphouet let his country to one of the highest growth rates in the world. Nkrumah's Ghana, on the other hand, witnessed a massive waste of resources, a continual balance of payments crisis, and by 1965 economic paralysis due to scarcities of imported inputs and a declining per capita income. Nkrumah's problems emanated from his efforts at meeting the needs of his people at once--he was unrealistic. By the end of the wager, Houphouet was in a position to meet the needs of his people. Indeed Houphouet is not the vociferous champion of the downtrodden humanity that Nkrumah was But, in 1981, the Ivory Coast is in a strong position to meet the needs of the people. In the same year Ghana can hardly meet those needs. Ghana is faced with deteriorating education facilities without teachers, deteriorating hospitals without doctors, drugs and equipment, vehicles without spares, factories without raw materials, and roads with yawning potholes. Who then won the wager?

IMPORTANCE OF GOOD ORGANIZATION WITHIN APP STRESSED

Accra THE LEGON OBSERVER in English Vol XIII No 12, 13 Nov 81 pp 270-271

[Article by K. K. Oduro]

[Text] On 26th September 1981, an electoral college of the merged parties met in the Great Hall of the University of Ghana to elect their executive. Before that date some well-wishers, had counselled the leaders of the new party to postpone the electitn of a party leader and concentrate first on the organisation and establishment of the party. Various reasons were given for the counsel but perhaps the most convincing was the fear expressed that the leaderhip issue was so volatile that it needed a viable party to resolve it.

This and other arguments, evidently failed to persuade the leaders against the action they had previously decided upon. In the end, when the delegates, got down to the day's business it wasn't the leadership question which threatened to destroy their common objective, but the relatively less important post of the deputy leader. That was also resolved in a seemingly amicable manner although one has to confess that not everyone present seemed completely happy with the outcome. Thereafter, the Chairman and two deputies, the General Secretary and his assistant as well as the Treasurer of the party were all elected without much fuss. Thus was born the party whose members believe it to hold the answer to the present tribulations of poor mother Ghana, but whose enemies no doubt assert that it is deemed to go the way of all 'anti-CPP' parties - defeat at the next general elections followed by eventual disintegration.

But how did this party come to be born? What was the need ofr it? Perphaps the most objective answer to such questions is that no party has been born-certainly not a new party. If parties are formed in the hearts of men, on their upbringing, their beliefs, their way of life and their philosophies, then clearly this party has always been with us and will probably continue to be with us for ever.
